A SCHOOL-DAY.

"Now, John," the district teacher says,
With frown that scarce can hide
The dimpling smiles around her mouth,
Where'er he did abide,
"What have you done to Mary Ann,
That she is crying so?
Don't say 'twas 'nothing'—don't, I say,
For, John, that can't be so;

"For Mary Ann would never cry
At anything, I am sure;
And [illegible] wounded justice, John,
You know is the only cure
Is punishment. So, come, stand up;
True digression must abide
The pain attendant on the scheme
That makes it justified."

So John steps forth, with sun-burnt face,
And hair all in a tumble,
His laughing eyes a contrast to
The [illegible]
Mary, you must tell me all—
That John will not,
She's been unkind or rude,
Strip him on the spot.

[illegible] we were playin' [illegible]—pris'ner's b—
[illegible]
And he [illegible]—such a t—base,
[illegible] w—wasn't l—lookin', m—
[illegible]
He—he [illegible] kissed me—if you please!"
Upon the teacher's face the smiles
Have triumphed o'er the frown,
A plan assails the sight runs through her mind,
The stock comes harmless down.

But outrage [illegible] be avenged!
Begone, ye smiles, begone!
Away, ye little dreams of love,
[illegible], ye frowns, come on!
I kinda'll have to whip you, John,
So [illegible] breaks the rules;
No boys [illegible] naughty one,
Who'll kiss a girl—at school."

Again the teacher's rod is raised,
As [illegible] she stands—
A [illegible] were put on sin.
Punished by such hands?
As [illegible] explores the rose
Where [illegible] treads,
So [illegible] Mary's rose-bud lips—
[illegible] would not dissemble.

[illegible] whip him very hard"—
[illegible] ps in its fall—
[illegible] t to do it, but—
[illegible] t at all"
[illegible] you cry, then, Mary Ann?"—
[illegible] noise makes a pause.
[illegible] on the listening air,
[illegible] comes—"Because!"

FIELD, FORT AND FLEET.

THE [illegible]SSION OF FIELD ARTILLERY.

Some Striking Examples of "Grape and Canister."

"Bring up the guns!"

Let the order be heard by a regiment of infantry crowding to the rear in a panic and it will halt the men in their tracks and make fighters of them again. There is something in the companionship of a field battery that makes a foot soldier braver than when his regiment fights alone. The guns may be wasting ammunition as they roar and crash, but it seems to the regiments on flank or in rear that every discharge is driving great gaps through the enemy's lines. So long as the battery remains the supports will remain. Even when the order is given to double-shot the guns and the infantry can see that half the horses have been shot down he still carries the [illegible] that grape and canister will win victory. The loss of horses, wagons and small arms is lightly mentioned in [illegible] and the losers feel no [illegible] let a brigade lose a [illegible] one of its batteries, [illegible] the shame. It [illegible] flag presented to [illegible] hatched from home.

[illegible]CKSVILLE.

[illegible] in his change of [illegible] at Mechanicsville, [illegible]Ellison's mill. For [illegible] in front the ground [illegible] it being a plowed [illegible] feet in front of the [illegible] the mill-race, which [illegible]ular banks and con[illegible] water. Thirty feet [illegible] the Federals had [illegible] trails, tree-tops, limbs [illegible]es. Then came more [illegible]oces in line, and be[illegible]lopes were infantry [illegible] deep.

[illegible], of D. H. Hill's com[illegible] alone to assault this [illegible] it as a flank move[illegible] Federal left. They [illegible]ved out into the open [illegible] artillery had a full[illegible] Grape, canister and [illegible] were hurled at them [illegible], and in five minutes [illegible]s which had left cover [illegible] were little better than [illegible], instead of retreating [illegible] men dropped to the [illegible]gun a sharp musketry [illegible] answered by volleys [illegible] mill-race, which liter[illegible] ground.

[illegible] until the assault became [illegible] then the order was given [illegible]der's brigade numbered [illegible]men, and yet in twenty[illegible] loss was nearly one-sixth [illegible]. It was an exception to find [illegible] not show bullet holes [illegible]othing, and some of [illegible] hit thrice and four t[illegible]ded the dead said [illegible] position, but [illegible]t carry it to turn the Federal [illegible]is second brigade had less than [illegible] thousand four hundred men, and [illegible]ted with Pender, the total strength [illegible]s not over five thousand. Four [illegible] that number could not have made [illegible]mpression upon that position.

When Pender had rallied his men, the two brigades advanced in column of assault, breaking over with a cheer and on the double quick. The Federal guns were worked with terrible energy, but under cover of the smoke, and by crawling upon hands and knees, the Confederates reached the mill-race. Indeed, several hundred of them crossed it. Then, for [illegible] minutes, there was a terrific struggle. So fierce was the Federal infantry fire over and through the abattis that it was gradually whittled away. Limbs as large as a man's arm were barked, [illegible]ipped and splintered as if lightning had played over them, and the surface of the mill-race was covered with splinters, twigs and leaves.

Pender and Ripley could not advance beyond the [illegible] in force. They could not long maintain their lines where they were. The fire from the Federals searched every foot of ground, and every minute their lines were melting away. When the order was given to fall back, the artillery raked them again as they crossed the open ground, and when the men finally reached cover, the loss of each regiment had become amazing. For instance the Forty-fourth Georgia, which numbered only about 700 men, lost 338 officers and men. Every field officer was killed, and of the ten captains and twenty lieutenants, only twelve remained. It was the same with the Third North Carolina and other regiments.

AT FRAZIER'S FARM.

At Frazier's farm, during this same eventful week, Randall's battery of six pieces was on McClellan's right, and supported by the Fourth Pennsylvania. The front was an old field, devoid of shelter, and the battery was playing into the woods half a mile beyond. This battery so annoyed the Confederates that a brigade was ordered to charge it. The Eleventh Alabama had the lead, and was to be closely supported by the other three regiments. Through some blunder the Alabamians, numbering about seven hundred and fifty, were permitted to advance alone.

They were seen as soon as they broke cover, and more than one hundred of them were killed by the artillery as they advanced across the field. The men were thrown into disorder one moment to be rallied the next, and, finally, with muskets at a trail and caps swinging in the air, they made a rush straight upon the guns. As they came near the Pennsylvanians rose up and delivered two or three volleys right into them. These were returned, and then the final rush was made. In a minute a wild mob was swirling 'round and 'round the guns—bayonets drinking blood—clubbed muskets felling men—the wounded staggering up to clutch an enemy and pull him down.

The guns were won. The Fourth was pushed slowly back, but as the cheers of the Alabamians drowned the noise of the battle to the right and left, the Seventh Pennsylvania came to the support of the Fourth. The fight which now took place was witnessed by at least two generals and half a dozen colonels, outside of the hundreds in the ranks. It was two regiments to one, but the Alabamians had won the guns and were determined to hold them. Not a single company formed in line—not an officer had a command. Two thousand mad and infuriated men rushed at each other with murder in their hearts. No one asked for quarter—no one gave it.

At the end of twenty minutes the Pennsylvanians gave way, not overpowered by numbers but pressed back by such dare devil fighting as nobody had ever witnessed before. The guns had been taken, but there were no horses to draw them away. The captors were making arrangements to draw them away when there was a rally on the part of the Federals. The smallness of the Confederate force suddenly became plain as the smoke lifted, and before a gun could be moved hot fire was opened from a whole brigade, followed by a charge. The Alabamians were picked up and hurled back in a broken mass, and the last of them had not reached the woods before the guns were again playing upon them. The loss of the Confederate regiment was over 150 men, 100 of whom, including eight company commanders, died around the battery.

THE BATTLE AT KENESAW.

The day after the repulse of the Fifteenth Corps at Kenesaw Mountain the Fortieth and Fifty-seventh Indiana, Ninety-seventh and Twenty-sixth Ohio, Twenty-[illegible]y, and One-hundredth [illegible]ents, each numbering [illegible] were selected to [illegible] 300 yards in [illegible] were formed in [illegible] and while [illegible] width of two [illegible] hit thirty and four t[illegible] killed. [illegible] dead said [illegible] hoped for. It was a forlorn hope indeed. Every man must have realized that there would be a terrible loss of life even before the salient was reached, but each one seemed to nerve himself for what was to come. During the twenty minutes' interval between forming and the order to advance there was almost dead silence in the ranks. The men leaned upon their muskets and peered through the forest in their front which hid the Confederate position, and the supports on the flanks moved up and into position as if fearing that their footsteps would disturb the dead of the day before.

It was not positively known to the Federals that the salient was defended by cannon. The hope that it was not gave the men more spirit, as the lay of the ground—forest, thicket and ridge—furnished fair shelter from musketry fire.

Soon after 8 o'clock a single low spoken order brought every man to a front face. The moment had come. As the column had formed under cover it was hoped to take the defenders of the salient by surprise. The lines were dressed, and in a moment more were moving through the woods. From the valleys at the base of the Kennesaw, Lost or Pine Mountains to their crests there is scarcely a level spot. The sides are covered with forests and thicket, and the ground is almost a succession of rocky terraces. Over this difficult ground the great blue wedge forced its way at a rapid pace, but no cheer was heard—no shouts were given.

"Crack! crack! crack!"

It is the alarm from the Confederate skirmishers, who have crept down almost to the base of the mountain. They are posted behind great rocks and hidden behind ledges. They cannot retreat; they must surrender or fight it out. They choose the latter course. Nine out of every ten hold their positions until the point of the blue wedge reaches them and brings a savage death with it.

All along the sides of the grim mountain the skirmishers bar the way, seeking to detain the wedge and alarm the defenders of the salient. Here and there a Federal throws up his hands and falls back, but the column makes no halt. Up, up, up, and now an officer in front waves his sword as the slopes of the parapet come into sight. Here the cover suddenly ends. From the bushes to the salient, a distance of 200 feet, the ground has been swept bare of tree and bush, and rocks have been rolled aside.

At the foot of the parapet is a palisade—outside of that an abattis. Behind the works are a thousand muskets—a thousand Confederates with fingers on triggers. At regular intervals along this line—250 feet front—are six field pieces, each one loaded with grape and canister. The men within are waiting. Not an order is given nor a head appears in sight until the first line of blue is out of cover.

Now, as if one finger had pressed the thousand triggers, a great sheet of flame leaps forth and scorches and blisters and shrivels the advance. The second line crowds up over the dead and dying, the third and fourth cheer as they come. Now, with a crash as if a volcano was breaking through the crest of the mountain, the six guns belch their contents into that mass of men sixty deep.

The effect was horrible. What were men a moment ago are now bloody shreds blown against the rocks and scattered far over the ground. Some of the gory fragments fall upon the lines yet half-way up the slope.

The advance halts in confusion—the rear lines crowd up. There is another bloody feast ready as soon as the cannon can be charged. Then comes the order to break lines and divide to the right and left to get out of range of the artillery. The men rush forward to the abattis—some lie flat down—others take cover behind rocks.

For fifteen minutes heroic carnage holds them before the salient. The Confederates have them at their mercy. Men take deliberate aim and send a bullet through the heads of the living targets. When the burial party comes to do its work it will find that seven out of every ten Federals lying before that abattis has been killed stone dead by a single bullet.

The fire of musketry might have checked the assault, but aided by artillery the check became a butchery. Grape and canister searched out spots secure from bullets, and men in the very rear ranks, who did not even catch sight of the abattis were struck down by the iron missiles. No assault could have brought out more nerve and heroism, but it was the wave dashing against a rocky cliff.

When the men had fallen back to their original positions the roll of dead and wounded was a shock to those who had escaped. No one had blundered. Johnston's lines were there, and they must be carried by assault. Sherman was looking for a weak spot to drive a wedge into. That salient was one of the strongest points on the Confederate line.

LOSING A PRISONER.

HOW THE GUARD ESCAPED CENSURE.

A Little Incident of the Late Unpleasantness.

Thomas B. Love, of Hill County, Tex., was a Confederate Soldier under Brig.-Gen. Lyons, and while the command was on the march in Western Kentucky, in the winter of 1865, a Federal, who turned out to be a notorious spy and bushwhacker, was captured. After the command went into camp for the night the prisoner was sentenced to die next morning. Love came on guard at 8 o'clock, and the rest of the story is given in his own words:

By this time all were sound asleep, as the men were thoroughly worn out. The prisoner and I sat on opposite sides of the fire. An hour passed and not a word was spoken between us. He seemed all the while thinking of the morrow, knowing full well that if he ever saw the sun rise a prisoner it would be his last day on earth. I was only 17 years old and a little reckless, but strict to obey orders.

I had no pity for him, and perhaps he realized this and was silent. The prisoner sat beside a post or stump, sometimes leaning against it, and the distance between us was not over eight feet.

About 9 o'clock a comrade, who had been out foraging, returned and emptied a bag of apples just behind me. I turned partly around to pick up one and as I turned back I did not look directly at the prisoner, for I was certain he was all right, I having heard no sound to arouse my suspicions to the contrary. As my side was to him when I picked up the apples, he must have stolen away as noiselessly as a shadow, as soon as he caught my eyes off of him. I can now imagine that he went on a 2:40 gait. I went on eating my apples, certain that the post he was sitting by was the prisoner himself and all right.

I suppose fifteen minutes had passed whilst eating apples. About this time our captain had occasion to get up. He noticed that the prisoner was not there and asked me where he was. I almost jumped out of my boots—mute with astonishment—when I realized what had happened, and my tongue almost became paralyzed. The captain motioned me to be still. I finally asked him what on earth I would do, knowing full well what a stern general we had when duty called for it, notwithstanding he carried a great big heart and none of us but would have died for him in a moment. The captain was satisfied that I had not purposely let the prisoner escape, so he told me to take out a pair of my pistols and go up a creek that run through the lot and away from the house, and fire as fast as I could, yelling halt! halt! halt! You may believe I obeyed orders promptly that time. The prisoner had been gone, I suppose, at least twenty minutes. The firing raised Old Harry; all were up and in arms in an instant, thinking the Federals were in camp. The general came out half dressed, and when I came back he asked me if I thought I hit him. I told him I was almost sure I had filled him with pistol shots, and while he looked a bit doubtful I escaped censure.

Trimming.

Five men were kept busy all day in Bridgeport, Conn., trimming the feet of two elephants. The operation is performed once on the road, once in the fall, and again in the spring. The sole of an elephant's foot is covered with a thick horny substance, which, as it grows thicker, tends to contract and crack, often laming the animal. At the time of trimming, the elephant stands on three legs and places the foot to be operated upon across a large tub. Two men hold the leg down, and one stands at the animal's head to prevent him from turning. Then with a two-foot drawing knife one man shaves off great pieces of bone from the sole of the foot. The elephant held the foot high of his own accord, seeming to understand what the men were doing, and after the operation he flourished his trunk, trumpeted, and expressed almost in words his sincere thanks.

ASKING FOR IT.

Young man, when you see anything you want ask for it like a man. If you want to borrow five dollars of a man, or if you only want to marry his daughter, don't slide up to him and hang on to your hat and talk politics and religion and weather, and tell old stale jokes whereof you can't remember the point, until you worry the old man into a nervous irritation. Go to him with a full head of steam on and your bow ports open, like an ironclad pulling for a shore battery. Shoot and pay and shake your head if you feel like it, no matter if it does make him somersault. Better tackle that bore him. Go into his heart or pocket-book, or both, it amounts to the same thing, like a bumble bee with a vest in his forehead charging [illegible] and [illegible] them open and [illegible] and the [illegible]

The Work of Cavalrymen.

Colonel A. G. Brackett, Third Cavalry, read a paper before the Military Service Institute on "Our Cavalry: Its Duties, Hardships and Necessities at Our Frontier Posts." "This arm of the service," he said, "had grown space of late years, and though it is very costly, may be safely said to have paid for itself over and over again in the safety it has furnished to the frontier settlers and the immense benefit it has been to the nation in opening the highways and by-ways of the interior of the North American continent. The duties are somewhat changed of late, in that the trooper is called upon to shield the red men from the cupidity of the border settlers, instead of crowding him, as formerly, to the wall; and it is, after all, only a question of time when the wave of civilization will swell over the boundary lines and occupy the lands which the red men now call their own. As a general thing our soldiers wear their fatigue uniform and work at almost anything except soldiering. They build houses, make roads, cut wood, burn brush, clear upland, and, in fact, do pretty much everything except attend to the duties they are supposed to have enlisted to perform. The trooper often steals food for his horse, and in many cases shares his scant ration of bread with him.

"There are very few cavalry men who have served any considerable length of time on the frontier who have not been turned out by an alarm of Indians. Usually some farmer comes riding in on horseback in his shirt sleeves, laboring under the greatest excitement, hallooing 'Indians! Indians!' and, after he has become sufficiently cooled down to tell his story, unfolds a sickening tale of the manner in which some of his relatives have been butchered in cold blood by the savages, or his horses and cows killed so as to leave him completely impoverished. Then there is hurrying to and fro in the little fort—rations have to be drawn and put up in bundles, the pack mules saddled and loaded, and then the cavalry horses themselves have to be saddled and made ready for the field. Just at nightfall, perhaps, the motley cavalcade moves out over hill and dale in search of the trail of the savages. After scouting from seven to ten days no enemy is seen, no trail discovered and the Indians themselves have vanished like the veriest phantoms of the mountains. Not one scouting party in twenty finds Indians, the greater number of scouts rendering unsatisfactory results.

"There is an ever increasing desire on the part of young officers to carry the luxuries of the age to the frontier post, and this gives rise to many so-called hardships. We see the most incongruous things at times, and many a young bride has been taken to a frontier fort who pines for the beautiful things she left in her father's home in the East. Still she holds on to some things, and a Turkish rug frequently covers a dirt floor and a grand piano becomes soiled by the mud of sun-dried bricks. I presume most old officers have seen a man put on a good many airs because he was the fortunate possessor of a cabbage or a mess of potatoes, while others had none of these toothsome comestibles. It does not take much to make an aristocrat."

Fancy the Bride's Feelings.

At the Church of St. John Nepomuk there was an occurrence of singular, and, to most people, awful solemnity, says the St. Louis Republican. At eight o'clock there was a high mass celebrated, at which were married a young couple. When the ceremony was nearing its close, the bride and groom, with their attending bridesmaids and groomsmen kneeling on the steps of the altar, and the church crowded with friends and relatives, the church bell pealed forth, not the merry marriage chime, but the slow and dolorous toll for the dead. To the door of the church there came a hearse, and into the middle aisle, down which the newly-wedded ones were compelled to pass, there was brought the long bier with all its somber display.

When they had received the blessing of the priest, the bride and groom turned, and in moving to the door of the church, had to separate and pass one on either side of death's pedestal. In the choir the organ trembled with the joyous strains of the "Wedding March;" in the belfry the iron throats belched forth the monody of death; at the door, in place of the coach which was to convey those who had just been made one to the festive joys of a wedding breakfast, there stood the vehicle which conveys all that is left of man after dissolution to the dark and narrow house.

"I [illegible] I'll have to reduce your wages, John," said a miserly employer to one of his help the other day. "What for?" was the query. "Because things are coming down. The necessaries of life are cheaper, and you can afford to get along on [illegible] pay." "I should like to know what necessaries [illegible] cheaper," said John; "[illegible] as much [illegible] as ever, [illegible] said [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] readers and wishes each a happy prosperous New Year.

If the foul destroyer is not needed in the Talladega Rifles, who disbanded because they were not ordered to Birmingham, then the said idiot-destroyer was an entirely unnecessary institution.—Troy Messenger.

Gen. Longstreet has explained his breaking down in a speech in Woodstock, Ill. The newspapers had pictured him as overcome by his emotion when speaking of burying the past. The General says: "I carry a bullet in my throat that struck me in the battle of the Wilderness. It always troubles me in public speaking, and I frequently break down after a short effort. That was the overpowering emotion which interrupted my speech in Illinois."

...d attractive advertising in a good newspaper will always pay. The larger it is the better paying it will be, as the general reader will know and understand that if the advertising is liberal, the merchant evidently has a stock of goods worth advertising. This is the experience of all good business men. Liberal and judicious advertising has enriched many merchants, who otherwise would have met with poor success. Moral: advertise.

Col. Jones, commanding the 2d regiment, Alabama State Troops, in his report to the Governor on the operation of the troops under his command at Birmingham, says: "Friday morning, and particularly that night, a cold, drenching rain poured down. As the State issues neither tents nor blankets, those who could not procure them underwent great exposure and some suffering; but fortunately no serious sickness resulted. I trust it is not without the bounds of official propriety to express the hope that this great State will in future deal more justly with her military, upon whom she relies in the last resort, to risk their lives for the maintenance of her laws." The point is well made and we call the attention of the people to the surprising negligence of the State in this matter. A policy which refuses to provide the State military—the defenders of law and order with such articles of absolute necessity is niggardly enough to put the great commonwealth of Alabama to shame.—Troy Messenger.

Whisky's Work—Stabbing Affray at Verbena.

About dusk last evening our own was the scene of a bloody tragedy. Mr. Floyd Brooks was stabbed just above the heart by Thomas Falkner, a youth under the influence of liquor.

The wounded man lies in a critical condition and has suffered much from the loss of blood, the knife having penetrated to the lungs. No witness was present at the murderous assault. After interviewing several parties we learned the following particulars: Falkner, who attended Prof. Acree's school, returned about three o'clock, in the evening from his home on Little Mulberry Creek hither he had gone to spend the holidays. He appeared to be intoxicated and was showing a long knife to some boys and threatening to kill some one or die in the attempt. Walking into Mr. R. W. ...ardeleben's store he seized a ...Tobie McLemore, and nearly ...ed him to death by his ... treatment. The boy escaped through the intervention of Mr. J. H. Haulin; and his brother-in-law, Mr. Brooks, learning of the affair soon after found Falkner a short distance from Mr. A. J. The Sheriff, being apprised of the tragic deed, came down and summoning a large posse started in pursuit of the would be murderer. BIJOU.

The above was written Tuesday. The wounded man is rational, and is not at present experiencing any great deal of pain. The knife blade was six inches in length, and is supposed to have gone through the lung. Our farmers have made two-thirds of a crop, but are generally out of debt.

Messrs. Peyton Harris and Jos. Johnson have just been made happy or otherwise, by the birth of daughters.

Mr. J. I. Cox has put in operation a locomotive to haul logs through the woods to Welch's saw mill. He is much pleased, and says it will supercede mules and oxen. It is cheaper than horse power, and will go anywhere a wagon can. It is 12 horse power and cost $1,100. C.

While the welkin was ringing with the old Christmas greetings —a more novel and exciting scene was witnessed on our streets, than even "that steam engine which hauls lumber on the dirt roads." It was a most wonderfully sad sight —a fine-looking, robust young man, who was not able to stand alone.

By the way, that engine is a success, though it strikes a stump occasionally. I was mistaken as to its owners; it belongs to Welch & Co.

Business seems to be brisk in Dixie. Messrs. Adams & Callier have had to enlarge their store house. Mr. Broadhead has purchased Mr. Harris' dwelling and land near his store. Mr. Harris is a thrifty blacksmith and carpenter; he has bought several acres half a mile south of this, where he is building on a pretty brook, with the design of running his work by water. Mrs. Crum, from Dallas, has bought Mrs. Mosier's land, and has begun improvements upon it. Mr. McGee, the energetic young fruit agent for a Southern nursery has sold more than $200 worth of fruit trees at this place—the demand is increasing. Mr. Lawrence, from Georgia, has purchased land near this community—also a Mr. Dyer. The foregoing shows the improvement going on. A gentleman who ought to know says that all the land in Mulberry valley will ere long be worth $10 per acre.

Last but not least, Mr. Sims and Miss Lockhart were recently married. M. A. H.

Maplesville Dots.

Our community has been stirred within the last week, and a feeling of indignation is manifested in the expression of public opinion on a matter of vital importance to the peace and honor of our citizens. We are again confronted with the whiskey question. A man, from charity we forbear naming him, with no regard for the public morals and in direct oposition to the known wish of the better class of our people, proceeded at once to secure the necessary number of petitioners required by law. He succeeded in getting just thirty one signatures from sixty one freeholders in the beat. Only one majority. With this, he will apply for license and commence the sale of whiskey in Maplesville on the first of January. So we learn; but we hope yet that he may see the folly of his course ere he ventures too far. Of those parties who signed the petition, we can only say that their conduct shows their lack of manliness.

Our merchants are opposed to the sale of whiskey and are strong advocates of prohibition; They will do all in their power to keep down the curse that had once made our village the scene of lawlessness and the resort of the ruffian.

The voice of every true citizen should be heard in this matter. It is a question that comes home to every man, woman, and child in our midst. A question that concerns the honor of our community and demands immediate action.

Married, on the 30th ult., at the residence of Mr. W. R. Bowline, by Squire J. D. McGee, Mr. J. M. Smith, of Rome, Ga., to Miss Alice Belvin of this place. Also, on the same day, by the same officer, Mr. Bowen Jones and Miss Jeanie Smith. Our best wishes attend them.

Monday evening, the 24th ult., was rainy and disagreeable, but this fact did not prevent a large and appreciative audience from witnessing the entertainment prepared for them by Miss Sallie Liles and her promising pupils at the Methodist Church in connection with the Christmas tree. ...house was filled long before the appointed hour, and all eyes were turned to the stage when the curtain rose and the Christmas carol broke upon the ear. Everything was carefully arranged and the Christmas tree was brilliantly lighted up and displayed its bur...

...the ... to notice ... one ... require too much space, and as it would be impudent for us to discriminate, we can only say that all did well. Those who took prominent part in the entertainment were Misses Lula DuBose, Mamie Kelley, Rebecca Crawford, Susie Crawford, Fannie Foshee, Josie Kailin, and Masters Charley Jones, Frank Kelly, Branson Lawrence, and Johnnie Crawford. The smaller children did so well, that everybody was surprised. It is not our purpose to puff any one, and when we say that Miss Liles' disinterested efforts to train her pupils for public appearance deserves commendation, we but reiterate the sentiments of those whose pleasure it was to be present. The Christmas tree and old "Santa Claus" was each a success; and with wishes of a merry Christmas and good night, the audience was dismissed.

Died, near this place, on the 25th ult., of congestion, Mr. Robert Smitherman. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved family.

BIJOU.

We learn that efforts are to be made to sell whiskey in Clanton. As it was the talk a few days since, we took occasion to inquire as to the wish of the property holders in the immediate vicinity of the court house, in regard to the matter. Every one of those we saw was opposed to selling whiskey any where in this beat. Some there are who are in favor of selling it here, and who will make an effort in that direction. It would have been useless to have called upon them. It is enough to know that at least three fourths of the best citizens of the place are opposed to whiskey. How the matter will stand before the people of the entire beat, we do not know, but we believe that with such a large majority of the people of Clanton against it, the movement to bring whiskey back will meet with the ignomonious failure it deserves.

T. E. Ansley, F. M. Ansley and W. W. Anslev three supervisors on the L. & N. system, have each been promoted to the position of road master. They are brothers, and were at one time section bosses on the Montgomery & Eufaula railroad, and are three of Col. B. Dunham's old men. T. E. Ansley goes to the M. & M. Divison. F. M. Ansley to the Knoxville branch; and W. W. Ansley is made road master of the S. & N. Alabama Division.

Rev. A. L. Blizard, well known in this section, has been called by the Baptist church at Columbia, Henry county, Ala., where he has removed with his family. May prosperity go with him in his new home.

A $20 Bible Prize.

The publisher of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for January, among which is the following:

We will give $20 to the person telling us how many times the word Bethlehem occurs in the Old Testament Scriptures by January 10th, 1884. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner January the 15th, 1884. Persons trying for the reward must send twenty cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the Febuary Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published, and in which several more valuable rewards will be offered. Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promtitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Lumber! Lumber!!

—:o:—

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Now is the time to settle your bills and resolve never again to go in debt.

Miss Blanche Hide, of Deatsville, lent her joyous presence to relatives near Clanton during Christmastide.

No paper was issued last week. With printers "Christmas without holiday is like a candle without a wick."

Mr. John Garner has purchased the Langford house and lot and will remove his family to Clanton at once.

The planing mill is now at work. The proprietors are determined to make a success of the enterprise.

Some interesting information in regard to the returned soldier will be published as soon as a few points are heard from.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. McCants and Mrs. John L. Harrel, of Montgomery, visited relatives near Clanton the past week.

An Xmas gift arrived at the residence of Mr. L. B. Wells on the morning of the 25th ult. It was a ten pound boy, and its pa is said to be happy.

Mrs. A. M. Knox, formerly of this place, now of Montgomery, spent the holidays in Clanton. There are few persons so universally beloved in our community as Mrs. Knox.

A Christmas frolic was given the young folks at the residence of Mrs. A. M. Adams, on last Thursday evening. It was the occasion of the tenth birthday of Miss Anna Byrne Adams.

Mr. E. H. Lowe, Jr., announces himself as a candidate for Sheriff at the next August election. Mr. Lowe is not inexperienced in the duties of the position, and he solicits the support of his fellow citizens.

The Kowbellion de Rakin and Klubbunctious Association assisted by the Mystick Krew of Anti-Phuss and Klap-Trap paraded our streets with great eclat during the holidays, to the amusement of both young and old.

See the new double column advertisement of Messrs. Adams & Callier, of Dixie. They are live and enterprising merchants and appreciate the value of printer's ink. Try them if you want bargains.

The Christmas tree at Jemison on the night of the 24th ult., was a great success. The young people had their hands, their hearts and their mouths full when the tree was unburdened. The committee deserve praise for its success.

Rev. Jefferson Falkner preached excellent closing sermons in the Baptist Church at his last regular appointment. He has been called to fill this pulpit for the next year, and it is gratifying to the people of the neighborhood that he has accepted the call and will again be with us.

An infant child of Mr. Chas. H. Smith, of Jemison, died on the morning of the 24th ult.

Mr. A. K. Evans has removed to his new residence. It adds considerably to the appearance of that part of Clanton.

Married, near Jemison, on December 27th, by Rev. W. G. Riggins, Mr. James L. Thomas and Miss Amanda Watkins. May their lives be one of unalloyed happiness.

Mr. J. T. Mullins, of Verbena, has purchased the residence of Mr. John Garner, at Jemison, and will remove to the latter place and engage in merchandising. Mr. Garner will move to Clanton.

Mrs. George L. Bivings, nee Miss Luela Lanier, who has been quite ill for some time at Birmingham, has improved to such an extent as to be able to make the trip to Clanton, and it is to be hoped she will soon recover.

Mr. J. O. Smith, formerly of Jemison, now of Tuskaloosa, visited relatives in this county during the holidays. Mr. S is now saw milling at his new home. His friends here will be glad to know that he is pleased and is doing well.

A man by the name of McDowell was arrested by the county Sheriff at Verbena recently, on a charge of grand larceny. He gave bond for appearance at the next term of the circuit court, on a preliminary examination before Judge Callen.

Married, in Chilton county, on the night of the 20th inst., by Rev. Monroe Honeycutt, Mr. Isaac Waldrop and Miss Mollie Thomas. The young couple have our best wishes for their future happiness and prosperity.—Bibb Blade.

Section boss G. P. Aldridge has been promoted to the position of Supervisor of Track on the S. & N. Ala. Division of the L. & N. railroad between Birmingham and Montgomery. He is on the lookout for a house, and will remove his family to Clanton.

Died, in this place on the 22nd inst., of minnegetis, Mr. John Dawson, brother of Mr. J. M. Dawson. Mr. Dawson had just removed to Clanton from the prairie country, in hope of benefitting his health. He came too late. We tender our sympathies to his bereaved family.

Married, near Clanton, recently, Mr. E. C. Honeycutt to Miss Mary Vinson, Squire S. L. Arledge officiating. Also, on the same night and in the same neighborhood, Mr. Leander Giles to Miss Georgia Rutherford, and Mr. Edward Willis to Miss Ora Armstrong, Rev. James A. Mullins officiating.

The VIEW is under obligations to Auditor Carmichael for a copy of his report for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30th, 1883. Also to Treasurer Smith for his report up to the same time. Also to Judge Betts, of the Agricultural Department for pamphlets showing the work progressing in his department.

One night last week, at a frolic in the Stump's Hill neighborhood, a drunken row began and in the melee a man by the name of Robt. Fulgum, was struck over the forehead with a large billet of wood. It was thought for some time that death would result. At last accounts, however, the wounded man was improving. It is not known who struck the blow. Sheriff Garner went into the neighborhood, but was unable to locate the offender.

We are glad to know that Mr. Lafayette Rollins, of Mountain Creek, has succeeded with his patent dry kiln. It is said to cost less than one half as much as the "Excelsior" kiln, and it dries lumber in three d[ays] thoroughly. We are glad it h[as] made a success, as it wi[ll] vantage to Mr. Rollins [and] aw mill men. The first [kiln] s patent was recently bu[ilt] . Rollins for Capt. B B[ell] at Georgiana, Ala.

It is probable [that] an election will be ordered in this beat at an early day with a view of again establishing whisky shops. It is well perhaps that another election should be held, and this time the people of the beat must see to it that the curse of whisky selling shall be so deeply buried that it may never again attempt to raise its horrible, murderous head. This can be done, and will be. The people of this neighborhood have had their fill of the vile and disgusting traffic, they know what they have to fear by past experience, and they will do their duty when called upon.

Some Interesting Particulars.

Some interesting particulars of the burning of Maull's mill at Lomax were inadvertently omitted. Mr. Maull had about $2,500 worth of lumber stacked and awaiting shipment. He says that had the railroad carried this lumber off promptly it would have escaped the flames.

The mill was situated almost immediately upon the railroad, and upon the opposite side of the railroad track is the depot platform and the commissary. The fire began at about 6 p. m. and was under terrible headway just as the evening mail train passed down the road. The train men had received orders at Jemison to shut down the windows and come through Lomax if possible. Engineer Simpson was in charge and the train came through Lomax at the rate of forty miles an hour, while the platform was burning on one side of the road, and the mill on the other, and the woods were also on fire for a hundred yards around. The passengers described the sight as beautiful. Engineer Simpson was considerably scorched by the intense heat, and the train ran several hundred yards before it was entirely free from sparks and burning splinters. The commissary did not catch. Mr. Maull is rapidly pushing the work of rebuilding, and has ordered new machinery, and will be ready for work as soon as it arrives. There was no insurance on the mill.

To-Night.

Taylor and Mosby's Colossal Gift Show will appear to-night (Jan. 3d) at Clanton Academy. Th[e] ...sed public speak very highly of this ...anization. Prof. Taylor will perform among many other feats The Wonderful Hindoo Box Trick which consists in being locked and tied in a solid box and getting out without disturbing the ropes or lock. The catching of any cards selected by the audience on the point of a sword. Mr. Mosby will also introduce his ventriloquism and his talking figures Dan and Jo. Besides witnessing this refined entertainment, everyboy attending the first night will receive a useful and handsome present. Among other things will be given a set of silver knives, also a set of silver forks and spoons, also flour, groceries, hams, &c.—Admission 25 cents. Reserved seats 50 cents. Children under 12 years of age 15 cents.

The Williams track of land, 10 miles west of Clanton, of 100 acres was sold publicly on last Monday. It was only tolerably good as farming land, but it brought $380—a very good figure. It was purchased by Dr. J. S. Johnson, Sr.

Married, at the residence of the bride's father, on the 21st ult., by Rev. James A. Mullins, Mr. Cost Giles and Miss Julia Gentry.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

ELIZA COOK.

THE OLD HAIR TRUNK.

BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

The story I am about to narrate was told me by Mrs. S——, an excellent as well as a charming woman. She believes every word of it, I am sure, and I shall make no comment on its probability. These are her own words:

"You have seen one of those old hair trunks, with the owner's initials in brass nails on the cover, which our ancestors used to carry about with them when they went upon a journey," she began. "One of them was left me by Mrs. Fayette, a far-away cousin of my grandmother, togethhr with a quantity of other old possessions, most of them merely valuable from antiquity and association.

"It was of an enormous size, and the men who were employed to carry it up stairs would not move it until it was emptied.

"I possess a garret, as you know, and in that blessing to housekeepers unknown to the inhabitants of great cities. I stored my legacy. One or two old cloaks and a silk comfortable were replaced in its depths, the rest were loaned to the young people who ... about to get up private theatricals ... of the church, and ... pos- ... d. Then ... eighty, and ... complexion, white ... d antique gowns, ... just stepped from an ... portrait.

"... merely a memory to me; ... though the fact that she recalled ... little girl who used to eat her seed-cake, and admire her old china, was proven by her legacy, I made no pretence of grieving for a death which simply recalled the fact that such a person had lived to me. I felt a little softened, that was all, and wished I had taken the trouble of visiting her in her last days, or had sent for her to visit me.

"I make these remarks because it was only a few days after the arrival of the big hair trunk at our home that I went with my husband to a ball. It was a fine affair. I had had a special dress made, and though my baby was only six months old, I had no fear of leaving her with nurse, a respectable woman of fifty, who had been in my mother's service. Ella was then just seven and Arthur three, and both were good, obedient little creatures. It is ten years ago, and Ella will be married in spring. How time flies.

"Well, I was going to the ball. My trunk had been sent to —— Hotel, and we were to stay there all night, and come home in the morning. I was very much pleased, for who does not like to play girl again after ten years or so of married life—to go off with one's husband and forget housekeeping for awhile?

"I left the house in good spirits, and after a dinner and a little lounge, began to get ready. The hair-dresser did my hair. My toilet became me. My husband surprised me with a beautiful set of pearls, and I was never in a merrier mood.

"I used to be a good dancer; in fact, I am still, only when one's girls grow up one drops dancing, and I had plenty of partners.

"I enjoyed the supper, and when it was over, I went into the dressing-room to see that my hair was all right and take a general view of my costume.

"Most of the ladies were crowding about the glasses, but one in the corner was not in use. I approached it, and as I did so a lady stepped up and looked over my shoulder. As I saw that it was an old lady I was about to step politely aside, when suddenly, with a strange chill commencing at my neck and running thence through all my body, cold as ice, yet tingling, if you can understand me, I recognized the face and form, so long unseen by me, of old Mrs. Fayette. Her hands were on my shoulders, and she looked straight into my face as she uttered these words:

"'Don't lose time staring at yourself here. Go home and open my old hair trunk.'

"Then she was gone. I staggered back and sank upon a sofa. My husband, waiting at the door for me, saw me, and hurried in.

"'What is the matter, my dear?' he asked.

"I told him, and added, as well as I could speak for the chattering of my teeth,

"'I must go home at once.'

"He was terrified for my reality, I ... but he urged ... I might go to the hotel, and send for a doctor; but go home on an early morning train in ball costume I could not, he declared.

"For the only time in all my life I defied him and refused to obey. I got my wraps, put them on, and went down to where the carriage was waiting.

"'To——depot,' I commanded.

"He let me have my way, only asking:

"'What do you fear?'

"'I don't know,' I said. 'I have had a supernatural warning of some sort. I must—I must look into the old hair trunk.'

"And then I fell into hysterics.

"A fine time poor Henry had getting me home, and when we alighted at the depot, in gray dawn, and in the midst of the milk-cans and market men, it was well that we had not far to go to reach home.

"But as we opened our own gate we saw plainly that something was wrong. Lights still burnt, men were on the porch. Nurse stood in the hall wringing her hands.

"'What is the matter?' I shrieked.

"'We can't find Miss Ella, ma'am,' she answered. 'She's gone.'

"'She went to hide herself, mamma,' sobbed poor little Arthur, 'and I tan't find her nowhere.'

"'In her little night-dress, and with bare feet,' moaned the nurse.

"Then I knew what my vision meant.

"'The hair trunk! the hair trunk!' I cried, and pushed up-stairs to the garret.

"Some one followed me with a light. I ran to the trunk and threw back the lid. On the silk counterpane at the bottom lay my little Ella, white, motionless, seemingly dead. At the sight I lost consciousness.

"My husband, as you know, is a physician. He knew what to do. My little one was not gone, but only going. Two hours more, and all would have been over. But next day, as I lay in bed, unable to lift my head from the pillow, she perched beside me and told me her innocent little story.

"'Arfur wanted to get up and play hide and seek, mamma, and he's awful dood at finding. He gets warm wight away, so I faught he'd never look in the garret, 'cause he's afraid of the dark and I ain't, and I went and dot into the big hair-twunk and then the cover wouldn't lift up, and I called, and nobody heard me, and I cwied and it got so choky, like the cwoup, and then I wented to sleep, I guess 'cause papa said he faught I'd never wake up aden; but Arfur couldn't find me, could you, Arfur?

"Little she knew how very near her sleep had been to that which knows no waking. I took my little one to my heart, and I thanked Heaven for my strange warning. I leave others to decide how it came, what it was, but I believe that the spirit of my neglected old friend came back to help me in my hour of peril; and I, who never loved her before, love her now, and hope to meet her in Heaven and tell her so, when my life here is over."—Ledger.

Too Many Weeds.

Probably more than half of all the weeds are first brought to our farms in the grass seed. Suppose we are given a bushel of clover or timothy seed containing only twenty seeds of ripple or wild carrot or daisy; how much better to burn it than to sow and go over the fields time after time to pull out the weeds; it would cost more than ten times the price of the seed to get the last of these plants out. It is far better to refuse entirely those seeds with "only a few weed seeds," and to pay a round price for those entirely free from them; and then on seeding down land we should sow plenty of seed, so as to have the surface fully occupied with the desired crop.

As a means of cleaning foul land and of keeping that already clean from becoming foul, there is no system with greater advantages than fall fallowing, and it should be far more generally followed than it now is. Sheep are also great weed destroyers; when green and tender many varieties of weeds are eagerly sought after and quickly eaten by them, and no seed of any plant ever grows after having passed the digestion machinery of the sheep.

If we would clean out the weeds and keep them out, we must maintain a constant fight, must go over all our farm at least twice each year in search of any stray plant that may be growing from seed so generously donated by some slovenly neighbor. Offer the boys a bounty of so much for each weed-root found on the premises, and you will be surprised how sharp their eyes will become, and you will find it to pay in more ways than one. It will not only clean out the weeds, but it teaches them, no matter how much in a hurry, always to pull a weed, and the habit fully acquired will be worth much more than the bounty will cost you. A good clean farm is not only a source of profit, but of pleasure as well.—J. S. WOODWARD, Niagara county, N. Y.

JAY-EYE-SEE THE fastest trotter of his age the world has ever seen, stands but fifteen hands, and Mr. Robert Bonner declined to buy him one year ago on that account. He liked the form and breeding of the horse, but did not believe that he had size enough to make a world beater. But now that Jay-Eye-See has trotted a mile at Providence in 2:10¼ and repeated in 2:11¼ at Boston, the opinion that it is impossible to get length of stride for a fast mile without height of 15.3 or 16 hands falls to the ground.

A YOUNG man who had suddenly broken off his engagement with a very amiable young lady, for some time positively refused to assign any reason for his conduct. At length, after being sued for breach of promise, he reluctantly confessed to his lawyer that he still deeply loved the girl, but was afraid to wed her because he noticed that her mother always wore long finger-nails.

A QUEER MARRIED COUPLE.

THE STORY OF TWO WOMEN WHO PRETENDED TO BE MAN AND WIFE.

One a Gay Parisian Heiress of the New York and Pennsylvania Woods and the Other a Graduate of a Boston School—Their Wanderings and Adventures.

The singular case reported from Waupun, Wis., of the marriage of one woman to another, has a parallel in a case which was discovered in Stroudsburg, Pa., some years ago. A local correspondent writes to the Sun as follows:

In the spring of 1869 there appeared in the town of Barrett, in the western part of Monroe county, a couple calling themselves the Rev. Joseph Israel Lobdell and wife. The man was of medium height, dressed in tattered hunting garb, and carried a long single-barrel rifle. He wore no hat, and his head was covered with thick black curly hair, streaked with gray. The woman was taller than the man, and was meanly clad. She was fine looking, wore spectacles, and her conversation showed that she was educated and intelligent. For two years the strange couple roamed about the township, living most of the time in the woods, but frequently making their appearance in the village, where the man would deliver wild and incoherent harangues on religion, and both would beg for food and shelter. In 1871 they had become such a nuisance to the inhabitants that they were arrested on a charge of vagrancy, and committed to jail in Stroudsburg. While in prison the discovery was made that they were both women. Soon afterward it was learned that they had together left the almshouse of Delaware county, N. Y., a short time before their appearance in this county. The poorhouse authorities of Barrett thereupon took them back to Delhi, where the following straight history of the pair was learned:

In 1854, Lucy Ann Lobdell, the 17-year-old daughter of an old lumberman living at Long Eddy, on the Delaware river, was married to George Slater. She was known far and wide as an expert shot with the rifle, not only at the target, but in hunting the wild game for which that part of the valley was then famous. After a year of married life, Slater deserted his wife, leaving her in destitute circumstances, with an infant two months old. Her parents were very poor, and unable to give her a home. They were willing to relieve her of the care of her child, however, and she finally placed it in their charge. She then dressed herself in male attire and disappeared.

Soon afterward, a young man of prepossessing appearance opened a singing school in the village of Bethany, Wayne county, Pa. He gave his name as Joseph Lobdell, and became a great favorite among the young women of the village, nearly all of whom joined his singing class. He was a good singer and violinist, and had a fair knowledge of music. Before the term of his school was over he became engaged to one of his pupils, the daughter of a leading citizen of Bethany. The day was set for the wedding. News of the presence of the young singing master in Bethany reached Long Eddy, and suspicion was aroused there that he was the missing Lucy Ann Slater, whose musical accomplishments were well known in her native place. Investigation proved that the suspicion was correct. The information was obtained by a young man of Bethany, who had been a rival of the music teacher for the hand of the young lady. He told the secret to a few companions, and they planned to capture the teacher on a certain night and tar and feather her. This became known in some way to the girl Lobdell was to marry, and, notwithstanding her mortification, she warned the teacher of her danger so that she escaped from the town by night and returned to Long Eddy, where she assumed female attire for a short time.

Early in 1856 she again put on male attire, and for eight years lived the life of a hunter, roaming the forest of Sullivan, Delaware, Wayne, and Pike counties. She rarely came into the settlements, and then to exchange game and furs for ammunition and necessary supplies. According to her subsequent statements, her wild life was one of thrilling adventure and privation. Her narrow escapes in contests with wild animals and her sufferings from cold, hunger, and sickness during her career in the woods she recorded in a book entitled "The Life and Adventures of Lucy Ann Lobdell, the Female Hunter of Long Eddy." She returned to Long Eddy in 1864, broken in mind and body. Her child had been placed in the poorhouse at Delhi. She once more assumed the habiliments of her sex, and, after wandering about the valley for a year or two, an object of pity and charity, she also sought the shelter of the almshouse.

In the summer of 1868 a young woman giving the name of Marie Louise Perry, became an inmate of the poorhouse at Delhi. She was in poor health, a stranger in the county, and evidently well educated. She declined to give any account of herself, but it was learned a few months afterward that she was the daughter of well-to-do parents in a Massachusetts village, and was a graduate of a school in Boston. It was rumored that she had run away from home, married a man to whom her parents objected, and been deserted by him. This rumor she neither denied nor admitted to be true.

An intimacy grew up between Miss Perry and Lucy Ann Lobdell. They became strongly attached to one another, although their habits, character, and antecedents were so widely different. Learning that the almshouse authorities had informed her parents of her whereabouts, the girl resolved to leave the institution, and Lucy Ann Lobdell accompanied her. They were not heard of again in Delaware county until they were discovered in the Shrewsbury jail, masquerading as man and wife, and were released by the Board of Poor. They remained there for a short time, and then left the place again, and resumed their roaming life in the woods, leaving no doubt behind that they were man and wife.

A marriage ceremony between them had been performed in 1869 by a Wayne county Justice of the Peace, he being ignorant of the fact that the parties were both women. In 1876 they appeared in Honesdale, Wayne county. The "husband," it was then seen, was violently insane, but the "wife" clung to him with an affection that was remarkable. For the good of both, the lunatic was placed in jail. The grief of the other at the separation was pitiful, and she begged to be allowed to share her "husband's" cell.

There is now on the court records of Wayne county a document which was drawn by the unfortunate companion of Lucy Ann Lobdell at this time. It was a petition for the release of her "husband, Joseph I. Lobdell," from jail, on account of his failing health. It was written with a split stick for a pen, with ink made from the juice of poke berries. It reviewed the case of the "Female Hunter" from a psychological standpoint. The language used was clear, correct and logical, showing that the writer, though a voluntary outcast, was a person of superior education.

"Joseph I. Lobdell" was finally released from jail, and the couple then took up their residence on a small farm in Damascus township, Wayne county, where they lived peaceably until 1880, when the "husband" wandered away, and finally became an inmate of the Delhi poorhouse again. She is now in the Willard Asylum for the Insane. The "wife" still lives on the Damascus farm, and insists that her name is Mrs. Joseph I. Lobdell.

An Acre of Wretchedness.

With a million to begin with, anybody might soon get as wealthy as Vanderbilt. So says a correspondent of a New York paper. He describes a building in Forsyth street. It is on a lot 25 feet wide by 100 deep. An alleyway of 5 feet runs down one side and on this the tenements face. The whole house, consequently, is 20 feet wide and 100 feet deep. It is 5 stories high, and is divided into 5 sections, or houses, each 20 feet square. The apartments for a family consist of a living room, 13 feet square, a dark 5x10 bedroom in the rear, and two closets barely large enough to contain two cots for children. There is only one window, and it looks out upon the narrow filthy alley, so that light and ventilation are both scant. There is no water in these houses, the tenants lowering buckets from the windows by ropes, and filling them at a hydrant which is surrounded by foul pools. A drain is choked with rotten vegetables and other refuse. But the uncleanliness is not essential to the success of the writers proposed enterprise. What he wishes to call particular attention to is the smallness of the homes and the relative largeness of the rentals. The prices range from $8 a month on the ground floor to $5 on the top, or an average of $7 from each of 24 families. There is a groggery in the tenement opening on the street, and this raises the gross income to $10,500 a year. By covering a block with these compact and cheaply constructed houses, about fifteen per cent. clear could be realized on the investment. But that is not all. "I would reserve the exclusive privilege of selling supplies to the tenants," says the schemer; "no other groceries or saloons than mine should be opened in the territory covered by the houses." I went into a Forsyth street store and saw women buying coal at eleven cents a bucketful, or about $10 a ton. Flour was retailing in small quantities at a rate equal to $14 a barrel. For all of their eatables these poor devils pay on the whole fifty per cent. more than can be got from rich folk. Counting in drinkables, don't you see what a fortune could be made out of an acre or two of tenements full of wretchedness?"

Never Joke.

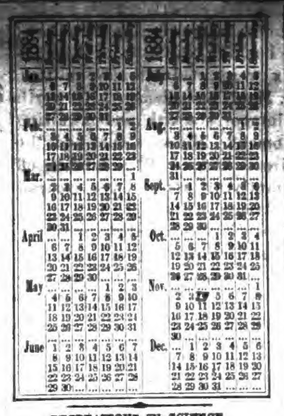
The Washington Critic says: When the Toledo Telegram says that "if S. S. Cox had never made a joke he might be next Speaker of the House," it is only putting in sententious form what is heard in many forms all about Washington every hour nowadays. Why is it that a man who adds great power and clearness in the discussion of great questions the ability to amuse as he goes along should be so underrated by the public? It is a singular fact, but fact it is, and always has been. Tom Corwin was probably the greatest man Ohio ever produced, but because he could amuse as well as instruct he was always sneered at by the owls of politics as a "joker." It took two elections and a martyr's grave to give Abraham Lincoln any other reputation than that of a joker and a story teller.

When Oliver P. Morton was starting in 1856 upon that wonderful career that made him one of the most conspicuous figures of the war period, he commenced by seeking to enliven that extraordinary logical eloquence (if such a term is admissable) possessed by him in such degree by anecdote and witticism. He had a happy turn that way. At Terre Haute, after a brilliant effort that commended itself to his followers, a venerable and famous politician took the young orator to task:

"Young man, if you want to be regarded as a great man, a great leader, never tell a story, never utter a joke; look solemn and pound the table."

A PHILADELPHIA PAPER REMARKS John Swinton's grievance against William Vanderbilt is, that the gentleman's wealth would, if put in gold coin, overburden twenty-six elephants. Thus through the rugged crags and peaks of Mr. Swinton's character, shine the pure soft rays of his devotion to the cause of preventing cruelty to animals.

WHAT is a communist? One who has yearnings for equal division of unequal earnings.



RECREATIONS IN SCIENCE.

"The sun is 15,000,000 years old, and will last 15,000,000 years longer."

This fact will quiet a great deal of anxiety and alarm. An impression had got abroad that the sun would only last 14,000,000 years longer. The sun holds its age well. Oldest habitants say it does not look a day older than it did sixty-five years ago.

The temperature of the moon is at least 200° below zero, and it is highly edifying to mingle oldest inhabitants who congregate around the village barroom stove in midwinter, and listen to their lies about the cold January of 100,781 years B. C., when water froze while boiling on the stove. The hypothesis, however, that the temperature of the moon is 200° below zero is evidently a false one. If the theory were tenable, the United States Government would have sent an exploring expedition there to freeze to death.

Some stars are so far away that their light, moving with a velocity of 192,000 miles per second, require 50,000 years to reach our eyes; but by "colliding" with a half-open door, when groping about a dark room at midnight, the light of 129,640,000,000,000 stars, more or less, will reach our eyes simultaneously with their first appearance.—Puck.

THE WRONG PARTY.

"You know Blank, don't you?' queried a citizen as he entered a Griswold street office yesterday.

"Yes."

"Have you any influence with him?'

"Well; I may have."

"Then you are the man to go to him. He has a son about sixteen years old!"

"Yes."

"That boy is on the road to ruin because his father is too good-natured and too much wrapped up in business. Seems to me it is your duty to go to that man and tell him in a friendly way that he must exercise more government or his boy will be lost."

"I don't think I'm the man," replied the other as he chewed at a blotting-pad and gazed out of the window.

"But why?"

"Well, I've got a boy about the same age, and I'm just going up to the Police Court to pay a fine of $20 for him smashing up saloon furniture! Try the next"—Detroit Free Press.

THE WITNESS KNEW HIM.

"Mr. Smith, do you know the character of Mr. Jones?"

"Wall, I rather guess I do, jedge."

"Well, what do you say about it?"

"Wall, he ain't so bad a man after all."

"Well, Mr. Smith, what we want to know is: Is Mr. Jones of a quarrelsome and dangerous disposition?"

"Wall, jedge, I should say that Tom Jones is very vivid in verbal exercise, but when it comes to personal adjustment he hain't eager for the contest."

How He Doubled His Trade.

Mr. Benj. W. Paten, pharmacist Globe Village, Mass., says that the miraculous pain cure, St. Jacob's Oil, has greatly helped his other business, and the sales of the remedy have doubled in one month. He keeps a large supply always on hand. Officers of the Army and Navy pronounce St. Jacob's Oil to be the greatest pain cure of the age.

An Interesting Patent Suit.

Nelson Lyon, of Albany, N. Y., has recovered judgment of $8,147.10, against G. T. Fisher & Co., in the U. S. circuit court, at Detroit, Mich., for an infringement of Lyon's Patent Metallic Heel Stiffener. This contrivance is one of the most useful of modern inventions, and has achieved a remarkable sale—over 2,750,000 worth, the testimony showed, having been sold since the patent was granted, being a grand total of 3,888,000 pairs. The invention consists of a neat metal plate fastening to the outside of a boot or shoe heel, arranged to prevent the counters from breaking over and the heel from wearing down unevenly. The attorney-general of the United States declared the Lyon patent invalid on account of an informality in the application. This was afterward cured by the commissioner of patents in accordance with a special act of Congress authorizing it. Action was commenced in May, 1880, a perpetual injunction was obtained in December, and the case was referred to a master, who reported the damages as $8,834, but on motion the court doubled the same, and directed judgment to be entered against defendants for such double damages, with interest and costs.

Rescued from Death.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1879 I was taken with bleeding of lungs followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past.

Thousands Hastened to Their Graves!

Relying on testimonials written in vivid glowing language of some miraculous cures made by some largely puffed up doctor or patent medicine has hastened thousands to their graves believing in their almost insane faith that the same miracle will be performed on them, and that these testimonials make the cures, while the so-called medicine is all the time hastening them to their graves. We have avoided publishing testimonials, as they do not make the cures, although we have of them, of the most wonderful cures, voluntarily sent us. It is our medicine, Hop Bitters, that makes the cures. It has never failed and never can. We will give reference to any one for any disease similar to their own if desired, or will refer to any neighbor, as there is not a neighborhood in the known world but can show its cures by Hop Bitters.

A LOSING JOKE.

A prominent physician of Pittsburg said to a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill health, and of his inability to cure her, jokingly said: "Try Hop Bitters!" The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.

FEES OF DOCTORS.

The fee of doctors is an item that very many persons are interested in. We believe the schedule for visits is $3.00, which would tax a man confined to his bed for a year, and in need of a daily visit, over $1,000 a year for medical attendance alone! And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.

A LADY'S WISH.

"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Hop Bitters, that makes pure, rich blood and blooming health. It did for me, as you observe."

GIVEN UP BY THE DOCTORS.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?" "I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters, and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die from Kidney and Liver trouble."

ACROSS THE PLAINS.

The plains were wide and vast and drear,
The mountain peaks seemed cool and near,
The sun hung low toward the west,
'So near," we sighed, "are we to rest."

But journeying through the closing day,
Our feet are weary of the way;
Far, far before our aching sight
The plains lie in the waning light.

The mountain peaks that seemed so near
And held our rest forever there,
Are far across the desert lands.
We vainly cry with lifted hands:

Oh hills, that stand against the sky,
We may not reach you ere we die;
Our hearts are broken with the pain,
For rest and peace we may not gain.

Upon the plains we faint and fall,
Our faces toward the mountains tall;
Our palms are clasped, but not to pray;
So die we with the dying day.

HORRORS OF DRUNKENNESS

SOME OF THE PHENOMENA OF ALCOHOLIZED BRAINS

We were four. We sat talking in the lobby of a Denver hotel. It was 11 p. m. The talk was languishing, when the wide doors opening to the street were thrown apart violently, and a tall, heavily built man walked in. His soft hat was tilted backward on his head. His step was uncertain. He was drunk. We recognized him as Dalton, a miner from the Snowy Range. Seeing the group sitting around a table, he came toward us, and with a drunken smile, said, "Howda, boys?" Then, before we could greet him, he turned away, saying carelessly, "It is cat night for me. I may as well go see the creature." Entering the elevator, he disappeared.

Wondering what Dalton meant by "cat night," I asked one of my companions the meaning of the phrase. He replied. "A phantom cat comes to Dalton during the night following his third day of hard drinking. It is a warning to him to put on the brakes."

"Tell me of it." I said.

Complying, he said: "Dalton sprees. He drinks at long intervals, and never in moderation. When the wild desire for alcohol assails him, resistance is seemingly impossible. He turns his mines over to his foreman and comes to Denver. He drinks excessively the first day, still more the second, and he turns himself loose on the third. He is a heavy and very powerful man, and can drink an enormous quantity of whiskey before succumbing to it. I have known him to drink forty glasses of liquor in one day, six of them before breakfast. By the end of the third day Dalton is very nervous. Soon after he falls into his first drunken sleep on the third night he always dreams that he comes into his room; that a noise, as though something scratching on the carpet under his bed, attracts his attention; that looking under the bed, he sees a large yellow tomcat, with a bristling tail as big as a rolling pin. The cat is tearing the carpet with its sharp claws. Indifferent to cats, or dogs, or any animal that walks on earth, he undresses and gets into bed. Instantly he is smitten with paralysis. He cannot move. His brain works without friction and is wonderfully clear. His vision is penetrative. He can see through the bed, and sees the cat on the floor in the corner. His clear sight pierces through the disguise of the creature and he realizes that it is an eye-destroying, flesh-eating devil. He knows that the fiend will come out from under the bed and jump upon the footboard. Standing there with arched back and swelling tail, the creature will utter frightful cries prepartory to leaping, with distended claws, on his face and tearing out his eyes. Dalton becomes afraid of the cat. He tries to call for help. He strives to move. His efforts are vain. The cat leaps to the footboard, and glares at him with distended fiery eyes. Again he struggles to throw off the paralysis. He cannot move. The cat, with a horrid cry, springs on his upturned face. Under the spur of this supreme horror he rallies, and, with an exhaustive effort he awakens. He is unnerved. He trembles like a timid woman. His heart beats quickly. It takes three or four days of perfect rest and solitude to restore his nervous system. He drinks no more for months."

"Does he know, while suffering from this alcoholic nightmare that it is a nightmare?"

"Yes," my companion answered, "he knows it. But he also knows that if he does not awaken, and so prevent the yellow tomcat from getting in his work the at will kill him. He is in deadly fear of this cat, though he knows it is but an alcoholic phantom. And underneath his dread of the cat lies the fear of death resulting from alcoholism. The cat is only a faint shadow cast by the approaching jimjams, that stalk spectre-like in the vestibule of his brain."

"The warnings some drinking men receive are very strange," said the oldest of our party. "I know several men who are sprees, who have warnings, generally visions more or less horrible, but invariably the same, when they approach the wall behind which the jimjams lurk. Probably the most striking case is that of a gentleman who inherited his diseased craving for alcohol. He will not drink, it may be, for a year. Then he will put his business into such a shape that he can leave it for a few days and deliberately get drunk. For two days he devotes his energies to getting drunk and staying drunk. He is not of the least trouble to any one when he is drinking. He shuts himself up in his room, and drinks alone. In two days he will drink a gallon of the best sour mash Bourbon whisky money can buy. He always begins drinking in the evening. The third evening he goes to bed in a beastly state of intoxication. At about midnight his vision comes to him. He dreams that he went to bed, and slept soundly until awakened by a hard, white, flickering light. He lies awake wondering what causes the light, and hears a loud knock on his bedroom door. 'Come in!' he cries. The door is thrown wide open and a man who has been freshly flayed stalks in. The flayed man smiles in a ghastly manner, and nods in friendly recognition. The flesh is gone from his mouth. His teeth grin mockingly. He stations himself opposite the bed and leans against the wall, his shoulders making a bloody mark where he leans. His lidless eyes roll and his tongue lolls. The bedroom door remains open. My friend looks out of the door and into the street. There he sees a long column of flayed men marching rapidly down the road. Stragglers drop out from the column and enter his room. When ten men have entered, his bedroom door closes. The flayed men, who are covered with fresh blood, walk silently around the room looking at him. They point their bloody fingers at him. At a signal from the man who first entered they all march out. Presently they return, each carrying a flayed and bloody corpse. The blood has dried on the live men while they were absent, and it flakes from them as they re-enter the room with their ghastly burdens. The corpses are placed on the floor in a row, side by side. At a signal from the leader of the skinless horrors, they straddle the dead bodies, and bending over, grasp them around the waists. Then straightening up, with the legs of the dead men between their own, they move around the room in a weird dance, now advancing, now retreating, then circling around the bed, and always leering and grinning at my friend. After desperate efforts he awakens, and the vision disappears. It is his warning to quit drinking, and he heeds it, too."

Then spoke an ex-Confederate artillery officer: "Most sprees have visions, all of them horrible, that are nature's warnings to them to quit drinking. But there is another class of illusions arising from an unwise use of alcohol, which I suspect are much more common than is generally known. The men who suffer from these illusions are apt to conceal their troubles, being ashamed to confide them to their most intimate friends. I know of two cases that may interest you. They are queer manifestations of alcoholic disturbances of the brain."

We gathered closely around the table, and all of us, as one man, demanded the stories. The ex-Confederate officer said: "Johnson was raised on the Sea Islands. He married shortly before the war. He entered the Army of Virginia. His wife, to whom he was devoted, died shortly after he left her. After the surrender Johnson came West. He is a well-educated, courageous gentleman. I will tell you of the vision that invariably arises before him if he drinks at all. I will tell it in the first person, just as he told it to me. Imagine that Johnson is talking: 'Whenever I drink, I am haunted by a vision that arises before me as soon as I am asleep. It is this: My wife is by my side, her soft hand lovingly slipped in mine. We are walking up an oyster shell path toward our Sea Island home. Entering our house I realize that it has been deserted, and an unaccountable feeling of dread rolls over me in an icy wave at this discovery. Then my wife speaks, saying, softly, "I am afraid." Instantly my mind is flooded with the recollection of a dreadful horror that I had not thought of for years. I remember that we had abandoned the house because it was haunted. Our experience, as I recall it, was that a spirit walked nightly in the attic, and, after a short walk, descended the stairs. When the door at the foot of the stairway opened before the ghost a column of whitish vapor floated sinuously into the hall; then, turning to the left, it entered my room and passed out of the window.

"'Supplemented to this horror was another manifestation of rare occurrence and at highly irregular intervals. This was a voice accompanied by footsteps. Sometimes heavy footsteps, at others as if the infirm steps of age were tottering around the house. Again they crept along the inside of the partitions. Then the voice groaned, as if in pain. I knew the voice to be that of a negro of hideous aspect and gigantic size, whom one of my ancestors had scourged to death. That voice threatened us with direful disasters, and made the night hideous with its cries. It always came in the gray of the evening, and stayed all night. The recollection of these horrors, that had escaped my memory, terrified me. My wife saw that I was unnerved, and clung closely to me, repeating in trembling tones, "I am afraid, I am afraid, I am afraid." I tried to restore her courage, but I could not. I looked at her, and saw that she, too, recollected the dreadful tale. We endeavored to leave the house, but could not. Then we sought refuge in the parlor, and trembling awaited, we knew not what. Suddenly a barbaric tune was beaten on the floor above us, as though pounded out with a war club, and the voice spoke tauntingly, saying "To-night you shall see me." An irresistible force drew us to our bedroom. The column of vapor descended the stairs and entered it and floated out of the window. Then we sought to escape from the dreaded voice by hiding in dark corners; but the voice tauntingly called us forth.

"'Finally, in despair, we entered the parlor, and there the end came. Forth from the solid wall strode a gigantic naked negro. His flesh was scored as though with a whip. Blood marked the trail as he walked. He stalked toward us. With an exultant grin he glared fiercely at us. Then he slowly stretched out his hand, as though to grasp my wife's yellow hair. An overpowering base and cowardly terror seized me. My only fear was that the black spectre would grasp me instead of my wife. She clung to me with twining arms, murmuring, "Protect me! Save me!" Basely I thrust her from me toward the outstretched hand of the gigantic black. She looked at me lovingly, not reproachfully, and with a kind, forgiving smile on her face, fell dead at my feet. With ineffable scorn the negro pointed his horny index finger at me and said, "A coward! The first of his race," and disappeared with a crash that always awakened me.'"

The ex-Confederate ceased talking for an instant while he lit a fresh cigar, and then he said: "That is Johnson's vision. It never varies a particle, and he sees it if he drinks so much as one glass of whisky. Of course you all understand that there is not any ground for the vision. It is, from beginning to end, an alcoholic phantasm.

"Then there was Wallace," and the narrator smiled at his memories. "His was a queer case of physical recollection of a flight and drunken hiding. Wallace got drunk in town (I am talking of Northern Alabama), and while drunk got into trouble. Being hard pressed, he drew his pistol and killed his opponent, who was a worthless creature. The dead man's friends, also worthless creatures, gathered in an excited crowd. Wallace, partly sobered, realized his danger, and resolved to get out of town if possible. His horse stood in the shed. Wallace kept the crowd off by pistol shooting, that may have been a little indiscriminate, until he was mounted. By this time some of the dead man's friends were also mounted. Wallace fled and was hotly pursued. His plantation was some eight miles the other side of the river. The pursuing horsemen cut him off from the bridge by riding up a side street. Seeing this he turned his horse and rode down the river bank at full gallop. It was quite dark by this time. After riding about a mile down the river bank he spurred his horse into the stream. His horse carried him across safely and clambered up the opposite bank.

"Wallace rode into the heavy forest at the full gallop. He remembered no more of that night's experience. The next morning he awoke in a darkened room. He was lying on a rough, dirty floor. Staggering to his feet he felt around his unknown quarters until he found a hole in the floor. A ladder had been thrust through this opening and projected a couple of feet above the floor. He descended the ladder and found himself in a basement, one side of which opened on a gulch. It was an abandoned still house. He saw the tracks made by his horse, but the horse was gone. He did not know where he was. It was ten o'clock before he found a road he knew, and noon before he reached home. His horse returned home during the previous night. Ever after, when Wallace got drunk in that town, he would wake up the next morning in the dark attic of the deserted still house. He always turned his horse loose and had to walk home. When he left the country and the old associations were broken, he quit riding around at midnight to hide in dirty attics."

It was growing late. Our party bade one another good night and wandered off to bed. FARNE WILKESON.

COLONEL PELTON'S WIFE.

THE ROMANTIC STORY OF AN APACHE RAID.

Marries a Beautiful Spanish Girl and while Bathing They are Attacked by Indians—Becomes Her Avenger—How They Finally Met.

Colonel Albert C. Pelton, whose beautiful 22,000 acre ranche is out toward the Rio Grande, near Laredo, has been the Peter the Hermit of the Texans for years. He has believed that he has held a divine commission to kill Apache Indians. Colonel Pelton came to Texas in 1844, a common soldier. By talent and courage he rose to the rank of colonel, and finally, in 1847, commanded Fort Macrae. That year he fell in love with a beautiful Spanish girl at Albuquerque, N. H. Her parents were wealthy, and would not consent to their daughter's going away from all her friends to live in a garrison. The admiration of the young couple was mutual, and parental objection only intensified the affection of the lovers. The Spanish girl's nature is such that, once in love, she never changes. Finally, after two years' entreaty and devotion, Colonel Pelton won the consent of the parents of the beautiful Spanish girl, and they were married and removed to Fort Macrae.

Then commenced a honeymoon such as only lovers, shut up in a beautiful flower-environed fort, can have. The lovely character of the beautiful bride won the hearts of the soldiers of the fort, and she remained a queen among these rough frontiersmen. One day, when the love of the soldier and his lovely wife were at its height, the two, accompanied by the young wife's mother and twenty soldiers, rode out to the hot springs, six miles from the fort, to take a bath. While in the bath, which is near the Rio Grande, an Indian's arrow passed over their heads. Then a shower of arrows fell around them, and a band of wild Apache Indians rushed down upon them, whooping and yelling like a band of demons. Several of the soldiers fell dead, pierced with poisoned arrows. This frightened the rest, who fled. Another shower of arrows, and the beautiful bride and her mother fell into the water, pierced by the cruel weapons of the Apaches. With his wife dying before his eyes, Colonel Pelton leaped up the bank, grasped his rifle and killed the leader of the savage fiends. But the Apaches were too much for the colonel. Pierced with two poisoned arrows, he swam into the river and hid under an overhanging rock. After the savages had left, the colonel swam the river and made his way back to Fort Macrae. Here his wounds were dressed, and he finally recovered, but only to live a blasted life—without love, without hope, with a vision of his beautiful wife, pierced with poisoned arrows, dying perpetually before his eyes.

After the death of his wife a change came to Colonel Pelton. He seemed to think that he had a sacred mission from Heaven to avenge his young wife's death. He secured the most unerring rifles, surrounded himself with brave companions, and consecrated himself to the work of revenge. He was always anxious to lead any and all expeditions against the Apaches. Whenever any of the other Indians were at war with the Apaches, Colonel Pelton would soon be at the head of the former. One day he would be at the head of his soldiers, and the next day he would be at the head of a band of Mexicans. Nothing gave him pleasure but the sight of dead Apaches. He defied the Indian arrows and courted death. Once, with a band of the wildest desperadoes, he penetrated 100 miles into the Apache country. The Apaches never dreamed that anything but an entire regiment would dare to follow them to their camp in the mountains. So when Colonel Pelton swooped down into their lodges with ten trusty followers, firing their Henry rifles at the rate of twenty times a minute, the Apaches fled in consternation, leaving their women and children behind. It was then that there darted out of a lodge a white woman.

"Spare the women!" she cried, and fainted to the ground.

When the colonel jumped from his saddle to lift up the woman he found she was blind.

"How came you here, woman, with these Apaches?" he asked.

"I was wounded and captured," she said, "ten years ago. Take, oh, take me back again!"

"Have you any relations in Texas?" asked the colonel.

"No, my father lives in Albuquerque. My husband, Colonel Pelton, and my mother were killed by the Indians."

"Great God, Bella! Is it you, my wife?"

"Oh, Albert, I knew you would come!" exclaimed the poor wife, blindly reaching her hands to clasp her husband.

Of course there was joy in the old ranche when Colonel Pelton got back with his wife. The Apaches carried the wounded woman away with them. The poison caused inflammation, which finally destroyed her eyesight.

When I saw the colonel in his Texas ranche he was reading a newspaper to his blind wife while in her hand she held a bouquet of fragrant Cape jessamines which he had gathered for her. It was a picture of absolute happiness.

HOW A FASTING THIEF ESCAPED.

Peter C. Smull Feigns Foolishness in Order to Attain His Freedom.

The escape of Peter C. Smull, the fasting horse-thief, from the jail at Belvidere, N. J., was very cleverly managed. At 7 o'clock in the evening Sheriff Bowers found him very weak and complaining of pain in the stomach. The Sheriff then went down town on business.

Half an hour later Smull rattled at the door leading to the Sheriff's residence, and the call was responded to by Lizzie Bowers, a young lady of twenty summers. He asked her to get him some cigars. She refused, saying that none of the men were about. Ten minutes after this Smull again called Miss Bowers, and asked to have his coal-oil lamp filled. Smull's cell is in the old jail. Miss Bowers opened the door of the new jail adjoining to let John Price, colored, into Smull's apartment to fill the lamp.

By this time Smull, who stood inside of the door in his shirt-sleeves, put on his coat, a thin one, a Derby hat, furnished by a prisoner. Price passed in the door, and finding Smull ready, ran out, followed by Smull and Theodore Carling. Miss Bowers grabbed Smull, but he broke her hold, pushed her aside and soon joined the other prisoners on the street. Miss Bowers screamed for help. Her mother came and both stood in the hallway powerless with fright until too late to see which direction the prisoners had taken.

At the time of their flight a high wind and snow-storm prevailed, and the night was the coldest of the season. Smull was thinly clad, having on the clothing that he wore at the time of arrest, two months ago. The day before he escaped he moved about in his cell in a stooped position, and appeared hardly able to walk. When he ran from the prison he was as straight as an arrow, and appeared strong. His cell was visited by a reporter of the Easton Argus, who found everything in order and a lot of eatables on a stand. A small gold cake, brought to Smull by his mother four weeks ago, was found with the inside removed. The Sheriff is positive that this was all that Smull has eaten since he has been in prison. Carling was awaiting trial for highway robbery and Price was serving a sentence for larceny.

Plain Pastry for Mince Pies.

The secret of success in making pastry is to work quickly, in a cool room, and to keep the pastry as cold as possible. Even in making plain pastry only the best flour and butter should be used; the flour should be freshly sifted and the butter worked with the hands in plenty of cold water until it assumes a waxy appearance and touch; if it is worked quickly and lightly, it will not stick to the hands; when the butter is of the proper consistency it should be patted with the hands into a cake about an inch thick, wrapped in a floured towel and put in a dish set on ice in summer, or out of doors in winter, so that it may become quite cold while the paste is being prepared; allow half a pound of butter to a pound of flour. After the flour is sifted mix with it a teaspoonful of salt, and, with a sharp knife, chop into it one third of the butter; then quickly mix with it enough ice-water to make a dough which does not stick to the hands; the mixing may be done with the knife or the hand, but it must be done quickly; next, lightly flour a smooth pastry-board or marble slab, lay the dough on it and with a floured roller roll it out about half an inch thick; cut the rest of the butter in thick slices, and lay it upon the dough, with spaces of about an inch between the slices; dust flour lightly over the butter, and fold the paste over it in such a way as to completely inclose it; then gently roll it to the thickness of an inch, dust a little flour over it, fold it several times and again roll it out; if the butter shows anywhere through the paste, put it in a floured towel and cool it for about fifteen minutes; then roll it out, fold it and roll it again two or three times, and use it for pies. If the pastry is cold and the oven hot, the pie crust will be good when baked. If the crust browns before the contents of the pie appear to be cooked lay a piece of paper over it.

"THE TRAVELER ALONG THE highway a mile or so above the village of North Haverill, N. H., finds," says the Boston Journal, "a small graveyard which contains the remains of brave McIntosh, the leader of the Boston Tea Party. For seventy years spring flowers have blossomed and winter winds have blown over a grave unmarked by stone and known to but a few aged people now living who remember his burial. He fills a pauper's grave, having died in the vicinity of 1810 or '11, at the house of a Mr. Hurlburt, who resided at what is now known as the Poor Farm, and to whose care he had been bid off as a public pauper by public auction as the lowest bidder, according to ye ancient custom; and as recorded upon the town records. That he was the leader without a doubt there is abundant proof, and that to his memory should be erected a suitable monument commemorative of the man and deed would be simple justice."

The Rain of Fire.

November 13, 1833, is a date to be remembered. It was just about fifty years ago that there occurred in the United States a memorable "rain of fire" known as the great fall of meteors. Its greatest intensity was in the hour which brought daybreak; but it was an impressive and awe-inspiring scene from about 2 o'clock till broad daylight, and the exhibition was only ended by being swallowed up in the beams of broad day. It seemed a veritable rain of fire. The negroes of Virginia and other regions South were frightened nearly to death; every well was said to contain one or more negroes who had gone down by rope or bucket, to escape the "day of wrath and day of burning."

The tremendous spectacle frightened thousands of steady-going people hereabouts. But there was in reality no cause for fear. Our planet, in its swift flight, had brushed the skirts of one of the two vast meteor-streams whose orbits, one in August and the other in November, touch the orbit of the earth. The law of gravitation, aided perhaps by a little deeper than the customary mixing of orbits, chanced to produce, at that junction, a far greater shower of meteors than usual, and it fell chiefly upon that hemisphere that was most fully presented to the body of meteors. These appear to be bodies of various sizes, aggregated in a great stream, millions of miles long, and having an orbit, like any of the planets. The August stream is said to be 90,000,000 miles long, and the November stream is of unknown extent.

Owing to burning, caused by the friction which our dense atmosphere involves, to foreign bodies plunging through it at that tremendous rate, few of these so-called meteors ever reach the surface that are larger, when found, than an apple—or, perhaps (to continue the bucolic character of the comparison), a pumpkin. They are set on fire and burned up in falling—and most of them fall in the shape of unnoticed ashes, or "meteoric dust." Now and then a big one is found. Meteors weighing tons have fallen on the earth—and perhaps some that were of more stupendous dimensions than anybody now imagines. All have a semi-vitreous "iron-stone" character. Untold millions and quadrillions of metors were visible on fire, in the air, and falling in a rain of fire, in those dark hours before the dawn, on the 13th of November, 1883.—Hartford Times.

How a Brig Was Saved.

The brig Louisa Caipel, Captain Parker, of Yarmouth, N. S., arrived at Newport, after encountering the most extraordinary hurricanes and gales the captain ever knew. He thinks the vessel and all on board would have been lost but for the fact that he had a large cargo of fish oil.

The waves swept continuously over the vessel and finally the deck load began to slip, when he gave orders for a number of small holes to be bored in the casks containing the oil. While this was being done the men engaged were nearly swept overboard; but in a few minutes the oil trickled on the deck through the scuppers and into the ocean and almost as soon as the oil reached the water the waves were less boisterous, and in less than a half hour there was an unmistakable diminution in the force and number of the waves that broke over the ship. In an hour they had almost entirely subsided.

The chief mate says he has never before seen oil used but he is enthusiastic in the declaration that the fish oil saved the brig, cargo and crew.

Indignant Officers

The manners of the Prussian officer on parade leaves much to be desired. But it is seldom indeed that one hears of such language being used to soldiers and officers as was addressed the other day to the battalion which seems to constitute the entire military force of the Oldenburg Grand Duchy. Major Steinmann of the Prussian army had been sent to inspect the Oldenburg troops, and probably had been instructed to do his best toward bringing them up to the Prussian level. After reviewing the four companies, and finding the men deficient in smartness he called them "Oldenburg oxen." This insult went to the hearing of the Oldenburgers. The four Captains commanding the four companies comprised in the Oldenburg battalion waited upon the inspector and severally called him to account for his offensive words, when from each of the four Major Steinmann accepted a challenge. In the first encounter he wounded his man, on which the people rose in insurrection, and, rushing to the Major's house, attacked it and wrecked his property, so that to repress the riot the very troops who had been insulted had to be called out. In the second duel Major Steinmann was himself wounded in the shoulder; and, according to the latest news, he will, as soon as convalescent, be recalled to Berlin.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER.

FELT THE SITUATION.

A German farmer was on trial in one of the justice courts the other day for assault and battery, and had pleaded not guilty. When the cross-examination came the opposing counsel asked:

"Now, Jacob, there was trouble between you and the plaintiff, wasn't there?"

"I expect dere vhas."

"He said something about your dog being a sheep-killer, and you resented it, eh?"

"Vhell, I calls him a liar."

"Exactly. Then he called you some hard names?"

"He calls me a sauer-kraut Dutchmans."

"Just so. That made you mad."

"Oof course. I vhas so madt I shake all oafer."

"I thought so. Now, Jacob, you are a man who speaks the truth. I don't believe you could be hired to tell a lie."

"Vell, I plief I vhas pooty honest."

"Of course you are—of course. Now, Jacob, you must have struck the first blow. You see——"

The other lawyer objected, and after a wrangle the defendant turned to the court and said:

A TERRIBLE REVENGE.

"That was a very brilliant wedding last evening, and, by the way, the bride was an old flame of yours, was she not?"

"Yes, the fickle, heartless thing, as soon as that foreign count put in an appearance she jilted me."

"I see by the papers that among the wedding presents were ten magnificent clocks. Rather odd that so many different persons should hit on the same things for presents. But why are you smiling?"

"Ah! revenge is sweet! revenge is sweet!"

"What can you mean?"

"Don't breathe a word and I will tell you. I am acquainted with most of that cruel flirt's friends, and it so happened that nine of them, not knowing of my previous love, came to me for suggestions about a wedding present. I confidentially advised each of them to send her a clock, and afterward I added another clock myself. Ha! ha! the villain still pursues her! I am avenged avenged!"

"Mercy, man! are you mad?"

"Never was more sane in my life."

"Then how in the world can the presentation of ten valuable clocks constitute revenge?"

"Hist? Can't you see? She will, of course, put them in different rooms, and then will not have a minute's peace until she gets them to run together. She will begin by trying to regulate them herself. In six weeks she will be a raving maniac."—Philadelphia Call.

SHE WANTED A FIGHTING COURT.

"What's the trouble?" asked Justice Murray.

"That's an action for a Civil Court."

"A Civil Court, did yer say, Judge? When a woman throws stones through me winder when I ax her for me rint, is that civil?"

"Decidedly not."

"Thin what do I want wid a Civil Court. Sure, I want me rint."

"You will have to go to the Civil Court, my dear woman. I can do nothing for you. They will get your rent for you."

As the lady went away she remarked: "To the divil wid a Civil Court. Mrs. Houlihan threw stones in me winder, and sure it's the fightin' court I want."—Truth.

A tough old debtor in a town near the Hudson river entered a grocery the other morning, and stood for a long time looking at an exhibition of plug tobacco. The grocer felt certain that the old man wanted credit, and he determined to head him off. He therefore observed:

"I have to sell that tobacco for cash down!"

"You do, eh?"

"Yes, sir. Tobacco is cash on the nail."

"How's sugar?"

"That's cash."

"Tea and coffee?"

"Cash—all cash. Soap, molasses, candles, kerosene, butter, lard, potatoes, flour, rice, beans, starch—all are sold for cash."

The old man stood and looked over stock for five minutes, and then took a long step, and replied:

A case of trance has lately ended in Glasgow. A woman of 35 years of age had lain since June last in a state of coma, motionless, with closed eyes, a pulse of about 80 per minute, natural temperature, and normal breathing. Consciousness was entirely absent until, at the end of November, she suddenly awoke, and is now recovering her wonted strength. During her long sleep she was fed daily by a stomach tube. The case is well-nigh unique on account of its duration. These trances are the puzzle of the physiologist, and simulate death so closely that patients have been in danger of burial alive.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat's expedition into the Florida everglades, has accomplished its work of exploring the glades, and has returned. Maj. A. P. Williams, the correspondent accompanying the expedition, sums up his observations on the hitherto unexplored region, in the following words: "It is a vast marsh, interspersed with thousands of islands small in extent, and with few exceptions completely inundated, even at the time we explored them which was during a very dry season. On the islands that were out of water, there was but a few inches of soil covering the rocks. In my opinion their drainage is utterly impracticable, and even if it were practicable the reward for such an undertaking would be lands that could be utilized for no other purpose than as a grazing ground for stock. They are nothing more nor less than a vast and useless marsh, and such they will remain for all time to come, in all probability."

Turn The Rascals Over.

It is perhaps vividly remembered, by some or the readers of this paper, how certain deputy U. S. Marshals operated in this county last summer for the benefit of their own pockets. The Washington correspondent of the Montgomery Advertiser furnishes that paper with a report of the testimony furnished by Attorney General Brewster, to the House Judiciary Committee.

This testimony was furnished by the attorney general at the request of Col. Herbert, of the Montgomery district, whose object in obtaining it was to use the testimony in support of his bill to promote the administration of justice in United States Courts in general. A great deal of the testimony furnished was about the same as that obtained by agent Weigand in this county last summer, embracing charges for services not rendered and a fraudulent rendering of accounts. As to what punishment is to be meted out to these rascals, the Advertiser correspondent was silent. The following is an extract from the testimony elicited. Some of the names mentioned are familiar to our readers as those of deputies, in this, the middle district, who, however, have not been seen in these parts since last summer:

"J. F. James, who was an office deputy in Mobile, is a notorious drunkard, and utterly void of character. He is an ex-member of a chain-gang in Alabama. He was convicted as a common tramp in Mobile, and given 10 hours to leave the city.

Bock; and that he is satisfied that the evidence against Bass, Easley, Johnston, Meyers, Marshall, James, Bock, and the Olivers, is sufficient to secure their conviction before any fair jury."

The Brewton Banner says in regard to like troubles in Escambia county:

If the United States District Attorney is in need of evidence before the grand jury at the present term of the United States Circuit Court, respecting the official misconduct of those engaged to drumming up cases against inoffensive poor men of the laboring classes for depredations on public lands, Escambia county, from reports, furnishes ample material; for in this prolific field of their operations the eternal hills have cried out against the outrages committed by them while their craven appetites were feeding upon the Government's money and the scalps of the laboring classes, they furnish information on hearsay, extorted from their victims of prey or their self-appointed allies by promises of clemency. The reports remind one of the promises the Devil made to the Savior when he carried him up the mount and showed him all the kingdoms of the earth, offering all for his allegiance, while he (the poor Devil) had no control over a foot of the lands in the valley.

Credit, says the Savannah News, in an able editorial on the subject, is almost always dearly bought, even where the security is ample. Interest is a consuming fire that burns day and night, and the percentage is always increasing in proportion to the risks the creditor takes, and those who will pay are expected to cover the losses occasioned by those who do not.

[illegible] securing a charter from the national Congress more comprehensive than that granted to the Centennial of 1876, the National Cotton Planters Association of America, on the 24th of last April, located the World's Exposition and Cotton Centennial in the city of New Orleans, under a pledge from 1500 of its citizens that the sum of $500,000 would be raised to insure its success.

The citizens of New Orleans under the leadership of men of ability and prominence, have gone bravely into the enterprise and have subscribed the $500,000 required by their pledge; but, not content with this, the capital stock has been increased to $1,000,000, and this additional stock is now being rapidly taken. During this time the city government of New Orleans has not been idle, having made a direct appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of erecting a horticultural hall, besides having granted many municipal franchises of great value. When we remember that only about $100,000 was subscribed to the Atlanta exposition, and what that accomplished, we get a faint idea of what may be expected of this truly world's exposition.

Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, has a letter from W. A. Pierce, of Hervey, Dakota, warning the poor against emigrating to the prairies of that Territory. The writer says that men with money can find a better country in which to invest it. All this is brought out by the sufferings of the poor in the cold on the praries.

They had to saw the pipe off from a hydrant in Allentown, Pa., the other day to liberate a man who had tried to drink from the nozzle when the thermometer was near zero. With the piece of pipe sticking to his lips he was taken to a fire, and there the pipe fell.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Roscila Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promtitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

mr 8-tf J. M. CORDERIE.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and restore all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ring worm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

See administrator's sale of real estate by J. T. Mullins, administrator.

The Clanton postoffice has a new set of boxes, which is a considerable improvement.

Mrs. M. J. Bandy, of Jemison, visited her sister, Mrs. John Garner, in this place during last week.

Mr. Felix Ashley, a well-known Montgomery planter, and a most affable gentleman, has removed his family to Clanton.

Mr. O. R. Bell, of Verbena, will remove to Clanton shortly. He has purchased the Alfred Baker place and will farm.

Mr. John F. Armstrong, of Calera, has been visiting friends and relatives in the Macedonia and Pleasant Grove neighborhoods.

Mr. C. E. Watts, a good house painter, has a card in the VIEW. He does all kind of work in the painting line and does his work in the very best style. His postoffice is Verbena.

A Western paper says: "Sam Walden was shot last night in the rotunda by Harry Parsons." About the worst place a man can be shot, next to the heart, is in the rotunda. It invariably proves fatal.

Now is the time to subscribe for the county paper. Important elections are to take place during the present year, and it is the duty of every citizen to take an active part in the election of proper men to fill the office at their disposal.

Mr. J. L. Gartman has manufactured for the VIEW an exceedingly neat cabinet for curiosities. Contributions to it, especially of Chilton county rocks, fossils, and products, will be most thankfully received. Everybody can contribute something.

We learn through Mr. Seaborn Jones, of Lilly, that Mr. Wiley Foshee met with a serious and probably fatal accident on last Monday. A tree, which a son of Mr. Foshee was cutting, fell upon the latter, striking him across the chest. The unfortunate man was not expected to recover.

We have received a copy of the "Baptist Union," a monthly publication of the Baptists of Mobile. It is an exceedingly neatly printed and a very interesting paper. The terms of subscription are fifty cents a year. The proceeds to go into the treasury of the "Union" for beneficence only. Address all communications to the "Baptist Union," Mobile, Ala.

The citizens of this beat who are opposed to the selling of whisky at Clanton must not only vote against it, but must work in every honorable way to prevent such a calamity falling upon the community, and must endeavor to induce friends and neighbors to come to the place of voting and cast in a vote against whiskey and its long line of attendant evils. Every man and woman should work.

The Clanton Planing Mill

Messrs. Ternan & Haviland have their planing mill at work and are filling orders for dressed lumber from all points with promptness and satisfaction to all parties. This of itself speaks well for the enterprise. The firm have leased the entire lot in front of the Thorington House, and will pull down the old dilapidated barn-like structure which has so long been an eye-sore to that side of the road. They have a new Westinghouse engine and boiler just received from Pittsburg—the engine, which occupies a space of 24x30 inches, is twenty horse power. The planer is from Stepoe & McFarland, Cincinnati, and has the capacity to plane 10,000 feet of 4 inch strips per day. The building is 40x60 with a fire proof roof, and a watchman is employed to prevent fire and keep a general lookout at night. The mill is run by the experienced hand of Mr. J. A. Butler, and Mr. C. R. Hannon, is the lumber inspector. The total number of hands employed is seven. The proprietors will undoubtedly make a great success of the enterprise, situated as it is. Mr. Haviland will superintend and Mr. Ternan will continue to run his saw mill two miles east of Clanton. The former gentleman, will spend the summer traveling in the north in the interest of the two enterprises.

"Only Taking Christmas."

Christmas holidays have demonstrated the sad fact that prohibition in this or any other community does not prohibit its dram-loving citizens from ordering whiskey by express from other places. The novelty of seeing the maimed and the halt, who said they were "only taking Christmas," wore off with Christmas, yet the exhibition was not closed, strange to say, 'tis still liberally patronized. Madam Rumor has been in the "side shows," and says the atmosphere there is so somniferous that one clever man fell asleep while crossing the railroad; but fortunately his life was saved by a friendly hand, just before the train reached him. She also bears a sad record about some boys; one little fellow about twelve years old was found asleep on the roadside.

Ah, mothers and sisters! When the children are exposed to such temptations and examples, should we not make greater exertions to save them for the sake of him who affirms that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God"?

MIDA.

CALLIERVILLE, Jan. 10, 1884.

Complaints were made that papers sent out from this office the past two weeks and directed to Strasburg, failed to reach that office. On one occasion the package was thrown to the postmaster by the route agent from the train. It fell beneath the wheels and was torn up. Last week the package was not delivered at all, the presumption being that the route agent did not get the mail assorted in time to put it off at Strasburg, it being only a ten minutes run for the fast mail train between Clanton and Strasburg. The Superintendent of Southern Railway Mail Service was informed of the complaints and he replied that he would "settle" with the L. & N. route agent. The Superintendent has his headquarters at Atlanta, and he desires to be kept informed of all mail irregularities. From the tone in which he writes, we predict that our Strasburg subscribers will not have occasion to complain soon of not getting their papers, as a threatened financial calamity will probably cause his route agent highness to be more careful in future.

Washington Irving.

The writings of the most honored of American authors are at last made accessible to all readers, and in such varied and beautiful forms as to delight the most fastidious taste, and at prices so low as to be an astonishment to book-buyers and a consternation to book-sellers, of whom the "Literary Revolution" makes no account. As examples, we have "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," for three cents, "Wolfert's Roost," ten cents, "The Sketch Book" 20 cents, these in paper binding but large type; in neat or elegant cloth or half Russia bindings, his "Choice Works" are published at prices varying from 30 to 45 cents, and his complete works (excepting "Life of Washington") in the superb CAXTON EDITION, six volumes over 5,000 pages, choice typography, elegant binding, for only $4. Specimen pages or large, descriptive catalogue are sent to any applicant on request, and orders over $5 in amount are filled to be paid for after arrival and examination, on reasonable evidence of good faith being given. Address, John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey St., New York.

Mr. J. G. Langford, Mr. Thomas Howell, and Mr. Jason Harris are very ill. We hope they may soon recover.

Mr. J. T. Mullins has opened up a first-class store at this place. We think Mr. Mullins is a first-class business man, and we believe he will let the people hear from him in the way of an advertisement in the VIEW.

We think Jemison is the boss town of Chilton, it has eight stores. Our merchants are constantly receiving new goods, which is sufficient proof that they are getting a good trade. D.

The following liberal clubbing rates are offered to subscribers and those wishing to subscribe. The CHILTON VIEW and the Montgomery Weekly Advertiser one year $2.60; CHILTON VIEW and Louisville Weekly Courier-Journal $2.50. CHILTON VIEW and Texas Siftings $3.00; CHILTON VIEW and American Farmer $1.50.

Mobile is now being extensively talked about all over the country as the "Great Coal Market of the Future." The Panama Canal and the Florida Ship Canal will create a wonderful revolution in the trade of our Gulf ports, but none of them have so rich a harvest to reap as Mobile.

SCIENCE AND THE OYSTER

How the Bivalve Reproduces Itself.

Some Interesting Experiments with the Embryo and Infant Oysters.

[From the Philadelphia Record.]

The oyster has for many years, from its great excellence, claimed the attention of scientific men of all countries, and especially in this country have many interesting experiments been made. Professor Brooks, of the John Hopkins University, made the first successful attempt in the artificial impregnation of the eggs of the oyster. A single oyster lays about two millions of yellow eggs, which are found in the gills of the parent. They soon commence to move about by means of delicate mottle filaments that almost cover them, and then are hatched out as sailed fry. They are now independent—free swimming creatures, but shortly cease to rove about and attach themselves to the bottom, the shell, one-eighth of an inch in diameter, being easily discernible. At the end of the first year they reproduce, but do not attain their perfect size for three years. The incubation of oyster eggs is the great problem of the future, and in a few years, probably, the dealer can go to a hatchery and order 500,000,000 spat, more or less. The present difficulty is not in the fertilization but in keeping the young alive, and to this end experiments are being made in various parts of the world.

Another important question affecting the flavor and, consequently, the sale of the oyster is its food. Every epicure knows the difference between Blue Points, Shrewsbury and Virginia oysters, and the supposition is that their food is the cause of the difference. Professor Leidy, President of the Philadelphia Academy of Science, says that the oyster, probably, naturally feeds upon the zoospores of certain algæ, such as those of the sea cabbage (Ulva latissima). This, in his opinion, might give the animals the green color that they often possess, particularly in the soft parts. So many oysters have been rejected by buyers who were afraid of the green tint that the matter has been investigated by two French naturalists, who took perfectly white oysters and fed them upon water containing an abundance of a green microscopic plant (Navicula ostrearia), and they assumed the green, coppery hue that was supposed to be poisonous. Oysters are supposed also to contain the green coloring matter of plants called chlorophyl, found in a number of animals. The most careful tests were made chemically with the spectroscope and otherwise by various scientific men, and in no case was the green color traced to metallic matter or found in any way poisonous.

"Is it true," asked the skipper's companion, "that star fish roll on oyster beds?"

"I can't swear to it," was the reply, "but among fishermen it's a general belief that sea stars get together in bunches of four or five hundred and let the sea or ground swell roll 'em up shore onto the beds, where they break up and go for the fatten. They kill thousands of bushels of 'em every year. The way they work is to close over the shell and turn their stomachs inside out and suck the critter right in. They're one of the worst enemies the fatten have. It's astonishin'," he continued, "the number of eggs fatters lays and how few grows up. I heard a gentleman say that out of 1,000 fatters about 450 lays eggs, and any each laid 1,000,000, we'd have forty odd million young. But he said, on an average, only 400 or so of these grew to perfect size, so for every fatter as is eat over 1,000,000 gits killed."

Professor Mobius says the productiveness of the oyster is 7,000,000 times greater than that of man, but its capacity to mature 879 times less. The European oyster is far below its American cousin, and about England extremely rare. In 1870 a small bed was discovered at the mouth of the Thames, near Whitestable, about sixty feet long and twenty wide, and within forty-eight hours seventy-five vessels were anchored over the spot. The bed is now defunct. The beds of Cancale, on the Normandy coast, are yet rich, though the following figures show the same decline: In 1842 they yielded 63,000,000; in 1850 the number was only 16,000,000; in 1861, 9,000,000; in 1868, 2,600,000, and in 1868, 1,000,000. A saga for the artificial culture of oysters swept over Europe several years ago, promoted principally by Professor Coste, of Paris. In the spring of 1858 he distributed in the bay of St. Brieux shells and heavy fagots over a space of 1,000 hectares (one hectare equals 21.4711 acres), and on these spread 8,000,000 mother oysters. In the autumn all the fagots were, of course, covered with young oysters; for if these oysters were as fruitful as the Helstah oysters there were 120,000 young oysters to every square meter. The boldest expectations were exceeded. It was thought that now the means had been found to surround every French coast with oyster beds, and people already commenced to calculate, according to the price which oysters brought at that time, how many millions of francs would be yielded by this harvest of the sea. Capitalists went into partnership with fishermen and started artificial oyster beds, but the rich harvest of marketable oysters failed everywhere because the greater portion of the young oysters had been destroyed by quicksand or slippy deposit, by want of food or by enemies. At present the stocking and rearing of young oysters is only successfully carried on in a few places on the French coast which are favorable for this cultivation; on a large scale in the bay of Arcachon, south of Bordeaux. In this bay the young oysters produced by mother oysters on natural beds are caught on fagots, separated from them in October, and then placed in boxes and finally in artificial ponds. In these they are protected against enemies by wires or nets. Once or twice every year they are placed in water about ground, and care is taken that in the during the winter and warmest months they are covered by at least a proper confluence of water.

Arrived over the following men on an old man with a pass to ... and apparently rather mad at that. The train had apparently left the capital city while he was with the conductor's aunt, and asked if the next station was Livonia.

"No, sir; Livonia is fifty miles down the road," was the reply.

At Okonee the old gent asked the same question, and received about the same reply. At Williamstown he appealed to the passengers and refusing to be convinced he pushed his head out of the window and lost his hat. As the brakeman announced Fowlerville the old man suddenly stood up and asked:

"Did I understand you to say Livonia?"

"No, sir; Livonia is still beyond," was the reply.

He doubted it, and going out on the platform he got a cinder in the left eye and was presently unable to see at all. A kind-hearted man lent him a handkerchief; and when the train reached Howell he was able to run down the conductor and repeat his former inquiry.

"No, sir—no, sir!" sharply replied the official—"Livonia is still further on. Is your ticket for Livonia?"

"No; I'm going beyond."

"Then what are you so anxious about?"

"Well, the last time I come through Livonia there was a little red-headed man behind a pile of staves with a club in his hand, and just around the corner of a pile of shingles was a big bald-headed man with a rock in his fist. They was daring each other to come out, but the train hustled along before the climax come. I was kinder thinking, you know—that is, I was kinder in hopes that by the time we got there this morning the little red-head would have got his dander up 'nuff to sail in."

"How long ago was this?"

"'Bout six weeks."

"You'd better go off and soak your head!" snapped the official as he walked away.

"Yes, maybe I had," sighed the old man as he sat down. "I'd do it in a minit if I knew 'twould help my eyes We're gittin' clus down to Livonia now, and the way my eyes are I couldn't tell red-head from bald-head nor make out who was on top. I wonder where the soakin' place is on this ear."—Detroit Free Press.

A New Wheat Field.

Our Consul at Buenos Ayres believes that the Argentine Republic is to be one of the great grain-producing countries of the world. He estimates the wheat crop of this year at 19,500,000 bushels, more than half of which will be surplus for export, and adds that the surplus corn will amount to 5,000,000 bushels. The number of acres devoted to agriculture has more than doubled in the last six years, yet there are less than 2,000,000 acres under cultivation in the fourteen Provinces, out of 800,000,000, the greater part of the remainder being used for grazing cattle or sheep. The republic has a climate that ranges from the sub-tropical to that of Northern Canada. Experiment seems to prove that the pampas are remarkably fertile under cultivation and admirably fitted for cereal crops. Exploration in Patagonia has revealed rich meadows and valleys capable of sustaining millions of cattle and sheep. The fertility of these lands will make them hereafter, in the Consul's opinion, the granary and garden of the republic. Several settlements have recently been made on the Atlantic coast of the Province, and the inhabitants are raising wheat. We sometimes forget that Patagonia lies in the latitude of the northern half of the United States, while the climate of the more important Argentine Provinces is that of the United States below Mason and Dixon's line. The republic has only 2,500,000 inhabitants, and most of these are indolent and conservative. The number of immigrants increases annually, however, and the wealth of the country's soil and mineral deposits will certainly be developed in the course of time. It may be, therefore, that Consul Baker is justified in making the prediction that at some time, although not in the near future, the republic will contend with the United States for a division of the export trade in grain.

At West Point, once, General Sherman, accompanied by the Commandant of Cadets, was making an inspection tour of the barracks. He wasn't looking for contraband goods, but while in one of the rooms he got talking about his cadet days; and "When I was a cadet," he said to the Commandant, "we hid things in the chimneys during the summer months. I wonder if the boys do so still." (It was then in June.) So saying, he stepped to the fireplace and reached up the chimney. Rattling down at his touch came a board, followed by a frying pan, a bottle (empty), and a suit of citizen's clothes. The faces of the cadets who occupied the room was a study. But the General only laughed, and turning to the Commandant of: "This is an exceptional case, Colonel. No need of reporting these young men."

A CITY'S PEOPLE.—Scarcely more than fifty per cent of the population of Chicago was born in the United States. No less than 94,000 of the present inhabitants of that city have poured in from the various States of the German empire. The Bohemians number 18,000; the Canadians, 15,000; Danes, 3,100; French, nearly 3,000; Irish, nearly 30,000; Hollanders, nearly 3,200; Italians, 1,400; Norwegians, 6,700; Swedes, 16,000; Poles, 5,700; and Swiss, 3,000; with a sprinkling of Russians, Hungarians, Spaniards, Portuguese, and men of almost every other race and nationality under the sun.

TALES OF A STAGE ROBBER.

Some of His Experiences with Passengers in The Sierra Valley—Something Over Three Thousand Dollars Secured at a Single Haul.

The popular belief that it takes a brave man to rob a stage is rudely dispelled by John Marshall, a highwayman now in jail in Reno, awaiting trial for stopping the Sierra Valley stage and compelling the passengers to give up their valuables. Marshall is not a formidable-looking man, but he has nevertheless a reckless air about him that makes a man whom he threatens to shoot feel that he is likely to keep his word. Since his arrest, being reasonably certain that he will pass the next ten or twenty years in some prison, provided always that his career is not cut short by lynchers, he has devoted much of his time to entertainment of his adventures on the road. It is suspected, now that he is at bay, that he takes some delight in casting ridicule upon his numerous victims, but the opinion also prevails that there is some ground for it. Every man who has had experience with stage or train robbers shows the effects of his fight for years afterward.

"Talking about brave men," Stage Robber Marshall said one night in jail, "the idea that it takes a man of great nerve and daring to rob a stage is a great mistake. I can take the softest tenderfoot you ever saw, and after fixing him up in the right style so the people in the stage will know his profession the minute they set their eyes on him, I'll bet I can scare the life out of the best concord load you ever see. This notion that we hurt people or threaten to hurt them, and that we are rough and all that, is all nonsense. We just lay for the stage in a lonely place, and when the leaders heave in sight we level our guns and maybe fire a shot or two in the air to make the horses jump and rattle the driver a little. Then when all hands are looking out of the windows, with their eyes popping out of their sockets, we yell, 'Hands up!' Nine times out of ten that's all we have to say or do. The fellers in the coach get out of their own accord, and we just stand them up in a row, and while one of us holds a pistol the others go through their pockets and take what few little keepsakes they happen to have handy."

"Why, I've been in more'n a dozen hold-ups, and in only one case were there more'n two of us. When the things got into the papers, though, it was alway said there were a dozen fierce highwaymen, all armed to the teeth, and that they shot the stage and the passengers' clothes all full of holes. Why, a year ago last winter my pard and I was walking along the mountain road, not thinking of anything in particular, when along came a couple of tenderfeet in a carriage. Before we could catch our breath, one of them threw up both hands, knocking the other's hat off, and hollered, 'For God's sake: don't shoot!'

"Well, now, we hadn't any idea of shooting at all, and didn't know those fellers were in those parts; but when they sort o' reminded us of our business by commencing to unbuckle their watches and weasels, why, we just took them in charge, of course, and told the tenderfeet never to let us catch them on that road again for it was our'n. They thanked us so warmly for sparing their lives that I felt a little uneasy about it.

"I told my pard had robbed the Sierra stage three times now at the same place. I'll tell you how it was done. Pard had a Winchester and I had a pair of Colts in my belt, but the job was done every time with an old powder and ball pistol that had no load in it, and wouldn't have gone off if there had been one, for I didn't have any caps. Pard would fire his Winchester as close to the ears of the horses as he could without dropping them, and I would swing the old blunderbuss in the air and holler. Every time it happened just the same. The chaps climbed out, begging that there should be no bloodshed, and we would say there wouldn't be any if the yield was good, but that we would have to kill somebody if we didn't get enough to pay for our trouble. Every mother's son of them would give up things that we'd never have thought of looking for or demanding. There was only just my pard and I, but the passengers would think they could see some of our men behind every tree, and we'd holler once in a while some command to the boys in the woods to be sure and hit the right ones if they fired.

"Oh, Lord!" Marshall said with a prodigious laugh, "it breaks me up when I think of one feller who fainted dead away once. We'd just got them in a row good when this fellow's knees commenced to knock together, and he kept getting out of line. I finally thought I'd scare him and the rest of them a little, so I hollered, pretending to be giving orders to the boys hidden behind rocks and trees:

"'Boys, bore a hole in this galoot with the light overcoat on if he moves an inch, or any of the rest of them.'

"Just then a big feller, the second one from the limber-legged chap, had a chill like, and his teeth came together with such a noise that the other feller thought somebody was cocking a rifle, and with a whoop he dropped in a dead faint. The rest of them thought he had been shot dead. They were too scared to notice that there had been no report of a gun. Well, we came pretty near overdoing the thing that time. They all got so faint and sick that it was hard work to find their valuables. It is a great convenience to a stage robber to have the passengers hand their stuff right out.

"Speaking about weapons, why, I have robbed stages up in California and over in Utah without any weapons at all. You don't need any. I'll bet a nugget that I can take an old-fashioned tin candlestick and hold up the best stage load that ever came over the mountains. The driver is generally as badly frightened as any of them. He is always looking out for guards, and he never looks behind every bush. I have robbed them all alone, and made drivers and passengers give up their own, their employer's and money, and then throw it out. They thought I had any number of pards back in the rocks, and they didn't dare say 'peep.' Well, of course, that's the great advantage we have in our business. We adore them to begin with, and then they see everything double. One man is just as good as fifty in this line. He don't need to be a hero, either. He just wants a little nerve and an imperious air. If I had always worked alone I'd have been a rich man to-day, and I wouldn't be here either. I made my great mistake when I commenced working in partnership. It will ruin any man in my profession. If I ever get out of this scrape I'm going to jump the country. The business isn't what it used to be years ago. It's too easy. It makes me sick sometimes when I think of the tenderfeet I've robbed. I ought to have gone into the train-robbing long before this."

A Chinese Protest.

AN INDIGNANT PROTEST AGAINST THE ACTION OF FRANCE.

The Chinese government has addressed a circular letter relative to Annam to all foreign powers. The text of that document, recently delivered to Mr. Frelinghuysen, the Secretary of State, by the Minister of China at Washington, is as follows:

Annam has been a dependent State to the Ta Tsing dynasty for more than two hundred years, the ruler of the former sending tribute to the latter and receiving from the latter his investiture. Some twenty years ago, when the northern portion of Annam was disturbed by rebels, the Ta Tsing dynasty sent troops across the frontier to quell and disperse them. This occupied a space of upward of ten years and cost the government many millions of dollars in order to strenuously protect and defend the government of Annam. Now France invades that country without cause, and, availing herself of the opportunity of the death of its king, has enforced the Hue treaty, in which there is a provision that "China must not interfere with the government of Annam." This shows that France refuses to recognize Annam as a vassal to China. The foreign powers from these facts can with equity distinguish which government is in the wrong and which is in the right.

If France desires to maintain friendly relations with China, why should we not discuss the matter amicably? If she insists upon invading the northern part of Annam, where our troops are stationed, this indicates that she is determined to break the friendly tie, and our troops there cannot remain with folded arms, but must meet them in the field.

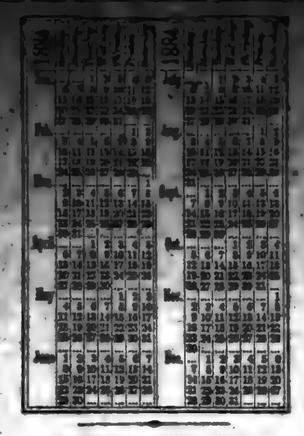
We, therefore, send this communication to all foreign powers, showing that in the event of the friendly tie being broken the cause of the rupture does not come from China.

An Orange Grower.

A letter in the Boston Transcript says: As luck would have it, during the war the Yankee found his way to Florida, saw the possibilities, and after the war was over returned to Florida and set himself to work to solve the problem of making some money out of the wild orange groves. He cut all the trees in the sour groves that were not wanted, and budded the stock with sweet fruit, which plan proved a success, fruit appearing in from three to four years. He quickly perceived the value of this and other fruits which need tropical sun, and set the boom agoing that has already attained immense proportions and is increasing annually. The orange may be called the staple product of Florida, so generally is it cultivated. Almost every enterprising planter has his grove, which is very tenderly cared for, as on this he expects to depend for a good income when it gets into bearing. Many groves are owned by non-residents, merchants, clerks, and even by mechanics who cannot afford to spend all their time waiting on an orange grove. Such persons hire their work done for a small sum, especially where they have not enough money to go and do all they want to do, such as build a house, etc. The grove is cared for by some of the residents. The orange tree is a very prolific bearer, seldom having an off year. Fifteen thousand oranges have been picked from a single tree in one season. This is very extra, however. The prosperity which Florida is enjoying is due largely to the push and enterprise of the Yankee. We have said enough about the orange tree for the present. We can tell you much about other trees, and what they will do in Florida, such as the peach tree (which ripens its fruit in early May), also the Le Conte pear, Japanese persimmon, strawberry, and other trees, grapes, figs, etc., but we fear we have already trespassed too much upon your valuable space, though you would be astonished if you knew how many there are who look eagerly for information on Florida. It has been our pleasure to already have posted many, and advised many to stay at at home, their funds being too small.

IT SEEMS STRANGE THAT an immense trade should be done in this country in importing eggs. One would suppose that the domestic farms of an immense country might produce enough for the consumption of the population, whereas last year no less than 168,000,000 eggs were imported. In 1880 the number of foreign eggs received at the Custom House was 110,000,000. In the following year it had increased to 140,000,000; last year 162,000,000 represented the number imported, and it is expected that this year's importation will reach the enormous total of 200,000,000. What are our hens at home doing?

IT IS currently reported that a rich young lady of Erie, Pa., is going to marry Hamilton McCormick, of Chicago. We deem it our solemn duty to inform the bride that her prospective husband is the inventor of a threshing machine.



He Had Been "Out West."

I had supposed that the far West was a new Garden of Eden, and that one had but to venture there to gain the wealth of a Monte Cristo. I met at the Union station a man whom I imagined was by this time a bonanza king, as he went Westward years ago. But if he is a nabob he is traveling incog., and his conversation is not calculated to stimulate Western excursions. He wore a shabby ulster, long hair and a pensive, searching expression of sympathy. He greeted me as an old acquaintance at once.

"Well," I queried, "how do you like the West?"

"I like it just well enough," said he, "to remain in the East the remainder of my days. I tell you, the East is good enough for any man who hasn't a life and death dispute with the law on hand. In the East a man above the average in smartness can get along; but go West and you find no drones. Every man you meet is on the dead run for wealth and you must stay up late, rise up early and bolt your meals to keep up with the stragglers in the procession. There's lots of money West, and big wages. I have just come from Colorado, where I got $10 a day for driving a mule team. But—"

"That is a very good salary for that kind of labor?"

"Oh! it is, is it? Well, you go out there and see. Why, my friend, I have paid $1.50 for a cup of coffee, $2.75 for a glass of beer, and $4 for a horn-handled jack-knife with one blade. I have been in the mountains with a party when a chew of tobacco was put up at a raffle, at a dollar a chance, and if the winner of the tobacco finally got away with it, he had to dodge the contents of the revolvers of the party and keep out of sight for a week. Talk about the West to me! It is a good place to die in; but I propose to live from this time out where the sun rises early, and there is no corner on the luxuries of life!"

The Country Doctor.

"Doctor, he's awake now."

The old doctor slowly lifts himself, unkinks his stiffened joints, kicks his legs out to straighten out his trowsers, shuts his big bone-handled knife, brushes the shavings from his shiny clothes, and goes to the bedroom. The sick man slowly turns his head toward the doorway, smiles sadly, puts out his long, white, bony hand to him and whispers hoarsely:

"Well, doctor?" which is a sick man's favorite form of asking how his doctor thinks he is getting along. The old doctor raises the blue paper curtain and slowly draws a chair close to the bed.

"Oh, you're looking ever so much better to-day. We'll have you out hoeing potatoes in a day or two."

Kind-hearted, warm old doctor! Dear old coward, who never fights disease, but surrenders at its first approach, and labors lovingly to smooth the way to death! Blessed old bungler, who gives no dying man the warning that would turn his latest hours to business cares and save his heirs a world of worriment.

Too Hasty.

Yes, some people are too hasty. Now a wealthy Chicago family charged a servant girl with stealing a diamond pin a year or two ago and the Court sentenced the culprit to three years in the Penitentiary. But recently, in moving a large plate-glass mirror, that diamond pin was found by a workman and handed to the mistress of the house, who sat down and wrung her hands and cried, and asked: "What have I done?"

Steps are being taken to release the prisoner, now that sorrow has put its lines on her face and bitterness has entered her soul. Yes, indeed, some people are too hasty.

MUMPS.—The Philadelphia Press says the theory that the intermarriage of deaf mutes will produce a race of deaf mutes doesn't rest on a substantial basis. They are mutes because they are deaf. The organs of speech and hearing exist as in other persons. The mute husband is deaf from one cause; the chances are that the wife is deaf from any other cause. The children of such a pair, owing to the rule of reversion and the tendency of nature to repair where there is the material to work a cure, are likely to hear as well as anybody, and, hearing, they will not be mutes.

CHRISTMAS EVE.

God bless the little stockings
All over the land to night,
Hung in the choicest corners,
In a glow of crimson light.
The tiny scarlet stockings,
With a hole in the heel and toe,
Worn by wonderful journeys
The darlings have had to go.

And heaven pity the children,
Wherever their home may be,
Who wake at the first gray dawning,
An empty stocking to see!
Left in the faith of childhood
Hanging against the wall,
Just where the dazzling glory
Of Santa's light will fall!

Alas, for the lonely mother
Whose home is empty and still,
Who has no darlin' stockings
With childish toys to fill!
Who sits in the swarthy twilight,
With her face against the pane,
And grieves for the little baby
Whose grave is out in the rain!

Oh, the empty shoes and stockings,
Forever laid aside,
Oh, the tangled, broken shoe-string
That will nevermore be tied!
Oh, the little graves at the mercy
Of the cold, December rain!
Oh, the feet in their snow-white sandals
That can never trip again!

But happier they who slumber,
With marble at foot and head,
Than the child who has no shelter,
No raiment, nor food, nor bed.
Yes! heaven help the living!
Children of want and pain,
Knowing no fold nor pasture—
Out to-night in the rain!

A CENTURY AGO.

An old brown leather-covered book, the leaves yellow, the writing scarcely legible, from time and decay—evidently an old, neglected MS. To the fire or to my private shelf? Which?

These were my reflections as I looked over the papers of my late uncle, the rector of a Somersetshire village.

I liked the look of the book and decided for the shelf; and I had my reward, for I found in the crabbed characters a simple story, evidently written toward the close of the writer's life. This story I now transcribe into a more modern style.

"He'll be fit for nothing," said my father; "an awkward booby who holds his awl and eats his food with his left hand."

So said my father, and so that I felt. I was awkward. I was fifteen; thick-set, strong, but terribly clumsy. I could not make a collar, nor sew a pair of binkers, nor stuff a saddle, nor do anything that I ought to be able to do. My fingers seemed to have no mechanical feeling in them. I was awkward, and I knew it, and all knew it.

"I don't know what he's fit for," said my father to the rector of the parish. "I've set him to carpentering, and he's cut his finger nearly off with an ax; then he went to the smith, and burnt his hands till he was laid up for a month. It's all of no use; he spoils me more good leather in a week than his earnings pay for in a month. Why cannot he, like other Christians, use his hands as the good God meant him to? There, look at him now, cutting that back strap for the squire with his left hand."

I heard him; the knife slipped, and the long strip of leather was divided in a moment and utterly spoiled.

"There now! look at that! A piece out of the very middle of the skin and his finger gashed into the bargain."

The rector endeavored to soothe my father's anger, while I bandaged my finger.

"You'd better let him come up for that vase, Mr. Walters; I should like a case to fit it, for it is very fragile, as all that old Italian glass is; and like it with the softest leather, please."

And so I went with the rector to bring back the vase, taking with me chamois leathers to bring it in.

We reached the house, and I waited in the passage while he went to fetch it. He came back with a large vase, tenderly wrapped in the leathers. Alas! at that moment there came from the room, against the door of which I was standing, the sound of a voice singing. A voice that thrilled me through—a voice I hear now as I write these lines—so clear, so sweet, so pure, as if an angel had revealed itself to me.

I trembled, and forgot the precious burden in my hands; it dropped to the ground and was shattered to pieces.

How shall I describe the rector's rage!

The voice hid its angel-wings—the door came out and I saw her. I forget the disaster, and spent appointed gazing at her face.

"You awkward moonshed! look at your work. Thirty pounds! fifty pounds! An irretrievable misfortune done irreparably in a moment. Why don't you speak? Why did you drop it?"

"Drop it?" said I, waking up. "Drop what?" And then it flashed upon me again, and I remembered only, "The singing!"

"And for this," was there ever such a terribly stupid blockhead? There, go home at once, do not stay another hour in my house, do, before you do any more mischief, and tell your father to come to-morrow and pay for the vase."

My father paid for the vase, and I was sent to school at Bristol. I was glad to go, for I was ashamed to look my father in the face after my disgrace. I knew I was awkward, and I knew I was stupid, and I was glad to go where I was not known.

I remained at school for two years, and I was happy. I was not remarkable for anything, and I was not remarked. I was not good at my books, and I was not good at my games. I was a mere cipher, and I was glad to be a cipher.

I was enthusiastic, but I was poor. I wanted an instrument of my own, but had no money and I earned none—I could earn none.

"Sam, my boy," said the cobbler, one day, "you shall have an instrument, and your father shall buy it for you, or the whole parish shall cry shame upon him."

"But he don't know a word of this," I said.

"Never mind, Sam, my boy, he shall be glad to know of it," and he told me his plans.

[illegible] for the choirs of neighboring churches to help each other, and it was arranged that the choir of our parish should play [illegible] and his choir should come [illegible]

"And you, Sam," said he, "shall take my place at your own church; and, please God, you do well, you shall [illegible] day I shall leave Bristol, my boy, and your mother and father will say so, too."

The evening came; and there, in the dimly-lit gallery, I sat waiting, with my master beside me [illegible]

[illegible] a great risk; it's getting very full. There's [illegible] but you must come in. Keep your eye on my bow, and just when you're in the full tide, [illegible] a bit of leather to help you." And he gave a piece of [illegible] a question could count the [illegible] I [illegible] account of it revived you! [illegible] the vestry [illegible] back to me [illegible] If I were [illegible]

[illegible] came at last, and service began. Oh, that night! Shall I ever forget it? [illegible] trembling looks of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CLANTON, ALA., JAN. 31, 1884.

The Birmingham rolling mill operatives have struck, and the mill is now working very irregularly.

Birmingham has organized an association to help the poor. Birmingham gets her finger in every pie.

A resolution has been introduced into the Virginia State Senate requiring Senator Mahone to resign his office as U. S. Senator from that State.

The proclamation for the sale of public lands at the city of Montgomery on Thursday, the 31st inst., has been revoked by order of the President.

The case of the State vs. Fred Wolffe is in progress in the circuit court at Montgomery. Wolffe is charged with complicity in the Vincent defalcation. The Advertiser thinks that the trial will be a long one.

Rev. Joseph Cook says there are only five respectable newspapers in the United States, and the editor of each of the thousands of newspapers gets off a good and intensely original thing by inquiring "which are the other four!"

The State Democratic Executive Committee is called to meet on February, 14th, for the purpose of fixing the time for holding the State Convention, and for attending to such other business as may be brought before it.

Col. Herbert, of the Montgomery district, has a bill before congress limiting the number of congressmen to 350 perpetually. The number is now 325 and the next apportionment will add largely to this, unless some such law as Col. Herbert's is passed.

There is poetry and there's beauty in real sympathy; but there is more, much more in action. The noblest and most powerful form of sympathy is not merely the responsive tears, the echoing sigh, the answering look: it is the embodiment of true sentiment in actually helping the party in distress.

Mr. Talmage last Sunday admitted nearly fifty persons into his church. The Brooklyn Tabernacle now has a larger church membership than any other church in the United States, a distinction which has heretofore been held for many years by Plymouth Church. Talmage is now ahead of Beecher by several hundred.

It is thirty years since our government began to legislate against the Mormons and the question is no nearer being settled now than then. Plan after plan has been tried and abandoned, law after law has been put upon the statute books to suppress their peculiar institution, and still the Mormon boldly marries whenever he feels like it.

Mrs. Rebecca Ballard, of Miller, Jefferson county, Nebraska, wants information of her son, Allen Ballard, aged 15 years, who ran away from school in August last, and when last heard from was with H. Barrett & Co.'s Railroad show, somewhere in Alabama. Any information concerning this show or the lost boy will be gratefully received by the afflicted mother. Other Southern papers will please copy.

The Montgomery Bresse says that it is probable that Wesley Posey will not be hung. It has become so customary for criminal cases to go through the courts, then for a new trial to be granted, that it is actually thought that a man has not been fairly tried if all this routine is not gone through with each time. Posey had a fair trial here and has started on the trial route through the courts, and he may be acquitted, but the probabilities are that if he is turned loose in this county he will be hung.—Birmingham Chronicle.

A French medical journal cannot understand why English people should be opposed to vivisection. The editor insists that it is now the practice of fashionable people in England to have the tails of pet dogs nicked and beat upward into the form of a bow, the circle becoming permanent as soon as the cuts have healed. He had seen Britons carry their dogs by the appendage cited, "just as they would a flatiron," and mentions an instance where a man, "wore his dog as a sort of charm, depending from his watch chain."

A correspondent of the New Orleans Times-Democrat writing from Tuscaloosa on the subject of politics in Alabama says in regard to Governor O'Neal's renomination: "Six months ago it looked as though the tide had turned against him; but since that time there has been a perceptible change in the situation. All men—be it said to the credit of our race—like fair play. Two months ago an unwarranted attack was made on the official integrity of the governor, and had the effect of producing a revulsion in public opinion and of arraying some of his several critics among his most zealous defenders. The fact however, that the people of Alabama almost with one voice repudiated the charge against the governor's integrity is by no means a proof that they are going to give him a second term in office. He may still have very serious opposition, but some well informed politicians think that the chances of a renomination are largely in his favor."

The same writer says of the other state officers: "The public has been so absorbed in the overshadowing question as to the gubernatorial succession that there has been thus far little or no speculations as to the other positions on the democratic state ticket Major Ellis Phelan—by the way, one of the most popular officials that Alabama has ever had—having served but one term as secretary of state, will be renominated, in all probability, without opposition; and Treasurer Smith appointed by the governor after Vincent's flight will no doubt be given another term, if he will take it. The other officers of the state government having each served two terms, have given the public notice that they will not ask for another. This makes room for a free fight and a lively time in the state convention."

Hunt up your old valentines, and have them ready.

A social hop at the hotel the evening of the 22d. A merry time.

Our merchants are now prepared to meet the spring demand for farming implements.

Prof. Acree has organized a debating society in connection with his school.

Improvements are still going on.

Mrs. Davis is improving her premises, and Major Gibson is building another house in the suburbs of our growing little city.

Rev. J. L. Thompson received, as a Christmas present from a young member of his Deatsville charge, a beautiful acrostic nicely painted and framed. Justice to the modest young night operator at Deatsville constrains us to acknowledge the poetic merit of his production.

Thursday and Friday of this week will be devoted to public review exercises at the Verbena Academy.

The article in last week's VIEW headed "The Whiskey Traffic" is full of convincing argument. Read it before you vote against prohibition.

Jumping is now the favorite pastime of our boys.

Important to Taxpayers.

Auditor Carmichael has issued a circular to tax collectors of the utmost importance to them and the taxpayers. The following is the main point in it:

I shall require you to make your final settlement, at least by the 15th day of May next. You now have more than five months in which to complete your work, and can in that time comply with all the forms of law in collecting the taxes even if you sell lands, and complete the work, I trust and believe you will do it. Tax Collectors during my administration, have voluntarily been more efficient and prompt in the discharge of their duties, than the like class of officers have been during any administration since the war. I trust they will continue to be so.

Very respectfully,
J. M CARMICHAEL, Auditor.

The Eufaula Times says: There is no more magnificent sign of the south's advance than the presence in numbers among us of what is so distinctively called "working girls." The time was, and there are few of us who do not remember it, when "working girls" was a term of reproach, and the thought of a girl or woman working for a living to be entertained only with horror. But happily, and God bless them for it, the working girl, the working woman, the working boy and the man have become the only true titles of American nobility.

Cullendale Dots.

Our society, this dreary winter, has been brightened by the presence of Miss Annie Callier, an amiable lady, who is visiting her good uncle here, also by the merry Miss Tinie Crum, and her fine-looking cousin, Mr. Moore, both from Selma, who occasionally visit relatives here.

A U. S. deputy marshal, too, spent several days with the Doctor. He was afflicted with rheumatism.

Mr. E. G. Adams, one of our enterprising merchants, was confined to his room for a week, with catarrhal fever. We are glad to learn that he is now able to walk out.

Mr. Wyley King is dangerously sick, in consequence of exposure to rain and cold. His distressed family have our sympathies. Miss Sallie Crum came here last fall with chills, she is now trying the atmosphere of Selma. Colds and coughs are prevalent this cold, damp weather. Our dear children are having a hard time with whooping cough. Dr. Callier has calls from every direction for ten miles around.

Mr. Pritchett killed two deer a few days ago. Wet weather allows farmers time to hunt and game is not scarce.

Last, and worst of all the dots, they say that a gentleman contemplates establishing a whiskey shop, just beyond the limits of prohibition—three miles from Dixie.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promptitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Further will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all these secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ring-worm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

The prohibition election will take place in beat six next Tuesday, and the Tuesday following is the day for the election in this beat, No. 4.

Mr. J. P. Allen, of Jemison, visited Clanton, on Monday. He has numerous friends here, who are always glad to see him.

The Spring term of Chilton Circuit Court convenes on Monday, March 31st, and the Spring term of the Chancery Court on Friday, April 11th.

Mr. W. F. Smith, land agent of the L. & N. railroad, did not visit Clanton last Saturday, as advertised. He expects to be here next Saturday, March 2d.

Mr. G. W. Deramus, of Jemison, was prostrated with an almost fatal attack of heart disease, on Sunday last. He was considered convalescing at last accounts.

Calera has again voted whiskey away from her doors. Clanton must do likewise on the 12th of February. Calera is alive to her own interests. Clanton had best be likewise.

We learn through farmers who have visited this office during the past week, that the cold weather has injured the wheat crop of this section considerably and that the oat crop has been entirely destroyed.

Dr. A. Jackson offers his services to all who have bad teeth. Extracting, filling and sets of teeth done in the best of workmanship. I will be in Clanton some 10 or 12 days. Orders left at Dr. Lanier's Drug Store.

Sheriff John Garner is just now telling everybody he meets about a blooming girl baby which has arrived at his house. He is making all the fuss now. The young lady will probably be able to assist him [illegible]

It now turns out that the returned soldier, James A. Parker, has a wife in North Carolina. This was learned last Monday, when the postmaster received a letter from this wife number two, inquiring about Parker. She said he also had several children there, the eldest being thirteen years of age.

Mr. S. A. Blasingame had the misfortune to have his horse drowned in Shade's Creek, near Birmingham, one day last week. Horse and wagon were driven into the creek by a negro driver, who was returning with them to Clanton. Both horse and wagon were lost, the creek being very high. The driver saved himself.

An election has been ordered in beat No. 2, this county, for March 4th prox., to vote upon the whiskey question. This is the Jamison and Clear Creek beat. The citizens of Jemison are to be congratulated upon the fact that no matter how the election goes, no whiskey can be sold within three miles of Jemison church, by an act of the Legislature incorporating said church.

The Shelby Chronicle claimed some weeks since that Shelby was ahead of every other county in the State in the general prosperity of its people and based its claim on the scarcity of Sheriff's sales in that county. It is gratifying to know of this prosperity of our neighbors, and we can mention the fact that there has not been a Sheriff's sale advertised in these columns since last fall. How is that for Chilton—the pine hill country.

We publish the following to give our readers the benefit of the information it contains, and for the consideration of any parties interested:

PICKENSVILLE, ALA., Jan 21.

ED. CHILTON VIEW:—In my business as real estate agent, I am sometimes asked about counties where no whiskey is sold, and have given Chilton as one, but in a clipping from your paper, I see you mention that while no whiskey is sold in Clanton beat, that it is in some parts of the county. Am I correct?

Some of the best men who are coming south to make their future home are opposed to whiskey, and do not wish to settle in a county where it is sold. If any of your people think whiskey an advantage to a county, they can get fine land here in exchange for land in Chilton, if no whiskey is sold there or likely to be. Please give me full information.

Yours truly,

C. C. L. DILL, Real Est. Agt.

Miscegenation.

John Selman, Jr., a white man, and Emily Whatley, a mulatto woman, were brought before Judge Callen, on Tuesday. About a year ago, Selman applied to the Probate Judge of this county for a marriage license, and it being known that the woman was a mulatto, the license was refused. The couple went to Selma, and were refused a license by the Probate Judge of Dallas. Still persistent, they succeeded in obtaining a license in Marion, where the marriage ceremony was performed. The couple have been living near Dixie, in this county. They were arrested last week on a warrant from Perry. A hearing was given them on Tuesday, upon a writ of habeas corpus before Judge Callen, and they were bound over in the sum of $250 each to appear at the next term of the circuit court. They had not made bond yesterday and were still in jail. The mother of the woman, who was present at the trial, has features of copper hue, while her daughter is possessed of a complexion about the color of a ruta-baga turnip, and could easily pass herself among strangers as a representative of the Anglo-Saxon race. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Probate Judge of Perry.

From Strasburg.

Plenty of cold weather since Christmas, which has been the cause of an abundance of sickness and some deaths; but nothing serious at present.

Oat crops have been destroyed in this comunity by the cold.

Married, at the residence of the bride's father (Mr. David Mason) in Shelby Co., on the night of the 10th of Jan., by Rev. Marion Jones, Miss Madord Mason to Mr. J. D. Heath. The newly married couple have moved to Strasburg, where we wish them all the happiness and good luck possible.

A Japanese correspondent of the London Daily News having assumed that the Mikado was unpopular because he received no cheers while passing through the streets in state on his birthday, a Japanese gentleman writes to explain that cheering would be regarded there as disorderly. He further explains that the act of a young lady who wrapped up a piece of cake and put it in her sleeve at the Foreign Ministers' reception is quite "good form," and is accepted as an indication of a high satisfaction which she wishes to enable those at home to share.

"A professional man with a good business" writes to an English paper that he has recently apprenticed his son, 16 years old, to a builder. "Of course," says the father, "he has to work at the bench and go out on jobs, but he is happy and his time well employed. When he is 21 he will have become master of his trade, and, being an educated lad and sharp to boot, a very few pounds would start him in one of the colonies on the high road to competency. "The silly pride of parents," he says, "is the chief drawback to their sons' success in life."

"Gentlemen," said the professor to his medical students assembled in clinic, "I have often pointed out to you the remarkable tendency to consumption of those who play upon wind instruments. In this case now before us, we have a well-marked development of lung disease, and I was not surprised to find on questioning the patient, that he is a member of a brass band. Now, sir," continued the professor, addressing the consumptive, "will you please tell the gentlemen what instrument you play on?" "I blays der drum," said the sick man.

There is no doubt that Mr. Thos. J. Scott, Register of the U. S. land office, at Montgomery, is one of the best and most competent officers that has ever filled the position under radical regime, and it is to be hoped that he will be continued in the position so long as it is to be filled by a Republican.

A LONG WAY FROM HOME.

THE MAINE COLONY IN JAFFA.

One of the Five Survivors Given to Hotel Hunters—Harriman Runs Across the Arabs.

[From the Lewiston (Me.) Journal.]

Our Maine boy-guide, Willie, has a mother, a widow, whose husband has died since the Maine colony came to Jaffa. Willie escorts us to the suburbs among countless, stone houses, with flat masonry roofs, supported by heavy stone arches—many cells. There are numberless dogs under foot and a hot sun overhead, against whose rays we protect ourselves with umbrellas. We enter a low door-way and see an elderly woman sitting in a Yankee rocking-chair, in a cool, stone apartment, with a stone floor.

"Here are Mr. and Mrs. ——, from Maine, mother."

"Bless your dear souls! Take off your bonnets; I'm awful glad to see ye. Never had a call before from Maine visitors. We're down-easters, you know—from Jonesport, Maine. But ill-luck has befitted us ever since, many years ago, the Maine colony came to Jaffa. You remember after we came we had a tent on the beach in the heat; then the Arabs cheated us most unmercifully; then we began to cheat one another—these were goats among the sheep. Strong drink did our people much mischief. But then it was a noble idea to restore Zion to God's people. I try to live here like a Christian. I tell my Arab neighbors not to steal. I teach them good morals and cleanliness; and now I go away and leave my doors unlocked; but nothing is ever touched in my house; I live among the Moslems and I like 'em—they're kind and hospitable—better behaved than many who call themselves Christians in Jaffa."

There are many manners and customs in the east of to-day suggestive to the Oriental customs in the Bible times. Let us hear Mrs. Alley's account of one of them:

"My neighbor made a contract of marriage for twenty napoleons four months ago. Since then he has given as much as four more in presents to the mother of his intended bride to keep them to their bargain. That is the custom here among the Moslems, and the Christians are not much better. Last month he wished to get married. He is a poor man, and did not have much money by him, but he paid down, before witnesses, fifteen napoleons, and her father told him he should have his bride the next week. The poor man went to Jerusalem to buy the candles to illuminate his bride when he took her home. Meantime comes the bride's mother to our place and stands under my window. I ask her to come in. She thanks me, but will not. Neither will she sit down until after great persuasion. Then comes the bridegroom's mother. 'What is it the bride's mother asks?' 'Your son thinks to marry my daughter. Does he think I am nobody?' or 'Am I a slave to his father,' and similar expressions. The bridegroom's mother all this time is saying: 'Oh! you are the blessing to my house, I have no other blessing but you on earth.' She says this to avert the evil eye from her son. The other continues to say that the marriage shall only take place at the time and place that she [the bride's mother] shall say, and that her girl is too young to marry. I say, 'You ought to have thought of that before.' We talk her down to tears, and then she sits down, talks the matter over and goes away, the other still repeating, 'I have no blessing, only from you.'

"After two or three days, the young man comes from Jerusalem, bringing candles; two as tall as a man, and two flat, short and wide, called 'hands,' for the bride to take in her hands when she comes out on the night of her marriage. Now the young man begins to rave and say they may take their girl, he won't have her. 'Is there no other in Jaffa but her?' 'No, he won't have any one to make all right with his mother. Then he goes to the bride's mother and carries her something nice to eat to make her pleased with him, but he cannot see the bride until they are married, as it is not considered proper with the Moslems to speak with a girl before her marriage. The poor man is now waiting impatiently until such time as they are well satisfied to say 'take her.' Then he will pay the other five napoleons [$20] and call in the neighbors to make merry with him. Some will bring drums, others the shibbabeh, or shepherd's pipe, to make music or they dance, sing, and clap their hands, the women by themselves, and the men apart from them, in another room or on the house-top. They keep this up three days.

"On the afternoon of the third day the friends of the bridegroom [now he will have many] take him to the bath, and he must pay all the bills for them. From there they take him to the mosque to pray. By this time it is 8 o'clock in the evening, and they take him, a man to each arm, and lead him backward with his eyes shut. He must walk that way home, no matter how long the time or the road is. The longer the time the better it will be for them to prepare the bride.

"On the third morning the bride is taken to the bath; from there she is taken to the place where she is to be given to her husband. When there, they paint her feet, hands, and other parts of her body, and dress her in seven different dresses, one after the other, to see in which she will look the best. Now, guns are being fired, and there is shouting and screaming. Here comes the bridegroom. They come with bands, on long poles, guns firing, drums beating; one would think it was war time instead of a marriage. The bridegroom is led in backward with his eyes shut. They set up the tambari, reading harps, and all kinds of fights around him to make a great show. Now the bride comes in, led by two women, with her eyes shut and her head covered with a red lace veil. She must walk slowly with her needle in her hand. One woman carries one of the long candles before her and another carries the other behind her, so she can be seen from all parts. The first time she comes in her husband must not open his eyes, look at her, take the veil from her head, and hang it over his shoulder. She stands there an enlightened bride. Now she goes out to dress, and comes in again, partly all the same as the first time. Then they put two chairs for the bride and bridegroom to sit down in. They sit down and talk together if they can, not too bashful. But they do not sit long, for it is getting late. The bridegroom arises and takes his wife by the hand and leads her to the door of their chamber. Their mother puts a piece of dough over the door. They thrust their hands into the dough in token that they are one. Then they go into a well-lighted room, and the bridegroom's mother shuts the door. The next day the people call on the bride and carry her presents of money and sit with her. She treats her guests with coffee, the nargileh [water pipe], and cigarettes. The ceremony is ended."

Mrs. Alley then came down to current news: "The people of this land are indolent and slow to work; slow in everything but stabbing. Give them a chance to steal and they will not stop to eat or sleep, but will work fast then. While my neighbors here don't steal from me, the Arab, as a rule, is a thief. Mr. Floyd and wife, Mr. Ward, and two or three more are all there are left now of the Maine Jaffa colony. I go out among my Arab neighbors. When they are sick they send for me and I go. I said to myself before God that if these Arabs are converted to Christianity it must be by being good to them. I am not perfect, by any means. One thing I've got that's very wrong—I've got too much temper. I was thinking the other day that I should like to see somebody from my old home. Isn't it queer you should come?"

Willie gives us the full census of the survivors of the Maine Jaffa colony as follows: Herbert Clark and family (Frank, Mary J., and sister, and the mother, Ellen); Arthur Leighton and daughter and son, and Melville Ward—four families.

Washington's Love Affairs.

Warlike sentiments on certain subjects still lingered in the heart of Washington on that peaceful morning one hundred years ago when he resumed possession of New York city. As he crossed Spuyten Duyvil Creek and made his way upon the island the night before he received a message to tarry, as Sir Guy Carleton was not yet embarked. So he directed his steps to a great imposing wooden house on Washington Heights, still standing and known as the Jumel place.

This house twenty-seven years before had been his Mecca. Here he courted the beautiful and wealthy Mary Phillipse; here for weeks he lingered in the light of her blue eyes; here he left her at her father's till he could hurry off and capture Fort Duquesne and come back, and here at that fatal interval came Captain Morris and captured Mary Phillipse and married her before Washington's return. It was an awful lesson to the father of his country and he resolved never to be caught out again in matters of that kind.

It was the second blow; first the lowland beauty, Miss Grimes, afterward mother of the Lee family, and then the faithless Mary. He had somewhat recovered from the jilting on this peaceful morning I speak of, for the Morris family had largely multiplied by this time; but the spot was still sore. Tradition has it that he went over and sat again in the Phillipse parlors and meditated.

"Where is your master?" he inquired of a darkey on the porch, concerning his former rival.

"He goned wid the British, sah, wen de wah fust brnk out," said the humble servitor, "an' missus she is crost de ribber and is very porely, sah, and mahes be was shot wen he was takin' Fote Moldetree down in Carliny, fo' years ago."

The visitor knew that well enough, but he was fond of hearing it over again.

"And, mahsa, dey du say dat all this great fine estate heah is gwine to be cornfiscated by the devilish rebels. Dat can't be, sah."

Washington evaded the question. But a year later the great fine estate was confiscated and sold to Jumel by the Government and Washington does not seem to have interposed to save it for Mary and the babies.

He ought to have been grateful to her for teaching him such a noble lesson, for he learned it so well that when Martha Custis dawned on him he just sat down by her and didn't let her get away from him. But she was a widow and perhaps didn't want to get away.

Getting Even With Them.

Theatre Patron—"The grand opera this week rather knocked your attractions, did it not?"

Manager—"Yes; the attendance has been very slim."

"What will you do about it?"

"I cannot do anything now except pocket the loss, but I will soon have my revenge."

"Indeed, how will you manage it?"

"You know that grand opera company will soon open in New York?"

"Yes."

"Well, on the very day the opera season commences I will go over there and start a counter attraction which will leave the opera house as empty every evening as a discarded dry goods box."

"You don't say so. What will your counter attraction be?"

"A goldfish tournament of 5 days' going length. I have the festival ready."—Philadelphia Call.

A young man out in Waupun, Wis., organized an amateur corps. At last accounts he was still half a mile ahead of the inhabitants, but things looked quite encouraging, as he was very much out of breath.

"LITTLE ABE."

How One Who Enlisted in the Army at the Age of 7 Years.

The following facts were given by a gentleman who served through the war and in the company with "Little Abe," who is believed to have been the youngest person enlisted. The gentleman could not recall the name of the lad, who was known in the army as Little Abe, and who enlisted at Jefferson barracks, a short distance from St. Louis, Mo., May 1, 1861, as a drummer at the age of 7 years and 1 month. He belonged to Company E, Second United States Infantry, Captain, afterward Maj.-Gen. Steel. The reasons which influenced the acceptance of so young a recruit was that his father was in the service and his mother dead. There were no relatives who could or would look after the boy, and so, with the consent of the army authorities, he was put with his father in the army.

Little Abe was a favorite with both officers and men. He displayed at all times the coolest bravery and utter ignorance of fear. His favorite position was in the front rank in battle, and as soon as he saw a soldier fall disabled he would throw away his drum, seize the musket of his fallen comrade and load and fire as coolly as the most hardened veteran, although his diminutive size and strength did not allow him to elevate the gun without some kind of a rest. In the early part of his army experience, at one of the battles when the Union forces found it necessary to take up a position in the rear, Little Abe got possession of a gun, and when the army was forced back, his drum was captured by the Confederates. He was reprimanded and told that when retreating if he could not carry it with him he should destroy it. Ever after this when in battle he saw a chance to get a gun he smashed in the heads of his drum, and then devoted his whole time to his preferred employment of popping at the Rebs. At the close of a skirmish one day he was found crying. Somebody inquired what troubled him, and received an explanation to the effect that he had been unable to find any gun not in use, so he had been unable to have any shooting. The men of Company E wanted to fit him out with a rifle made in accordance with his size, but the desire was not granted, as according to the regulations he must carry a drum. Little Abe passed through the war without receiving a wound, although always in the front rank and in many engagements. Of his career since then nothing is known to the writer.—Boston Globe.

A Remarkable Case.

The Dwight insurance suit, which was ended recently at Norwich, N. Y., by a verdict against the Germania Insurance Company, is one of the most remarkable civil cases ever tried in court. Had its incidents been narrated in fiction they would have seemed too improbable for belief.

Dwight was a prominent citizen of Binghamton, who had been a colonel in the war, had held public office and had been engaged in various business enterprises on a large scale. In the summer of 1878 he became a bankrupt. About this time he applied for upward of three hundred thousand dollars' insurance on his life in twenty odd companies. His application was refused by several, but he succeeded in getting his life insured to the extent of two hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

Soon afterward his death was announced. One or two companies paid the claims against them; others refused to pay. Against one of the latter the suit that has been on trial for about a month in Norwich was brought by the executors.

The theory of the insurance companies was that Dwight had taken out an enormous amount of insurance for the benefit of his boy and other relatives, and with the deliberate intent to commit suicide. There was but one known witness of his death, and it was claimed that Dwight had hanged himself after arranging with this man to destroy all evidence of the act. An autopsy was made immediately after the death, and long after burial the body was exhumed and a coroner's inquest held. The testimony of the physicians and other experts was conflicting. By some it was found on the neck was attributed to the pressure of a cord and death to strangulation; others gave the opinion that this mark had been caused by the position of the head and that death was not due to violence.

The companies also offered evidence of extraordinary conduct on the part of Dwight, to show that he had purposely endangered his life by rash exposure and in other ways. The further defence was made that the policies were void by reason of false representations which the deceased had made as to his health and habits.

By its verdict the jury finds that Dwight did not commit suicide nor practice fraud upon the companies. It is not likely, however, that this verdict will be acquiesced in if there is any ground on which it can be set aside.—New York Herald.

HIS TEMPERAMENT.—When the United States Army private hears of the marriage of a young officer he trembles, for he knows that within two years' time there is a possibility that he at some frontier post may be weeding that young woman's flower garden, carrying her parasol, and possibly airing the baby in its carriage. And yet there is more or less surprise that there should be so many desertions from the army.

The director of the mint advises that the coinage of gold dollars and eleven cent pieces be discontinued. So far as the gold dollar part of the advice is concerned, we do not care; but when the three cent piece is withdrawn from circulation we shall feel that our financial friend has been taken from us.—Detroit Traveler.

IRREPRESSIBLE TRAMPS.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE FOR THEIR SUPPRESSION.

A Busy Detective upon Every Commander-in-Inspection Police.

[From Harper's Weekly.]

The cruel and almost inexplicably ferocious murder of Mrs. Maybee and her daughter in a little village of Long Island, and other equally mysterious murders which have lately shocked the community, have brought the problem of the "tramp" before the country in the most startling manner. Every one familiar with rural or village life can readily understand the conditions which make such deeds not only possible, but, within not very long periods, almost certain. The scattered population, the isolated dwellings, the peaceful habits, the want of any organized or efficient police, with the existence of a class of wanderers, idle or half idle, and often criminal, spreading themselves over the country—these are the elements of the situation from which spring with considerable regularity petty thieving, outrage, assault, burglary, highway robbery, and murder, most of which go undetected and unpunished.

"Tramps," for the greater part, are the overflow from city life. Their ranks are recruited from the vicious, the lazy, and the unfortunate, who, driven from the haunts of organized society and the police, become, as their characters and habits incline them, beggars, thieves, or caimiaals. The greater number are simply idlers, strolling from place to place, begging a dinner here, a breakfast there, a lodging in some outhouse, or sleeping a la belle etoile, and living on the pilferings of hen roosts or corn fields. These are merely the drones of the great human hive, who drag out in filth and disorder their miserable lives. But with these are the men of criminal instincts and habits, fired with brutal lust, hungry with the greed born of dissipation and drink, reckless of life, their own or others', and trained in the terrible school of self-indulgence of our large towns. Woe to those who may meet them in the lonely ways, or may extend to them the hand of charity! Their trail across the woods and fields is marked with crime too horrible to describe, in comparison with which murder itself is less terrible. And it is to one of these that the rustic household may at any moment be opened when the ragged costume, the unshaven face, the sunburned hands, of the sturdy beggar appear at the door. It is with this element that society must make up its mind to deal.

The obvious weapon with which to deal with it is police force. The average village or country community will shrink from this. The suggestion to them means an organized force of blue-coats, with sergeants and captains, and the omniscient and generally useless detectives. But this is not necessary. What is needed is a small force of mounted men, young, active, alert, with just enough organization to enable them to act together, and enough discipline to secure fidelity. Their chief function would be prevention rather than either detection or arrest. Patrolling the country roads frequently and rapidly, keeping a constant watch on suspicious persons, appearing often in the more secluded and exposed places, they could soon make it extremely dangerous for the criminal classes. An intimate and familiar knowledge of all persons with legitimate occupation is easily acquired in country neighborhoods, and that solves one-half the difficulties of police work. A criminal is really far safer in the dense populations of the cities than he could be in a village with such an organization, since in the latter he would necessarily be a marked man, and could hardly move from point to point unobserved.

Such a force should be organized in every county, or it might with advantage be made a State force, outside of the larger cities. Its members should be carefully selected, with absolute freedom from political interference. They should serve for life, or as long as they were faithful and capable. They should have a graded increase in salary, or promotion, according to length of service and superior merit. They should be well mounted, uniformed, thoroughly instructed, and well officered. They should be pensioned for disability in the service, or on retirement for honorable cause, according to service. These requirements, which are of value in any force, would be essential in this, because of its peculiar nature, and the necessity of securing the best men at the most economical rates. Properly managed, such a force would practically put an end in a short time to the worst evils of which is not entirely feasible. The fact that the tramp is practically unknown in the "tramp" and there is nothing in it the outer districts of New York city, some of which are as strictly rural as the heart of Long Island, is due to the mounted police of the city, and this could be applied in a modified form in every community.

Pistols vs. Law.

The Buffalo Courier correspondent gives us the following consoling item: "Every ruffian in New York carries a pistol and is always ready to use it. The law says no one shall carry a pistol without a permit, but what of that? If a ruffian of any note were brought before a police judge for breaking the law he would be discharged at once. When a lot of police duelists were arrested a few days ago these police judges made a wild rush late at night to the place where they were confined to take bail. Each seemed to fear that the poor police man might suffer some inconvenience if he did not hurry tremendously. But I doubt if any of the three would hurry himself in the case of some unfortunate fellow locked up for dogging. No politics, no influence, you see."

A MYSTERY OF THE SEA.

The Fate of the Ship Which Carried Mrs. Maybee and Mrs. Harriet's Lambs and Her Crew.

Four years ago, the City of Boston sailed from Boston, crowded with an unfortunate company of passengers bound for a foreign shore.

She never entered port.

The mystery of her unknown end grows deeper as the years increase, and the Atlantic voyager, when the fierce winds howl, prays and laughs in imminent peril over many a ghost story as the same and mysterious fate of that magnificent vessel are alluded to.

Our reporter, on a recent visit to New York, took lunch with Captain George Siddons Murray, on board the Alaska, of the Union line. Captain Murray is a man of stalwart build, well-knit frame and sturdy genial disposition. He has been a constant voyager for a quarter of a century, over half of that time having been in the trans-Atlantic service. In the course of the conversation over the well-spread table, the mystery of the City of Boston was alluded to.

"Yes," remarked the captain, "I shall never forget the last night we saw that ill-fated vessel. I was chief officer of the City of Antwerp. On the day we sighted the City of Boston a furious southeast hurricane set in. Both vessels labored hard. The sea seemed determined to sweep away every vestige of life. When day ended the gale did not abate, and everything was lashed for a night of unusual fury. Our good ship was turned to the south to avoid the possibility of icebergs. The City of Boston, however, undoubtedly went to the north. Her boats, life-preservers and rafts were all securely lashed; and when she went down, everything went with her, never to reappear until the sea gives up its dead."

"What, in your opinion, captain, was the cause of the loss of the City of Boston?"

"The City of Limerick, in almost precisely the same latitude, a few days later, found the sea full of floating ice; and I have no doubt the City of Boston collided with the ice, and sank immediately."

Captain Murray has been in command of the Alaska ever since she was put in commission, and feels justly proud of his noble ship. She carries thousands of passengers every year, and has great popularity for the Williams & Guion line. Remarking upon the bronzed and healthy appearance of the captain, the reporter said that sea life did not seem to be a very great physical trial.

"No! But a person's appearance is not always a trustworthy indication of his physical condition. For seven years I have been in many respects very much out of sorts with myself. At certain times I was so lame that it was difficult for me to move around. I could scarcely straighten up. I did not know what the trouble was, and though I performed all my duties regularly and satisfactorily, yet I felt that I might some day be overtaken with some serious prostrating disorder. These troubles increased. I felt dull and then, again, shooting pains through my arms and limbs. Possibly the next day I would feel flushed and unaccountably uneasy and the day following chilly and despondent. This continued until last December, when I was prostrated soon after leaving Queenstown, and for the remainder of the voyage was a helpless, pitiful sufferer. In January last, a friend who made that voyage with me, wrote me a letter, urging me to try a new course of a treatment. I gladly accepted his counsel, and for the last seven months have given thorough and business-like attention to the recovery of my natural health; and to-day, I have the proud satisfaction of saying to you that the lame back, the strange feelings, the sciatic rheumatism which have so long pursued me, have entirely disappeared through the blood purifying influence of Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure which entirely eradicated all rheumatic poison from my system. Indeed, to me, it seems that it has worked wonders, and I therefore most cordially commend it."

"And you have no trouble now in exposing yourself to the winds of the Atlantic?"

"Not the least. I am as sound as a bullet and I feel specially thankful over the fact because I believe rheumatic and kidney disease is in the blood of my family. I was dreadfully shocked on my last arrival in Liverpool to learn that my brother, who is a wealthy China tea merchant, had suddenly died of Bright's disease of the kidneys, and consider myself extremely fortunate in having taken my trouble in time and before any more serious effects were possible."

The conversation drifted to other topics, and as the writer watched the face before him, so strong in all its outlines and yet so genial, and thought of the innumerable exposures and hardships to which its owner had been exposed, he instinctively wished all who are suffering from the terrible rheumatic troubles now so common might know of Captain Murray's experience and the means by which he had been restored. Pain is a common thing in this world, but far too many endure it when they might just as well avoid it. It is a false philosophy which teaches us to endure what we can just as readily avoid. So thought the writer and so should all others think who desire happiness and a long life.

A Temperance Lecture.

The Springfield Republican says:—"Yes, Pete would be a fine workman," said Dea Crocker, in whose repair shop on the Hill Peter Fortin had done many an odd job, "if he'd only let drink alone. You see, I was fixing up a chair outside there t'other day, and Pete was working here in the shop. I had a pint bottle of corrosive sublimate dissolved in alcohol, which I put on the chair to kill the moths. When I brought the chair in here Pete began sniffing. Pretty soon says he, 'What's on this chair, Mr. Crocker?' 'Oh, alcohol,' says I, and, putting the bottle on the shelf there, I went outside and never thought any more about it. Pete had been moping and mum all the morning, and I knew he wanted stimulant, but it never entered my head that he'd fool with that bottle. But all of a sudden he rushed to the door rubbing his hands up and down on his belly, and cried out, 'Mr. Crocker, what did you say was in that bottle?' 'The land's sake!' I cried, 'Poison, Pete, deadly poison. You don't mean to say you've been drinking it?' 'I have, I have,' says he, 'I tasted of it.' Well, I tell you, I was scared, and when I looked at the bottle I saw that half of it was gone. 'What under the canopy, Peter, were you thinking of? You've drank half of that poison. Pete, you're a dead man.' When I said that, he just doubled up on the floor, and I tell you he groaned. I told my wife to pour milk down him, and then ran for the doctor. Well, all that afternoon the doctor kept pouring raw eggs down Pete's throat and feeding him from a vial that he had. Pete's stomach rejected the eggs as fast as he took 'em, but they absorbed the poison. I did think one time that Pete was a goner."

A Remedy for Lung Diseases.

Dr. Robert Newton, late president of the Eclectic college, of the city of New York, and formerly of Cincinnati, Ohio, used Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam very extensively in his practice, as many of his patients, now living, and restored to health by the use of this invaluable medicine, can amply testify. He always said that as good a remedy ought to be prescribed freely by every physician as a sovereign remedy in all cases of lung diseases. It cures consumption, and has no equal for all pectoral complaints.

NANCY.

AN IDYL OF THE KNEADING.

Brown Holland across the stool in the kitchen;
Her sleeves were rolled up, and her cheeks all aglow;
Her hair was coiled neatly, what's, undeniably,
Stood watching while Nancy was kneading the dough.

ow, who could be neater, or brighter, or sweeter,
Or who hum a song so delightfully low,
Or who look so slender, so graceful, so tender,
As Nancy, sweet Nancy, while kneading the dough?

How deftly she pressed it, and squeezed it, caressed it
And twisted and turned it, now quick and now slow;
Ah, me, but that matronly, I've paused for in sadness!
'Twas my heart she was kneading as well as the dough.

At last, when she turned for her pan to the dresser,
She saw me and blushed, and said shyly, "Please, go,
Or my bread I'll be spoiling, in spite of my toiling,
If you stay here and watch while I'm kneading the dough."

begged for permission to stay. She'd not listen;
The sweet little tyrant said, "No, sir! no, no!"
Yet when I had vanished on being thus banished
My heart staid with Nancy while kneading the dough.

m dreaming, sweet Nancy, and see you in fancy,
Your heart, love, has softened and pitied my woe,
And we, dear, are rich in a dainty wee kitchen
Where Nancy, my Nancy, stands kneading the dough.

Joe's Treat.

HOW SANTA CLAUS APPEARED TO MASTER JOE AND MISS SIS ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

It was Christmas Eve and crowds of busy buyers and pleasure-seekers thronged Avenue A. Among them might have been seen a boy of perhaps ten years and a girl some three years his junior, who were evidently bent upon a very important errand, if one could judge by the numbers of times they paused and consulted, the look of earnestness deepening in their faces. Good faces they were, too, if a little soiled. The boy's frank and honest, with a merry twinkle in each dark eye, whilst the girl's blue ones wore an innocent, wistful expression. She would have been quite pretty if it had not been for the sickly color of her skin (want of proper nourishment), and the matted locks, which only needed soap and water to render them soft and golden. A straw bonnet, a portion of the brim missing, on account of its being several sizes too large, gave the child constant employment trying to keep it on. Its counterpart in the shape of a hat covered the curly head of her companion, whose pants could have easily held another boy.

Presently they paused before a large store with its window filled with cakes. Square cakes, round cakes, frosted cakes, cakes with snow-white towers and [illegible] sugar cupids, cakes large and small, yellow with eggs or black with fruit. As the children stood gazing at the rich display an old gentleman passed, turned and retraced his steps, and also took his stand before the cake window. Ever and anon his kindly face was lit up by a smile as some remark of the children's reached his ears.

At last the important question seemed decided, for the boy, with a nod and the words, "You jess wait here, Sis," made his way into the store. It was crowded, and he had to wait his turn, while the girl pressed her eager little face tightly against the window, pain, forgetting all but small, bare toes in ambitious ebb.

There was quite a pretty flush on the child's delicate cheeks when the boy reappeared with a small parcel in his hand, and she exclaimed eagerly:

"Did you get it?"

"You bet," was the answer followed by a long-drawn "Oh!" from the little girl as they made their way along the street. After a while they turned into a side street and burst their steps toward a vacant lot, half shut in by a brick wall and littered over with old packing-cases, bits of tarpaulin and refuse.

"Oh, it's a nice place where you live!" questioned the girl, as her companion pulled two barrel hoops and old [illegible] A saucy look twinkled in the boy's eyes as he answered:

"Well, Sis, it ain't exactly what you'd call a brown-stone front; it's more on the Oscar Wilde style."

"What's that?" and the little girl's eyes opened to their widest extent.

"That's a kinder style as is made up of old things as was shucked away as no good to nobody." Then he added: "Here we are; jess hold on a minute till I light the chandelier, or you might smack your head agin the frescoing."

With much sputter of sulphur, then the faint glimmer of a candle showed the outline of a large packing-case, partially covered with pieces of tarpaulin. Dropping [illegible] the boy bade his companion enter, adding: "Sit down, Sis, till I get the first courses; you're company, you know."

Obeying orders, Sis seated herself on an upturned bottom-tub and gazed incuriously around. The packing case within which she sat stood lengthwise, a hole in its side being concealed by a curtain of sail cloth, the other side wall and part of front were composed of pieces of tarpaulin, propped up by old broom handles and one boat-hook staple. At the rear stood a high brick wall. Adorning the packing case's sides were a part of a circus poster, a Sunday school card and a colored lithograph.

By the time Sis had finished her inspections the fire, which consisted of charred coal and odds and ends of wood, was lit. It was built under the ground, under a convenient air-hole, so the smoke was not so bad as it might have been. Then Sis produced a bundle that she had hugged carefully under her arm during the long walk. Unrolling the old apron that was wrapped around it, she disclosed to view a small battered coffee-pot, about an ounce of coffee and a tiny package of brown sugar, observing, with a little womanly gesture:

"I knowed very well that a boy wouldn't never think of that; so I begged Mrs. Dike to give me the coffee pot. Isn't it nice, Joe? and she was going to throw it away and I got the coffee of a woman, as I minds her baby sometimes instead of the penny, and a real nice grocery man let me scrape out a sugar barrel."

Here, all out of breath at such a long speech for her, Sis made the coffee and set it triumphantly upon the fire to boil, Joe exclaiming:

"Well, I'm blessed! we're a doing it right up to the handle."

While sis hovered round the fire, for fear of an unruly coal upsetting the cherished coffee-pot, Joe drew from some hidden resource a lemon and two lumps of sugar. After slicing the lemon he dropped it along with the sugar into a tomato can full of water, and having stirred the beverage with his pen-knife gravely licked the blade to see if it was all right. Then, as he turned the butter-tub into a table, covering it with a piece of sacking marked in large black letters, "This Side Up," he remarked:

"There isn't another feller as I'd invite to this air Christmas Eve shindy but you, Sis. There's lots on 'em as 'ud be glad to come; it isn't every day as they gits such a treat."

"Oh, Joe, it's jess lovely," answered Sis, with an admiring glance at the spread that nearly resulted in the collapse of the coffee-pot, which took a notion just then to execute a dip.

And Joe himself began to feel rather proud of his treat when everything was set forth. There was an apple cut into four quarters and arranged upon a broken bit of a blue china plate, whilst an orange sliced into as many pieces as possible graced half of a wooden buffer platter. The chief features, however, were a very small plum cake and a ditto mince pie. The cake, placed upon the upturned bottom of a red collar-box, occupied the middle of the table, a tiny American flag stuck in its centre. The lemonade, flanked by two oyster shells, was for want of space consigned to the floor, while the candle flickered itself into little gullies down the sides of the ginger beer bottle that did duty as a candlestick, perhaps in its anxiety for the feast to begin.

Whether it should be a pie or a cake had been the important question, and they had at last split the difference by investing five of the ten cents in a cake and the other five in a pie.

It had been a large sum for Joe to spend in luxuries, not many tens finding their way to his pocket; in fact, it was his last cent, but he was perfectly satisfied with the result and I do not believe there were two happier children in New York that night than they, when the coffee had been drunk to the last drop and pronounced "elegant" (an old oyster can serving for a cup), and the great event of the evening the cake was to be cut.

"Here, Sis, you cut it, women always does," and Joe shoved the penknife across, and Sis shoved the penknife back, with the politely urged assurance that her little brother always cut the cake exactly with her finger before placing the knife to it.

"Hold on, Sis, till I MAKE a speech." This as she was about to bring down the knife to the descent. "It's always done when they brings on the pie and cake." So saying Joe refilled the oyster shells with lemonade, and having placed the tattered remains of his hat firmly upon the back of his head, he struck an attitude that drew from Sis's lips a long drawn oh! and began with:

"Ladies and gentlemen"—

"Why, Joe, there ain't none there's only me and you," interrupted Sis.

"It don't make no odds, they always say it if there ain't no more present," said Joe with "don't interrupt" gentlemen with:

"We've met together on this air treat; now, Sis (this in an aside), you must say, Hear, hear," which order Sis, her blue eyes full of interest, at this new [illegible] friend, meekly obeyed; Joe continued with: "which is an out and out outer, if I do say it myself, and—and—" Here Joe stirred the lemonade, but not finding an idea there, turned and with "Oh, I'll cut it short; here's a jolly Christmas and—a big hunk of gumdrop." Dropping into an seat upon the floor headfirst, patronizingly: "Now, Sis, you must make a speech, too."

"Oh! I couldn't, Joe," exclaimed the little girl.

"Yes, you can, too—it's easy enough. Tilly did at Jim's party, and she ain't half so pretty as you be," replied Joe encouragingly.

"Did she?" faltered Sis. "Then, perhaps—I'll try if you promise not to laugh."

"All right, go ahead. Here take a sip of lemonade; it will sort of put the pluck inter yer," and Joe pushed the tomato can toward her.

Rising and shaking out her little worn dress, Sis placed her arms akimbo. She remembered seeing a woman doing it once, who was talking to a big crowd.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said Sis, "I am so very much glad that I was invited to this beauter-ful treat, with such a love-ly plum cake, I hopes Joe will have one next Christmas Eve."

"Hear, hear!" called out Joe; thereby causing Sis, in her confusion, to add hurriedly:

"Many happy returns of the day, amen."

"Hurray!" shouted Joe, "it's better nor Tilly's ten times," at which Sis resented herself, blushing with pleasure and feeling, perhaps, the least speck puffed up at her success. Poor little waif, it was something new for her to receive praise.

The speeches having been given to their entire satisfaction, Joe felt his duty as host somewhat relaxed and, leaning back against the side of the packing case, he remarked carelessly:

"What do you think of my pictures, Sis?"

"They're jess love-ly, Joe; where did you get 'em?" replied Sis, trying to sip the lemonade from her oyster shell, just as she had seen ladies of her acquaintance take their saucers full of tea.

"Oh, I picked 'em up 'round about. Was you ever at a circus, Sis?"

"No;" and seeing that she had rather fallen in Joe's estimation at this confession she hastily added, "but I was to Moody's and Sankey's once." This not producing exactly the effect she expected, she continued with:

"Do you believe in Santy Claws, Joe?"

"What? The feller what comes down chimney and sich rubbish? Do you think as I've got anything soft about me?" Then, catching the look of disappointment on the girl's face, he hastily added: "Maybe there's something in't for girls."

"Oh, I wish there was," exclaimed Sis, tucking up her little bare toes beneath her skirt, for, although it was rather a mild night for that time of year, still, now the fire was dying out and the feast fast disappearing, the cold air began to make itself felt.

"I don't s'pose Santy Claws has much time to bother about sich a shabby little girl as me, but I'd like a really, really doll," and the child's eyes shone with such a happy light at the bare thought that some one outside the packing-case came very near betraying himself.

"And," continued the girl, "I'd want him to bring you sich a lot of things—a love-ly big cake." Then, thinking that perhaps she was reflecting upon the smallness of the one they had just eaten, she quickly added: "But it couldn't be beautifuller nor your'n."

"Why, Sis, I say, what's the matter? you've got sich red cheeks and——"

"Have I?" and Sis's little brown hand went up to her face at Joe's words, as she continued with—"perhaps it's the lemonade."

"Cracky! what's that?" and Joe gazed open-eyed at a folded piece of paper that had fallen from the sky, as it appeared to him, right into his lap. "If it's any of them boys," he ejaculated, jumping up, "I'll put a head on 'em."

"Oh! Joe, look here, there's writing on it, maybe, oh! maybe it's from Santy Claws," exclaimed Sis.

Although Joe muttered "fiddlesticks," his eyes were round with astonishment when he read on the paper: "For Master Joe and Miss Sis," and on opening it found a fifty-cent piece and more writing, or rather printed letters, which read:

"Santa Claus is very sorry that he had nothing left to give Joe and Sis to-night, but if they will be at packing-case house to-morrow morning at ten, some one will be there to take them to a friend of Santa Claus, where perhaps there will a really doll and a beautiful cake."

"Well, I'm blessed," was all Joe could utter, while Sis, clapping her hands with delight, cried out:

"Oh, Joe, I knowed there was a Santy Claws. Isn't he good? Jess think, he calls this packing-case house; how funny."

"Well," answered Joe, "there's the money and there's the letter, and it does look queer."

"You'll be here, Joe, won't you?" questioned Sis, a little anxiously.

"Yes, I guess so; I don't know of any other appointment to hinder," replied Joe, with a grin, who was rapidly recovering his usual manner, and, after a moment's thought, he continued with:

"I tell you what, Sis: We'll get Mother Mack to put us up to-night. We'll have jolly good beds for once and a breakfast that'll make your mouth water. Come along." So saying, Joe blew out the light and deposited the candle in his pocket, while Sis, by tying her bonnet strings, delivered him forth into the night, casting a half expectant look around to the last Santa Claus who had not forgotten the 4th Tots, together they pass out from the vacant lot, full of bright anticipations of the morrow.

A year had come and gone since the night of Joe's treat and the very same store where Joe purchased his Christmas Eve cake was again full of choice delicacies in that line, and the same old gentleman was there; but this time, instead of gazing in at the window, he was making his way inside, holding by the hand a pretty little girl, with sweet blue eyes and silky fair hair, hugging a lovely doll possessing [illegible] and a fur tippet, while accompanying them was a bright, intelligent-looking boy. Both children were neatly, even handsomely clad. All at once the little girl exclaimed excitedly:

"Oh! Uncle, there's the very same cake that we had last year. See, Joe, there he is! I wonder if he will know you?"

"Of course he won't, Sis, I've changed my tailor since then," and the boy's laughing eyes twinkled with fun, while the old gentleman chuckled until he was red in the face, and the two children had to pat him on the back to keep him from choking.

"It must be a plum cake and big," was the little girl's order, and she had her way. Years after, when she grew up and had a nice home of her own, she used to tell her children about Joe's treat and how through it two of New York's little waifs found such a happy home.—FLORENCE REVERE PENDAR.

Every Day Lessons in Farm Life.

A fair in every village may strike the reader as an absurd idea, but according to my views it is an excellent one. Let me explain. In all small villages there are one or more stores where the entire neighborhood go to buy supplies. On rainy days and during the winter these stores are more or less crowded with farmers and their sons, who discuss their farms, crops, etc.

We have such a community here. At one of our stores was hung one day a big potato, labeled with the name of the variety, also the name of the man who grew it. Now, every one who walked into that store was attracted by this fine specimen, and it was not many days before other farmers brought in sample potatoes, corn and the like. In each case it was the best the farm afforded. In this way farmers in the neighborhood became interested in this agricultural show; it incited them to improve their seed and buy or exchange new varieties with each other.

I can cut ten shocks more of drilled corn in one day by the following plan than I can in the old way, viz.: carrying it all in the arms. After making the "buck," cut all the corn within reaching distance and set it around the buck. After this has been done cut the rest of the corn that belongs to the shock and throw it on in piles, then take these piles by the tops and set them around the small shock that had been started before.

None but the laboring man who has suffered actual pain while husking corn can appreciate what a cure for cracked and chapped hands means. Do not wash your hands during cold weather oftener than can be helped. Grease them in the morning with clean sheep's tallow; melt it and rub it in thoroughly; the more grease you can rub in the better. At noon give them another greasing and at night wash the hands. My word for it, by this plan a man can husk corn with pleasure.

Gave it Up.

The anger of Mr. John Joseph Ryan of N. Y. city has been aroused by what he considers the inability of this Republic to protect its citizens abroad. He was naturalized in the Court of Common Pleas of New York city on October 18, 1880. The contempt which he now entertains for his citizenship has induced him to return his certificate to the court, and ask that his name be stricken from the roll. His letter says:—Seeing how American citizens are strung up unmercifully on the gallows in England, and how Messrs. White head, Curtin, Wilson and Gallagher, American citizens, have been, on the evidence of a lying informer, sentenced to life imprisonment in England without American interference, I wish to have my name erased from the American citizenship roll of your court and American at large.

Mr. Ryan deposited this letter and his naturalization papers with Clerk Rogers, in the office of the court, said that the documents would explain themand hurried out of the Court-House. He signs himself as a citizen of the Irish Republic.

Where a countryman enters a small village and doesn't drive up to the tavern steps at a breakneck speed and shout whoa! in a manner to indicate that his horse can out-run, cut-jump and cut-trot anything and everything in the shape of horseflesh that ever lived in the county, you can make up your mind that the countryman is either sick or he has got a basket of eggs under the seat of his wagon.—Philadelphia Call.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM DARKEY HALL.

Divine Gardner gets an Opportunity About the Right and Wrong of Things.

[From The Detroit Free Press.]

"Dar am sebral things dat doan' look 'mostly right to me," said Brother Gardner, as he rubbed his bald head with one hand and opened the meeting with the uther.

"It doan' look 'mostly right to see one man with ten millyon dollars an' anoder with only ten cents (applause by Samuel Shin), but yit if I was de ten millyon dollar man I wouldn't keer whedder it looked right or not." [Sudden end to the applause.]

"It doan' look 'mostly right fur one man to own a great foundry, while anoder man am obleeged to work fur him fur $2 a day ["Hear! hear!" from Judge Cadaver], but if I was de $2 a day man I wouldn't frow myself out of a job to spite de owner or to please a demagogue." [The Judge subsides.]

"It doan' look 'mostly right to see one man hold offis all de time, while anoder man has to shove a jack-plane fur a libin' (great rustle in Pickle Smith's corner), but he who shoves de jack-plane has de respect of de community an' keeps outer jail." [Rustle dies away.]

"It doan' look zactly right to see fo'ty lawyers rush to defend a criminal who has stolen money in his pockets, while de offender who am moneyless am left todig his way frew a ten-foot wall wid an ole knife-blade (grins on a dozen faces); but if I was a lawyer I should aim my money any odder way except by sawin' wood. De public doan' look fur any pertickler display of conscience on de part of lawyers, an' darfore suffer no disappintments." [Grins no longer observable.]

"It doan' look 'mostly right fur one man to have a big brick house an' anoder man a rough bo'd shanty, but 'long 'bout tax-time de man in de shanty kin sit on de fence an chuckle over de fack dat he haint rich.

"It doan' look 'mostly right to see one man go pushin' an' swellin' an' crowdin' everybody else off de sidewalk to let de public know dat he am a king-bee, but such men have to carry de anxiety of bein' in debt to de tailor an' of dodgin' de grocer an' of subscribin' $25 to build a church widout a hope of bein' able to pay ten cents on de dollar.

"In fack, my friends, dar am heaps an' heaps o' things dat doan' look 'mostly right to us at fust glance, but when ye come to figger it up an' divide an' subtract we've all got a heap to be thankful fur an' to encourage us to get up airly in de mawnin'. A man kin brase his legs an' lay back like a mule, an' kick away at de hull world an' hate everybody an' be hated in return, or he kin pick up sartin crumbs o' consolashun, crowd inter a seat in de back eand of de wagin, an' take a heap o' comfort, knowin' dat somebody is wuss off dan himself. Let us accumulate to bizness."

Dying of Thirst.

"Did you ever suffer extreme hunger or thirst?" was asked of a Kentucky colonel who had been relating some solid stories about himself.

"Well," he replied, "I never suffered what might be called extreme hunger, but no man knows how to endure the agonies of thirst better than I do.

"I remember the time well," he continued, retrospectively. "I was on a fishing excursion and became lost in the woods. For three days not a drop passed my lips. My lengthened absence finally caused alarm and a party was sent out in search of me. They found me lying in an unconscious condition on the banks of a little trout stream, and it was hours before any hopes of saving me were entertained."

"Was the trout stream dry?" asked one of the interested listeners.

"Dry? Certainly not. How could I catch fish if the stream was dry?"

"Well, I don't see how you could suffer from thirst with a stream of water close at hand."

"Water close at hand?" repeated the Kentucky Colonel. "And what has water got to do with a man's being thirsty?"—Philadelphia Evening Call.

"GALLANTRY AWAKENS EARLY in the breasts of some Boston boys," says the Journal of that city. "A lady in that city has a class in the Sunday school of one of the leading churches, the membership of which consists of boys who are each about eight years of age. Like most youngsters they are of too exuberant spirits to keep altogether as quiet as the demands of the school require, and are prone to become restless and noisy at times. A few Sundays ago one of them was particularly uneasy, when the teacher, thinking to shame him into quiet, said: 'Now, George, I don't know what I shall do with you if you are so noisy. I am afraid I shall have to punish you for it, and think the best way to do so would be to make you sit in my lap.' 'Ah,' said the young scapegrace with an arch look, 'if you should do that, Mrs. ——, I think you would find the whole class getting noisy.'"

Sincerity is an opening of the heart. We find it in very few people; and that which we generally see is nothing but a subtle dissimulation to attract the confidence of others.

A FLOATING THEATRE.

The Grand Scheme Which is to be Inaugurated on the Gladiator.

A startling innovation is to be introduced into the histrionic world in the shape of a floating theatre company, says the New York Times. A certificate was filed in the County Clerk's Office incorporating the company, of which the Trustees are Mr. William B. Stone, Mr. S. Conant Foster, of the firm of Otis & Co.; Mr. Ross C. Stone, Mr. Robert M. Fryer, and Mr. Sydney Neergaard. The company's capital is placed at one million dollars, to be divided into 100,000 shares. The first boat, designed by Mr. R. M. Fryer, is to be built on the catamaran principle, and the structure will be supported on two steel cylinders of 20 feet each. The dimensions will be 276 feet in length by 66 feet in width. The motive power will be a compound engine of 2,500-horse power, while the draught will be 7½ feet. Staterooms for a company of 100 will be provided, while the seating capacity of the theatre itself, including parquet and two balconies, will be for 1,500 people. The parquet is to be on the front of the vessel, taking up little more than one-third its length, and the stage will be in the middle. The engine-room, staterooms and dining-rooms and kitchen will occupy the after part. The boat is to be built by contract in N. Y. city and will cost $250,000. It is to rejoice in the title of the Gladiator.

"We have the sympathy of some very eminent theatrical people," said one of the Trustees. "I may say that they are enthusiastic on the subject. Our object is simply this: There are 2,000,000 people outside of New York and Brooklyn, distributed in towns of from 10,000 to 20,000 inhabitants, who have no opportunities of witnessing a good performance without coming to the great cities. This is always inconvenient on account of the late return at night. Moreover, great actors will not go to small towns. Do you think Booth would play in Newark? He would positively decline to do so. We shall visit such towns as Newport, Albany, Newark, Paterson, Stonington, and Fall River, anchor alongside the dock, and give them a first-rate performance, such as could never be heard in the miserably appointed theatres of such towns. We shall have a regular stock company, who will live on the boat all the year round. The appointments of the theatre will be simply sumptuous. All that art and modern theatrical improvements can suggest will be found on board the Gladiator. We shall rival Wallack's and the Fifth avenue in point of completeness, while our company will be a second Madison Square troupe and conducted upon exactly the same principles as those which govern that theatre. We can move from place to place during the summer months, but we shall keep the company in action 365 days in the year. The cost of running it will not be nearly so much as that of managing a theatre on land. There will be no land taxes, and we can therefore afford to build a very fine boat, and a theatre which will be one of the best in the world. This will be only our first structure, and we shall not venture upon the ocean with it. Later on we shall have boats to take in the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays. We shall elect our officers in December, and next spring we hope to be able to launch the Gladiator."

A Creature of Impulse.

A friend of Mr. Christiancy, who was acquainted with his divorced wife, said to a reporter the day after the sudden death of Mrs. Christiancy:

"I never knew a woman in whom the scale of emotion was so long. It ranged from the loftiest exaltation to the deepest depression. She was a creature swayed by impulse. One day she would be buoyant with hope and the next day wretched. It was in one of these extremes that she married Mr. Christiancy and in the other that she told him on her wedding night that she did not love him, and cursed her fate. However, she soon returned to her state of exalted happiness. The Senator told me, even after his divorce proceedings were begun, that in her happy moods she was one of the kindest and sweetest women in the world. You may not believe it, or you may think he is a fondly foolish old man, but Senator Christiancy loved that woman with his whole heart and loves her now."

A Runner.

A Mr. Welch, of Casco, Me., ran to Oxford, twelve miles away, in two hours recently with his overcoat and cowhide boots on. After running around the square three a few times to show them "how kinky he was," he ran back, not walking a step or resting during his twenty-four mile run. He is a very singular man. He has run from Casco to Lewiston, twenty-one miles, and back several times. He takes a long steady lope, which he can keep up for hours. One time, when returning from Lewiston, he was overtaken by a man in a sleigh, who asked him to ride. "I'm in a hurry—can't stop to ride," grunted Welch. Giving up this insult to his legs, the man whipped up and for ten miles tried in vain to pass this wonderful runner; then the horse gave out, but Welch kept on.

ACCIDENTALLY HEARD.

A FEW NOTES FROM THE PHILADELPHIA EVENING CALL.

IN NEW YORK.

Beggar—"Thank you, thank you. It is not every gentleman that would help a poor widdy. May you live forever and a day."

Philanthropist—"Oh, then would be a little too long. I would not want to live forever and a day."

Beggar—"Then may you live till the Bartholdi pedistal is completed."

PUT HIS FOOT IN IT.

They were returning home from the theatre and had nearly reached her home when the young man observed:

"Isn't the weather cold and raw."

She must have misunderstood him.

"Raw," she said rather hesitatingly.

"Yes, I like them raw, but" she continued, looking sweetly in his eyes, "don't you think they are nicer fried?"

What could he do?

PRESERVING OF CHARACTER.

"Yes," said the grocery man, "Jones has stopped drinking, is working every day and is taking good care of his family. He certainly deserves a great deal of credit."

At this juncture Jones came into the store and asked the grocery man if he would trust him to a sack of flour for a few days.

"No," was the reply, "times are too hard. I can't give any credit."

HOW HIS WORDS RO'T.

Mr. Jones—"I wonder why in the world Congress don't do something at once to stamp out polygamy?"

Mrs. Jones—"Because Congress is composed of men, and men don't know anything. I could kill polygamy with one blow."

Mr. Jones—"Oh, indeed! and how would do it?"

Mrs. Jones—"I would go to Salt Lake City and start a millinery store there."

VERY NECESSARY.

Materfamilias—"Mercy! John, what do you mean by practicing with that horrid revolver all day long, and you a theological student, too?"

John—"I am trying to learn to shoot straight, ma."

Materfamilias—"But you never be a clergyman. You will have no need of such a horrid accomplishment as that."

John—"Oh, yes, I will, too. Cousin Fred says that when I graduate he is going to get me a call for a congregation in his town, and you know he lives in Texas."

THE ADVANTAGE.

First Politician—"I hear that the salary of the Governor of Michigan is only $1,000 a year."

Second Politician—"Only $1,000? Well, that is getting things down pretty fine."

First Politician—"What puzzles me is that they should ever find anyone to take the position at that pay, for I learn that there are very few perquisites."

Second Politician—"But you forget the immense advantage of the office."

First Politician—"In what way?"

Second Politician—"A governor can not be arrested."

UNPRONOUNCEABLE NAMES.

A Russian gentleman by the name of Slobbertoobabibivitch was traveling in Maine when a brakeman shouted:

"Wequotegnook; change cars for Androscoggin and Saccarappaconnet."

"Whatsky did he sayvitch?" asked the Russian gentleman in broken English of his traveling companion.

"He was announcing the names of stations," was the reply.

The foreigner smiled a superior smile as he leaned back in his seat, and remarked:

"We Russians are very much behind enlightenment in the heathenish world means you peoplines have got in this country-skoff."

NOT THE ADMIRAL.

"I see by the papers that there is a clock in the postoffice in Monmouth, Oregon, which was brought across the plains in 1852, and has been running ever since."

"Nothing remarkable about that."

"Nothing remarkable?"

"No, I crossed the plains myself in 1852."

"Well, what of that? This clock was taken across the plains in that year and has been running ever since."

"Exactly. That clock was probably with our party. We were attacked by Indians, and I don't wonder it has been running ever since. I feel like running myself every time I think of it."

A LONG WAY FROM HOME.

THE MAINE COLONY IN JAFFA.

One of the Five Survivors Given to Dust History—Experiences Since Arriving in the Arabs.

[From the Lewiston (Me.) Journal.]

Our Maine boy-guide, Willie, has a mother, a widow, whose husband has died since the Maine colony came to Jaffa. Willie escorts us to the suburbs among cemeteries, stone houses, with flat masonry roofs, supported by heavy stone arches—many exits. There are numberless dogs under foot and a hot sun overhead, against whose rays we protect ourselves with umbrellas. We enter a low door-way and see an elderly woman sitting in a Yankee rocking-chair, in a cool, stone apartment, with a stone floor.

"Here are Mr. and Mrs. ——, from Maine, mother."

"Bless your dear souls! Take off your bonnet; I'm awful glad to see ye. Never had a call before from Maine visitors. We're down-easters, you know—from Jonesport, Maine. But ill-luck has trotted us over since, many years ago, the Maine colony came to Jaffa. You remember after we came we had a tent on the beach in the heat; then the Arabs shaved us most unmercifully; then we began to cheat one another—there were goats among the sheep. Strong drink did our people much mischief. But then it was a noble idea to restore Zion to God's people. I try to live here like a Christian. I tell my Arab neighbors not to steal. I teach them good morals and cleanliness; and now I go away and leave my doors unlocked; but nothing is ever touched in my house; I live among the Moslems and I like 'em—they're kind and hospitable—better behaved than many who call themselves Christians in Jaffa."

There are many manners and customs in the east of to-day suggestive to the Oriental customs in the Bible times. Let us hear Mrs. Alley's account of one of them:

"My neighbor made a contract of marriage for twenty napoleons four months ago. Since then he has given as much as four more in presents to the mother of his intended bride to keep them to their bargain. That is the custom here among the Moslems, and the Christians are not much better. Last month he wished to get married. He is a poor man, and did not have much money by him, but he paid down, before witnesses, fifteen napoleons, and her father told him he should have his bride the next week. The poor man went to Jerusalem to buy the candles to illuminate his bride when he took her home. Meantime comes the bride's mother to our place and stands under my window. I ask her to come in. She thanks me, but will not. Neither will she sit down until after great persuasion. Then comes the bridegroom's mother. 'What is it the bride's mother asks?' 'Your son thinks to marry my daughter. Does he think I am nobody?' or 'Am I a slave to his father,' and similar expressions. The bridegroom's mother all this time is saying: 'Oh! you are the blessing to my house, I have no other blessing but you on earth.' She says this to avert the evil eye from her son. The other continues to say that the marriage shall only take place at the time and place that she [the bride's mother] shall say, and that her girl is too young to marry. I say, 'You ought to have thought of that before.' We talk her down to tears, and then she sits down, talks the matter over and goes away, the other still repeating, 'I have no blessing, only from you.'

"After two or three days, the young man comes from Jerusalem, bringing candles; two as tall as a man, and two flat, short and wide, called 'hands,' for the bride to take in her hands when she comes out on the night of her marriage. Now the young man begins to rave and say they may take their girl, he won't have her. 'Is there no other in Jaffa but her?' 'No, he won't have any one that troubles his mother.' This he says to make all right with his mother. Then he goes to the bride's mother and carries her something nice to eat to make her pleased with him, but he cannot see the bride until they are married, as it is not considered proper with the Moslems to speak with a girl before her marriage. The poor man is now waiting impatiently until such time as they are well satisfied to say 'take her.' Then he will pay the other five napoleons [$20] and call in the neighbors to make merry with him. Some will bring drums, others the shibbabas, or shepherd's pipe, to make music as they dance, sing, and clap their hands, the women by themselves, and the men apart from them, in another room or on the house-top. They keep this up three days.

"On the afternoon of the third day the friends of the bridegroom [now he will have many], take him to the bath, and he must pay all the bills for them. From there they take him to the mosque to pray. By this time it is 3 o'clock in the evening, and they take him, a man to each arm, and lead him backward with his eyes shut. He must walk that way home, no matter how long the time or the road is. The longer the time the better it will be for them to prepare the bride.

"On the third morning the bride is taken to the bath; from there she is taken to the place where she is to be given to her husband. When there, they paint her feet, hands, and other parts of her body, and dress her in seven different dresses, one after the other, in one in which she will look the best. Now, guns are being fired, and there is shouting and screaming. Here comes the bridegroom. They come with lanterns, on long poles, guns firing, drums beating; one would think it was war time instead of a marriage. The bridegroom is led in backward with his eyes shut. They set up that shouting, music, guns, and all kinds of lights around him to make a great show. Now the bride comes in, led by two women, who, the groom does not see, but has covered with a veil from veil. She must walk slowly with the candle in her hand. One woman carries one of the long candles before her and another carries the other behind her, so she can see from all points. The first time she comes in her husband must sit, open his eyes, look at her, take the veil from her head, and hang it over his shoulder. She stands there an unknowing edged bride. Now she goes out to dress, and doesn't come in again until all the drumming dries up. Then they put two chairs for the bride and bridegroom to sit down in. They sit down and talk together if they are not too bashful. But they do not sit long, for it is getting late. The bridegroom arises and takes his wife by the hand and leads her to the door of their chamber. Their mother puts a piece of dough over the door. They thrust their hands into the dough in token that they are one. Then they go into a well-lighted room, and the bridegroom's mother shuts the door. The next day the people call on the bride and carry her presents of money and sit with her. She treats her guests with coffee, the nargileh [water pipe], and cigarettes. The ceremony is ended."

Mrs. Alley then came down to current news: "The people of this land are indolent and slow to work; slow in everything but stabbing. Give them a chance to steal and they will not stop to eat or sleep, but will work fast then. While my neighbors here don't steal from me, the Arab, as a rule, is a thief. Mr Floyd and wife, Mr. Ward, and two or three more are all there are left now of the Maine Jaffa colony. I go out among my Arab neighbors. When they are sick they send for me and I go. I said to myself before God that if these Arabs are converted to Christianity it must be by being good to them. I am not perfect, by any means. One thing I've got that's very wrong—I've got too much temper. I was thinking the other day that I should like to see somebody from my old home. Isn't it queer you should come?"

Willie gives us the full census of the survivors of the Maine Jaffa colony as follows: Herbert Clark and family (Frank, Mary J., and sister, and the mother, Ellen); Arthur Leighton and daughter and son, and Melville Ward—four families.

Washington's Love Affairs.

Warlike sentiments on certain subjects still lingered in the heart of Washington on that peaceful morning one hundred years ago when he resumed possession of New York city. As he crossed Spuyten Duyvil Creek and made his way upon the island the night before he received a message to tarry, as Sir Guy Carleton was not yet embarked. So he directed his steps to a great imposing wooden house on Washington Heights, still standing and known as the Jumel place.

This house twenty-seven years before had been his Mecca. Here he courted the beautiful and wealthy Mary Phillipse; here for weeks he lingered in the light of her blue eyes; here he left her at her father's till he could hurry off and capture Fort Duquesne and come back, and there at that fatal interval came Captain Morris and captured Mary Phillipse and married her before Washington's return. It was an awful lesson to the father of his country and he resolved never to be caught out again in matters of that kind.

It was the second blow; first the low-land beauty, Miss Grimes, afterward mother of the Lee family, and then the faithless Mary. He had somewhat recovered from the jilting on this peaceful morning I speak of, for the Morris family had largely multiplied by this time; but the spot was still sore. Tradition has it that he went over and sat again in the Phillipse parlors and meditated.

"Where is your master?" he inquired of a darkey on the porch, concerning his former rival.

"He goned wid the British, sah, wen de wah fust bruk out," said the humble servitor, "an' missus she is crost de ribber and is very porely, sah, and mahse he was shot wen he was takin' Fote Moldetree down in Carliny, fo' years ago."

The visitor knew that well enough, but he was fond of hearing it over again.

"And, mahse, dey du say dat all this great fine estate hoah is gwine to be confiscated by the devilish rebels. Dat can't be, sah."

Washington evaded the question. But a year later the great fine estate was confiscated and sold to Jumel by the Government and Washington does not seem to have interposed to save it for Mary and the babies.

He ought to have been grateful to her for teaching him such a noble lesson, for he learned it so well that when Martha Custis dawned on him he just sat down by her and didn't let her get away from him. But she was a widow and perhaps didn't want to get away.

Getting Even With Them.

Theatre Patron—"The grand opera this week rather knocked your attractions, did it not?"

Manager—"Yes; the attendance has been very slim."

"What will you do about it?"

"I cannot do anything now except pocket the loss, but I will soon have my revenge."

"Indeed, how will you manage it?"

"You know that grand opera company will soon open in New York?"

"Yes."

"Well, on the very day the opera season commences I will go over there and start a counter attraction, which will leave the opera house as empty every evening as a dismantled dry goods box."

"You don't say so. What will your counter attraction be?"

"A geological exhibition of the living mules, I have the choicest stock."—Philadelphia Call.

"LITTLE ABE."

The Boy Who Enlisted in the Army at the Age of 7 Years.

The following facts were given by a gentleman who served through the war and in the company with "Little Abe," who is believed to have been the youngest person enlisted. The gentleman could not recall the name of the lad, who was known in the army as Little Abe, and who enlisted at Jefferson barracks, a short distance from St. Louis, Mo., May 1, 1861, as a drummer of the age of 7 years and 1 month. He belonged to Company E, Second United States Infantry, Captain, afterward Maj.-Gen. Steel. The reasons which influenced the acceptance of so young a recruit was that his father was in the service and his mother dead. There were no relatives who could or would look after the boy, and so, with the consent of the army authorities, he was put with his father in the army.

Little Abe was a favorite with both officers and men. He displayed at all times the coolest bravery and utter ignorance of fear. His favorite position was in the front rank in battle, and as soon as he saw a soldier fall disabled he would throw away his drum, seize the musket of his fallen comrade and load and fire as coolly as the most hardened veteran, although his diminutive size and strength did not allow him to elevate the gun without some kind of a rest. In the early part of his army experience, at one of the battles when the Union forces found it necessary to take up a position in the rear, Little Abe got possession of a gun, and when the army was forced back, his drum was captured by the Confederates. He was reprimanded and told that when retreating if he could not carry it with him he should destroy it. Ever after this when in battle he saw a chance to get a gun he smashed in the heads of his drum, and then devoted his whole time to his preferred employment of popping at the Rebs. At the close of a skirmish one day he was found crying. Somebody inquired what troubled him, and received an explanation to the effect that he had been unable to find any gun not in use, so he had been unable to have any shooting. The men of Company E wanted to fit him out with a rifle made in accordance with his size, but the desire was not granted, as according to the regulations he must carry a drum. Little Abe passed through the war without receiving a wound, although always in the front rank in many engagements. Of his career since then nothing is known to the writer.—Boston Globe.

A Remarkable Case.

The Dwight insurance suit, which was ended recently at Norwich, N. Y., by a verdict against the Germania Insurance Company, is one of the most remarkable civil cases ever tried in court. Had its incidents been narrated in fiction they would have seemed too improbable for belief.

Dwight was a prominent citizen of Binghamton, who had been a colonel in the war, had held public office and had been engaged in various business enterprises on a large scale. In the summer of 1878 he became a bankrupt. About this time he applied for upward of three hundred thousand dollars' insurance on his life in twenty odd companies. His application was refused by several, but he succeeded in getting his life insured to the extent of two hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

Soon afterward his death was announced. One or two companies paid the claims against them; others refused to pay. Against one of the latter the suit that has been on trial for about a month in Norwich was brought by the executors.

The theory of the insurance companies was that Dwight had taken out an enormous amount of insurance for the benefit of his boy and other relatives, and with the deliberate intent to commit suicide. There was but one known witness of his death, and it was claimed that Dwight had hanged himself after arranging with this man to destroy all evidence of the act. An autopsy was made immediately after the death, and long after burial the body was exhumed and a coroner's inquest held. The testimony of the physicians and other experts was conflicting. By some cause found on the neck was attributed to the pressure of a cord and death to strangulation; others gave the opinion that this mark had been caused by the position of the head and that death was not due to violence.

The companies also offered evidence of extraordinary conduct on the part of Dwight, to show that he had purposely endangered his life by rash exposure and in other ways. The further defence was made that the policies were void by reason of false representations which the deceased had made as to his health and habits.

By its verdict the jury finds that Dwight did not commit suicide nor practice fraud upon the companies. It is not likely, however, that this verdict will be acquiesced in if there is any ground on which it can be set aside.—New York Herald.

His Tenderness.—When the United States Army private hears of the marriage of a young officer he trembles; for he knows that within two years' time there is a possibility that he at some frontier post may be wedding that young woman's flower garden, carrying her parasol, and possibly riding the baby in the carriage. And yet there is more or less surprise that there should be so many desertions from the army.

So far as the gold dollar part of the advice is concerned, we do not care; but when the three cent piece is withdrawn from circulation we shall feel that our financial friend has been given from us.—*Ex. IRREPRESSIBLE TRAMPS.

WHAT CREATES AN HOMELESS VAGRANT SUFFERING.

A Daily Revolving Wheel Every Community Has to Grind Out.

[From Harper's Weekly.]

The cruel and dastard inexplicably ferocious murder of Mrs. Maybee and her daughter in a little village of Long Island, and other equally mysterious murders which have lately shocked the community, have brought the problem of the "tramp" before the country in the most startling manner. Every one familiar with rural or village life can readily understand the conditions which make such deeds not only possible, but, within not very long periods, almost certain. The scattered population, the isolated dwellings, the peaceful habits, the want of any organized or efficient police, with the existence of a class of wanderers, idle or half idle, and often criminal, spreading themselves over the country—these are the elements of the situation from which spring with considerable regularity petty thieving, outrage, assault, burglary, highway robbery, and murder, most of which go undetected and unpunished.

"Tramps," for the greater part, are the overflow from city life. Their ranks are recruited from the vicious, the lazy, and the unfortunate, who, driven from the haunts of organized society and the police, become, as their characters and habits incline them, beggars, thieves, or criminals. The greater number are simply idlers, strolling from place to place, begging a dinner here, a breakfast there, a lodging in some outhouse, or sleeping a la belle etoile, and living on the pilferings of hen roosts or corn fields. These are merely the drones of the great human hive, who drag out in filth and disorder their miserable lives. But with these are the men of criminal instincts and habits, fired with brutal lust, hungry with the greed born of dissipation and drink, reckless of life, their own or others', and trained in the terrible school of self-indulgence of our large towns. Woe to those who may meet them in the lonely ways, or may extend to them the hand of charity! Their trail across the woods and fields is marked with crime too horrible to describe, in comparison with which murder itself is less terrible. And it is to one of these that the rustic household may at any moment be opened when the ragged costume, the unshaven face, the sunburned hands, of the sturdy beggar appear at the door. It is with this element that society must make up its mind to deal.

The obvious weapon with which to deal with it is police force. The average village or country community will shrink from this. The suggestion to them means an organized force of blue-coats, with sergeants and captains, and the omniscient and generally useless detectives. But this is not necessary. What is needed is a small force of mounted men, young, active, alert, with just enough organization to enable them to act together, and enough discipline to secure fidelity. Their chief function would be prevention rather than either detection or arrest. Patrolling the country roads frequently and rapidly, keeping a constant watch on suspicious persons, appearing often in the more secluded and exposed places, they could soon make it extremely dangerous for the criminal classes. An intimate and familiar knowledge of all persons with legitimate occupation is easily acquired in country neighborhoods, and that solves one-half the difficulties of police work. A criminal is really far safer in the dense populations of the cities than he could be in a village with such an organization, since in the latter he would necessarily be a marked man, and could hardly move from point to point unobserved.

Such a force should be organized in every county, or it might with advantage be made a State force, outside of the larger cities. Its members should be carefully selected, with absolute freedom from political interference. They should serve for life, or as long as they were faithful and capable. They should have a graded increase in salary, or promotion, according to length of service and superior merit. They should be well mounted, uniformed, thoroughly instructed, and well officered. They should be pensioned for disability in the service, or on retirement for honorable cause, according to service. These requirements, which are of value in any force, would be essential in this, because of its peculiar nature, and the necessity of securing the best men at the most economical rates. Properly managed, such a force would practically put an end in a short time to the worst evils of which is not entirely feasible. The fact that the tramp is practically unknown in the "tramp" and there is nothing in it the outer districts of New York city, some of which are as strictly rural as the heart of Long Island, is due to the mounted police of the city, and this could be applied in a modified form in every community.

Pistols vs. Law.

The Buffalo Courier correspondent gives us the following consoling item: "Every ruffian in New York carries a pistol and is always ready to use it. The law says no one shall carry a pistol without a permit, but what of that? If a ruffian of any note were brought before a police judge for breaking the law he would be discharged at once. When a lot of police dealers were arrested a few days ago three police judges made a wild rush late at night to the place where they were confined to take bail. Each counsel to fear that the poor policy men might suffer some inconvenience if he did not hurry tremendously. But I doubt if any of the three would hurry himself in the case of some unfortunate fellow locked up for suspicion. No politics, you see."

A MYSTERY OF THE SEA.

The Fate of the Steamship Pacific and Captain Herring Unknown.

A few years ago, the City of Boston sailed from Halifax, crowded with an expectant throng of passengers bound for the foreign shore.

She never entered port.

The mystery of her untimely end grows deeper as the years increase, and the Atlantic voyager, when the fierce winds howl around him and the angry waves fume and foam, shudders as the name and mysterious fate of that magnificent vessel are alluded to.

Our reporter, on a recent visit to New York, took lunch with Captain George Siddons Murray, on board the Alaska, of the Guion line. Captain Murray is a man of stalwart build, well-knit frame and cheery, genial disposition. He has been a constant voyager for a quarter of a century, over half of that time having been in the trans-Atlantic service. In the course of the conversation over the well-spread table, the mystery of the City of Boston was alluded to.

"Yes," remarked the captain, "I shall never forget the last night we saw that ill-fated vessel. I was chief officer of the City of Antwerp. On the day we sighted the City of Boston a furious southeast hurricane set in. Both vessels labored hard. The sea seemed determined to sweep away every vestige of life. When day ended the gale did not abate, and everything was lashed for a night of unusual fury. Our good ship was turned to the south to avoid the possibility of icebergs. The City of Boston, however, undoubtedly went to the north. Her boats, life-preservers and rafts were all securely lashed; and when she went down, everything went with her, never to reappear until the sea gives up its dead."

"What, in your opinion, captain, was the cause of the loss of the City of Boston?"

"The City of Limerick, in almost precisely the same latitude, a few days later, found the sea full of floating ice; and I have no doubt the City of Boston collided with the ice, and sank immediately."

Captain Murray has been in command of the Alaska ever since she was put in commission, and feels justly proud of his noble ship. She carries thousands of passengers every year, and has greatly popularized the Williams & Guion line. Remarking upon the bronzed and healthy appearance of the captain, the reporter said that sea life did not seem to be a very great physical trial.

"No? But a person's appearance is not always a trustworthy indication of his physical condition. For seven years I have been in many respects very much out of sorts with myself. At certain times I was so lame that it was difficult for me to move around. I could scarcely straighten up. I did not know what the trouble was, and though I performed all my duties regularly and satisfactorily, yet I felt that I might some day be overtaken with some serious prostrating disorder. These troubles increased. I felt dull and then, again, shooting pains through my arms and limbs. Possibly the next day I would feel flushed and unaccountably uneasy and the day following chilly and despondent. This continued until last December, when I was prostrated soon after leaving Queenstown, and for the remainder of the voyage was a helpless, pitiful sufferer. In January last, a friend who made that voyage with me, wrote me a letter, urging me to try a new course of treatment. I gladly accepted his counsel, and for the last seven months have given thorough and business-like attention to the recovery of my natural health; and to-day, I have the proud satisfaction of saying to you that the lame back, the strange feelings, the sciatic rheumatism which have so long pursued me, have entirely disappeared through the blood purifying influence of Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure which entirely eradicated all rheumatic poison from my system. Indeed, to me, it seems that it has worked wonders, and I therefore most cordially commend it."

"And you have no trouble now in exposing yourself to the winds of the Atlantic?"

"Not the least. I am as sound as a bullet and I feel specially thankful over the fact because I believe rheumatic and kidney disease is in the blood of my family. I was dreadfully shocked on my last arrival in Liverpool to learn that my brother, who is a wealthy China tea merchant, had suddenly died of Bright's disease of the kidneys, and consider myself extremely fortunate in having taken my trouble in time and before any more serious effects were possible."

The conversation drifted to other topics, and as the writer watched the face before him, so strong in all its outlines and yet so genial, and thought of the innumerable exposures and hardships to which its owner had been exposed, he most actively wished all who are suffering from the terrible rheumatic troubles now so common might know of Captain Murray's experience and the means by which he had been restored.

Pain is a commonthing in this world, but far too many endure it when they might just as well avoid it. It is a fallacious philosophy which teaches use to endure what we can just as readily avoid. So thought the writer and so should all others think who desire happiness and a long life.

A Temperance Lecture.

The Springfield Republican says:—"Yes, Pete would be a fine workman," said Dea Crocker, in whose repair shop on the Hill Peter Fortin had done many an odd job, "if he'd only let drink alone. You see, I was fixing up a chair outside there t'other day, and Pete was working here in the shop. I had a pint bottle of corrosive sublimate dissolved in alcohol, which I put on the chair to kill the moths. When I brought the chair in here Pete began sniffing. Pretty soon says he, 'What's on this chair, Mr. Crocker?' 'Oh, alcohol,' says I, and, putting the bottle on the shelf there, I went outside and never thought any more about it. Pete had been moping and mum all the morning, and I knew he wanted stimulant, but it never entered my head that he'd fool with that bottle. But all of a sudden he rushed to the door rubbing his hands up and down on his belly, and cried out, 'Mr. Crocker, what did you say was in that bottle?' 'The land's sake!' I cried, 'Poison, Pete, deadly poison. You don't mean to say you've been drinking it?' 'I have, I have,' says he, 'I tasted of it.' Well, I tell you, I was scared, and when I looked at the bottle I saw that half of it was gone. 'What under the canopy, Peter, were you thinking of?' 'You've drunk half of that poison. Pete, you're a dead man.' When I said that, he just doubled up on the floor, and I tell you he groaned. I told my wife to pour milk down him, and then ran for the doctor. Well, all that afternoon the doctor kept pouring raw eggs down Pete's throat and feeding him from a vial that he had. Pete's stomach rejected the eggs as fast as he took 'em, but they absorbed the poison. I did think one time that Pete was a goner."

A Remedy for Lung Diseases.

Dr. Robert Newton, late president of the Eclectic college, of the city of New York, and formerly of Cincinnati, Ohio, said Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam very extensively in his practice, as many of his patients, now living, and restored to health by the use of this invaluable's medicine can amply testify. He always said that as good a remedy ought to be prescribed freely by every physician as a specific remedy in all cases of lung disease. It cures consumption and has no equal for all pectoral complaints.

NANCY.

AS SEEN BY THE KNEADER.

Her brown holland apron she stood in the kitchen;
Her sleeves were rolled up, and her cheeks all aglow;
Her hair was coiled neatly, when I, unbeknown,
Stood watching while Nancy was kneading the dough.

Ah, who could be neater, or brighter, or sweeter,
Or who hum a song so delightfully low,
Or who look so slender, so graceful, so tender,
As Nancy, sweet Nancy, while kneading the dough?

How deftly she pressed it, and caressed it, caressed it
And twisted and turned it, now quick and now slow.
Ah, me, but that maiden, I've paid for in sadness!
'Twas my heart she was kneading as well as the dough.

At last, when she turned for her pan to the dresser,
She saw me and blushed, and said shyly, "Please, go,
Or my bread I'll be spoiling, in spite of my boiling,
If you stay here and watch me kneading the dough."

I begged for permission to stay. She'd not listen;
The sweet little tyrant said, "No, sir! no, no!"
Yet when I had vanished on being thus banished
My heart staid with Nancy while kneading the dough.

I'm dreaming, sweet Nancy, and see you in fancy,
Your heart, love, has softened and pitied my woe,
And we, dear, are rich in a dainty wife kitchen
Where Nancy, my Nancy, stands kneading the dough.

Joe's Treat.

HOW SANTA CLAUS APPEARED TO MASTER JOE AND MISS SIS ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

It was Christmas Eve and crowds of busy buyers and pleasure-seekers thronged Avenue A. Among them might have been seen a boy of perhaps ten years and a girl some three years his junior, who were evidently bent upon a very important errand, if one could judge by the numbers of times they paused, and consulted, the look of earnestness deepening in their faces. Good faces they were, too, if a little soiled. The boy's frank and honest, with a merry twinkle in each dark eye, whilst the girl's blue ones wore an innocent, wistful expression. She would have been quite pretty if it had not been for the sickly color of her skin (want of proper nourishment), and the matted locks, which only needed soap and water to render them soft and golden. A straw bonnet, a portion of the brim missing, on account of its being several sizes too large, gave the child constant employment trying to keep it on. Its counterpart in the shape of a hat covered the curly head of her companion, whose pants could have easily held another boy.

Presently they paused before a large store with its window filled with cakes. Square cakes, round cakes, frosted cakes, cakes with snow-white towers and spires, sugar cupids, cakes large and small, yellow with eggs or black with fruit. As the children stood gazing at the rich display an old gentleman passed, turned and retraced his steps, and also took his stand before the cake window. Over and anon his kindly face was lit up by a smile as some remark of the children's reached his ears.

At last the important question seemed decided, for the boy, with a nod and the words, "You jes wait here, Sis," made his way into the store. It was crowded, as he had to wait his turn, while the girl pressed her eager little face tightly against the window, and, forgetting all but delight, bore him in excitement.

There was quite a pretty flush on the child's delicate cheeks when the boy reappeared with a small parcel in his hand, and she exclaimed eagerly:

"Did you get it?"

"You bet," was the answer followed by a long-drawn-out "Oh!" from the little girl as they made their way along the street, the old gentleman close behind them. After a while they turned into a side street and beat their steps toward a vacant lot, half shut in by a brick wall and fenced over with old packing-cases, bits of tarpaulin and refuse.

"Is it a nice place where you live?" questioned the girl, as her companion pulled her over barrel hoops and old crockery. A queer look troubled in the boy's eyes as he answered:

"No, Sis, it ain't exactly what you'd call a first-class front; it's more on the Oscar Wilde style."

"What's that?" and the little girl's eyes opened in their wide earnest.

"That's a kinder style as is made up of old things as was chucked away as no good to nobody." Then he added: "Here we are; jess hold on a minute till I light the chandelier, or you might knock your head on the freezing."

The smell of sulphur, then the faint glimmer of a candle showed the outline of a large packing-case, partially covered with pieces of tarpaulin. Drawing aside a flap which served for a door, the boy bade his companion enter, adding:

"Take down, Sis, till I get the fire a-going; you're unhandy, you know."

Obeying orders, Sis seated herself on a special buffalo-rob and gazed inquiringly around. The packing case within which she sat stood lengthwise, a hole in its side being concealed by a curtain of sail cloth, the other side wall and part of front were composed of pieces of tarpaulin, propped up by old broom handles and one boat iron staple. At the rear stood a high brick wall. Adorning the packing case's sides were a part of a circus poster, a Sunday school card and a colored lithograph.

By the time Sis had finished her inspections the fire, which consisted of charred coal and odds and ends of wood, was lit. It was built right the principal, under a convenient air-hole, so the smoke was not so bad as it might have been. Then Sis produced a bundle that she had hugged carefully under her arm during the long walk. Unrolling the old apron that was wrapped around it, she disclosed to view a small battered coffee-pot, about an ounce of coffee and a tiny package of brown sugar, observing, with a little womanly gesture:

"I knowed very well that a boy wouldn't never think of that; so I begged Mrs. Dike to give me the coffee pot. Isn't it nice, Joe? and she was a going to throw it away and I got the coffee of a woman, as I minds her baby sometimes instead of the penny, and a real nice grocery man let me scrape out a sugar barrel."

Here, all out of breath at such a long speech for her, Sis made the coffee and set it triumphantly upon the fire to boil, Joe exclaiming:

"Well, I'm blessed! we're a doing it right up to the handle."

While sis hovered round the fire, for fear of an unruly coal upsetting the cherished coffee-pot, Joe drew from some hidden resource a lemon and two lumps of sugar. After slicing the lemon he dropped it along with the sugar into a tomato can full of water, and having stirred the beverage with his pen-knife gravely licked the blade to see if it was all right. Then, as he turned the butter-tub into a table, covering it with a piece of sacking marked in large black letters, "This Side Up," he remarked:

"There isn't another feller as I'd invite to this air Christmas Eve thindy but you, Sis. There's lots on 'em as 'ud be glad to come; it isn't every day as they gits such a treat."

"Oh, Joe, it's jess lovely," answered Sis, with an admiring glance at the spread that nearly resulted in the collapse of the coffee-pot, which took a notion just then to execute a dip.

And Joe himself began to feel rather proud of his treat when everything was set forth. There was an apple cut into four quarters and arranged upon a broken bit of a blue china plate, whilst an orange sliced into as many pieces as possible graced half of a wooden butter platter. The chief features, however, were a very small plum cake and a ditto mince pie. The cake, placed upon the upturned bottom of a red collar-box, occupied the middle of the table, a tiny American flag stuck in its centre. The lemonade, flanked by two oyster shells, was for want of space consigned to the floor, while the candle flickered itself into little gullies down the sides of the ginger beer bottle that did duty as a candlestick, perhaps in the vanity for the feast to begin.

Whether it should be a pie or a cake had been the important question, and they had at last split the difference by investing five of the ten cents in a cake and the other five in a pie.

It had been a large sum for Joe to spend in luxuries, not many tens finding their way to his pocket; in fact, it was his last cent, but he was perfectly satisfied with the result and I do not believe there were two happier children in New York that night than they, when the coffee had been drank to the last drop and pronounced "elegant" (as old oyster can serving for a cup), and the great event of the evening the cake was to be cut.

"Here, Sis, you cut it, women always does," and Joe shoved the penknife toward his companion, declining perfectly unaware of the impropriety of the command, until his little face was flushed over the cake exactly with her finger before placing the knife to it.

"Hold on, Sis, till I make a speech." (This in an undertone.) "It's always done when they brings on the pie and cake." So saying Joe refilled the oyster shells with lemonade, and having placed the tattered remains of his hat firmly upon the back of his head, he struck his shell against that drew from Sis's lips a long drawn oh! and began with:

"Ladies and gentlemen"—

"Why, Joe, there ain't none—there's only me and you," interrupted Sis.

"It don't make no odds, they always say it if there ain't no more present," explained Joe with: "Don't interrupt the chairman."

"We've met together on this air treat; now, Sis (this in an aside), you must say, 'Hear, hear,' which order Sis, her blue eyes full of astonishment at this new accomplishment in her friend, meekly obeyed; Joe continued with: "which is an out and out outer, if I do say it myself, and—and—" Here Joe stirred the lemonade, which looking an if there were brandy in it, "and I'll cut it short; here's a jolly Christmas and—a big cake of gratitude." Dropping into his seat upon the box bashful, perspiringly: "Now, Sis, you must make a speech, too."

"Oh! I couldn't, Joe," exclaimed the little girl.

"Yes, you can, too—It's easy enough. Tilly did at Jim's party, and she ain't half so pretty as you be," replied Joe encouragingly.

"Did she?" inquired Sis. "Then, perhaps—I'll try if you promise not to laugh."

"All right, go ahead. Here take a sip of lemonade; it will sort of put the spunk inter you," and Joe pushed the tomato can toward her.

Rising and shaking out her little worn dress, Sis placed her arms akimbo. She remembered seeing a woman doing it once, who was talking to a big crowd.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said Sis, "I am so very much glad that I was invited to this beauter-ful treat, with such a love-ly plum cake. I hopes Joe will have one next Christmas Eve."

"Hear! hear!" called out Joe; thereby causing Sis, in her confusion, to add hurriedly:

"Many happy returns of the day, amen."

"Hurray!" shouted Joe, "it's better nor Tilly's ten times," at which Sis reseated herself, blushing with pleasure and feeling, perhaps, the least speck puffed up at her success. Poor little waif, it was something new for her to receive praise.

The speeches having been given to their entire satisfaction, Joe felt his duty as host somewhat relaxed and, leaning back against the side of the packing case, he remarked carelessly:

"What do you think of my pictures, Sis?"

"They're jess love-ly, Joe; where did you get 'em?" replied Sis, trying to sip the lemonade from her oyster shell, just as she had seen ladies of her acquaintance take their saucers full of tea.

"Oh, I picked 'em up 'round about. Was you ever at a circus, Sis?"

"No;" and seeing that she had rather fallen in Joe's estimation at this confession she hastily added, "but I was to Moody's and Sankey's once." This not producing exactly the effect she expected, she continued with:

"Do you believe in Santy Claws, Joe?"

"What? The feller what comes down chimney and sich rubbish? Do you think as I've got anything soft about me?" Then, catching the look of disappointment on the girl's face, he hastily added: "Maybe there's something in't for girls."

"Oh, I wish there was," exclaimed Sis, tucking up her little bare toes beneath her skirt, for, although it was rather a mild night for that time of year, still, now the fire was dying out and the feast fast disappearing, the cold air began to make itself felt.

"I don't s'pose Santy Claws has much time to bother about sich a shabby little girl as me, but I'd like a really, really doll," and the child's eyes shone with such a happy light at the bare thought that some one outside the packing-case came very near betraying himself.

"And," continued the girl, "I'd want him to bring you sich a lot of things—a love-ly big cake." Then, thinking that perhaps she was reflecting upon the smallness of the one they had just eaten, she quickly added: "But it couldn't be beautifuller nor your'n."

"Why, Sis, I say, what's the matter? you've got sich red cheeks and——"

"Have I?" and Sis's little brown hand went up to her face at Joe's words, as she continued with—"perhaps it's the lemonade."

"Cracky! what's that?" and Joe gazed open-eyed at a folded piece of paper that had fallen from the sky, as it appeared to him, right into his lap. "If it's any of them boys," he ejaculated, jumping up, "I'll put a head on 'em."

"Oh! Joe, look here, there's writing on it, maybe, oh! maybe it's from Santy Claws," exlaimed Sis.

Although Joe muttered "fiddlesticks," his eyes were round with astonishment when he read on the paper: "For Master Joe and Miss Sis," and on opening it found a fifty-cent piece and more writing, or rather printed letters, which read:

"Santa Claus is very sorry that he had nothing left to give Joe and Sis to-night, but if they will be at packing-case house to-morrow morning at ten, some one will be there to take them to a friend of Santa Claus, where perhaps there will a really doll and a beautiful cake."

"Well, I'm blessed," was all Joe could utter, while Sis, clapping her hands with delight, cried out:

"Oh, Joe, I knowed there was a Santy Claws. Isn't he good? Jess think, he calls this packing-case house; how funny.

"Well," answered Joe, "there's the money and there's the letter, and it does look queer."

"You'll be here, Joe, won't you?" questioned Sis, a little anxiously.

"Yes, I guess so; I don't know of any other appointment to hinder," replied Joe, with a grin, who was rapidly recovering his usual manner, and, after a moment's thought, he continued with:

"I tell you what, Sis: We'll get Mother Mack to put us up to-night. We'll have jolly good beds for once and a breakfast that'll make your mouth water. Come along." So saying, Joe blew out the light and depositing the candle in his pocket, while Sis, lifting her burnt sleeve, followed him forth into the night, casting a last expectant look around at the kind Santa Claus who had not forgotten them. Thus, together they pass out from the vacant lot, full of bright anticipations of the morrow.

A year had come and gone since the night of Joe's treat and the very same store where Joe purchased his Christmas Eve cake was again full of choice delicacies in that line, and the same old gentleman was there; but this time, instead of gazing in at the window, he was making his way inside, holding by the hand a pretty little girl, with sweet blue eyes and silky fair hair, hugging a lovely doll possessing real hair and a fur tippet, while accompanying them was a bright, intelligent-looking boy. Both children were neatly, even handsomely clad. All at once the little girl exclaimed excitedly:

"Oh! Uncle, there's the very same cake man as last year. See, Joe, there he is! I wonder if he will know you?"

"Of course he won't, Sis, I've changed my tailor since then," and the boy's laughing eyes twinkled with fun, while the old gentleman chuckled until he was red in the face, and the two children had to pat him on the back to keep him from choking.

"It must be a plum cake and big," was the little girl's order, and she had her way. Years after, when she grew up and had a nice home of her own, she used to tell her children about Joe's treat and how through it two of New York's little waifs found such a happy home.—FLORENCE REVERE PENDAR.

Every Day Lessons in Farm Life.

A fair in every village may strike the reader as an absurd idea, but according to my views it is an excellent one. Let me explain. In all small villages there are one or more stores where the entire neighborhood go to buy supplies. On rainy days and during the winter these stores are more or less crowded with farmers and their sons, who discuss their farms, crops, etc.

We have such a community here. At one of our stores was hung one day a big potato, labeled with the name of the variety, also the name of the man who grew it. Now, every one who walked into that store was attracted by this fine specimen, and it was not many days before other farmers brought in sample potatoes, corn and the like. In each case it was the best the farm afforded. In this way farmers in the neighborhood became interested in this agricultural show; it incited them to improve their seed and buy or exchange new varieties with each other.

I can cut ten shocks more of drilled corn in one day by the following plan than I can in the old way, viz.: carrying it all in the arms. After making the "buck," cut all the corn within reaching distance and set it around the buck. After this has been done cut the rest of the corn that belongs to the shock and throw it on in piles, then take these piles by the tops and set them around the small shock that had been started before.

None but the laboring man who has suffered actual pain while husking corn can appreciate what a cure for cracked and chapped hands means. Do not wash your hands during cold weather oftener than can be helped. Grease them in the morning with clean sheep's tallow; melt it and rub it in thoroughly; the more grease you can rub in the better. At noon give them another greasing and at night wash the hands. My word for it, by this plan a man can husk corn with pleasure.

Gave It Up.

The anger of Mr. John Joseph Ryan of N. Y. city has been aroused by what he considers the inability of this Republic to protect its citizens abroad. He was naturalized in the Court of Common Pleas of New York city on October 18, 1880. The contempt which he now entertains for his citizenship has induced him to return his certificate to the court, and ask that his name be stricken from the roll. His letter says:—Seeing how American citizens are strung up unmercifully on the gallows in England, and how Messrs. White head, Curtin, Wilson and Gallagher, American citizens, have been, on the evidence of a lying informer, sentenced to life imprisonment in England without American interference, I wish to have my name erased from the American citizenship roll of your court and American at large.

Mr. Ryan deposited this letter and his naturalization papers with Clerk Rogers, in the office of the court, said that the documents would explain themand hurried out of the Court-House. He signs himself as a citizen of the Irish Republic.

When a countryman enters a small village and doesn't drive up to the tavern steps at a breakneck speed and shout whoa! in a manner to indicate that his horse can out-run, out-jump and out-trot anything and everything in the shape of horseflesh that ever lived in the county, you can make up your mind that the countryman is either sick or he has got a basket of eggs under the seat of his wagon.—Philadelphia Call.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM DARKEYDOM HALL.

Brudder Gardner gets on Something About the Right and Wrong of Things.

[From The Detroit Free Press.]

"Dar am seb'ral things dat doan' look 'zactly right to me," said Brother Gardner, as he rubbed his bald head with one hand and opened the meeting with the uthef.

"It doan' look 'zactly right to see one man wuth ten millyon dollars an' anoder wuth only ten cents (applause by Samuel Shin), but yit if I was de ten millyon dollar man I wouldn't keer wheder it looked right or not." [Sudden end to the applause.]

"It doan' look 'zactly right for one man to own a great foundry, while anoder man am obleeged to work fur him fur $1 a day ["Hear! hear!" from Judge Cadaver], but if I was de $2 a day man I wouldn't frow myself out of a job to spite de owner or to please a demagogue." [The Judge subsides.]

"It doan' look 'zactly right to see one man hold offis all de time, while anoder man has to shove a jack-plane fur a libin' (great rustle in Pickle Smith's corner), but he who shoves de jack-plane has de respect of de community an' keeps outer jail." [Rustle dies away.]

"It doan' look zactly right to see fo'ty lawyers rush to defend a criminal who has stolen money in his pockets, while de offender who am moneyless am left todig his way frew a ten-foot wall wid an ole knife-blade (grins on a dozen faces); but if I was a lawyer I should airn my money any odder way except by sawin' wood. De public doan' look fur any perticuler display of conscience on de part of lawyers, an' darfore suffer no disappintments." [Grins no longer observable.]

"It doan' look 'zactly right fur one man to have a big brick house an' anoder man a rotigh bo'd shanty, but 'long 'bout tax-time de man in de shanty kin sit on de fence an chuckle over de fack dat he haint rich.

"It doan' look 'zactly right to see one man go pushin' an' swellin' an' crowdin' everybody else off de sidewalk to let de public know dat he am a king-bee, but such men have to carry de anxiety of bein' in debt to de tailor an' of dodgin' de grocer an' of subscribin' $25 to build a church widout a hope of bein' able to pay ten cents on de dollar.

"In fack, my friends, dar am heaps an' heaps o' things dat doan' look 'zactly right to us at fust glance, but when ye come to figger it up an' divide an' subtract we've all got a heap to be thankful fur an' to encourage us to get up airly in de mawnin'. A man kin brace his legs an' lay back like a mule, an' kick away at de hull world an' hate everybody an' be hated in return, or he kin pick up sartin crumbs o' consolashun, crowd inter a seat in de back eand of de wagin, an' take a heap o' comfort, knowin' dat somebody is wuss off dan himself. Let us accumulate to bizness."

Dying of Thirst.

"Did you ever suffer extreme hunger or thirst?" was asked of a Kentucky colonel who had been relating some solid stories about himself.

"Well," he replied, "I never suffered what might be called extreme hunger, but no man knows how to endure the agonies of thirst better than I do.

"I remember the time well," he continued, retrospectively. "I was on a fishing excursion and became lost in the woods. For three days not a drop passed my lips. My lengthened absence finally caused alarm and a party was sent out in search of me. They found me lying in an unconscious condition on the banks of a little trout stream, and it was hours before any hopes of saving me were entertained."

"Was the trout stream dry?" asked one of the interested listeners.

"Dry? Certainly not. How could I catch fish if the stream was dry?"

"Well, I don't see how you could suffer from thirst with a stream of water close at hand."

"Water close at hand?" repeated the Kentucky Colonel. "And what has water got to do with a man's being thirsty?"—Philadelphia Evening Call.

"GALLANTRY AWAKENS EARLY in the breasts of some Boston boys," says the Journal of that city. "A lady in that city has a class in the Sunday school of one of the leading churches, the membership of which consists of boys who are each about eight years of age. Like most youngsters they are of too exuberant spirits to keep altogether as quiet as the demands of the school require, and are prone to become restless and noisy at times. A few Sundays ago one of them was particularly uneasy, when the teacher, thinking to shame him into quiet, said: 'Now, George, I don't know what I shall do with you if you are so noisy. I am afraid I shall have to punish you for it, and think the best way to do so would be to make you sit in my lap.' 'Ah,' said the young scapegrace with an arch look, 'if you should do that, Mrs. ——, I think you would find the whole class getting noisy.'"

Bravery is no opening of the heart. We find it in very few people; and that which we generally see is nothing but a subtle dissimulation to attract the confidence of others.

A FLOATING THEATRE.

The Grand Scheme Which is to be Inaugurated on the Gladiator.

A startling innovation is to be introduced into the histrionic world in the shape of a floating theatre company, says the New York Times. A certificate was filed in the County Clerk's Office incorporating the company, of which the Trustees are Mr. William B. Stone, Mr. S. Gonant Foster, of the firm of Otis & Co.; Mr. Ross C. Stone, Mr. Robert M. Fryer, and Mr. Sydney Neergaard. The company's capital is placed at one million dollars, to be divided into 100,000 shares. The first boat, designed by Mr. R. M. Fryer, is to be built on the catamaran principle, and the structure will be supported on two steel cylinders of 20 feet each. The dimensions will be 276 feet in length by 66 feet in width. The motive power will be a compound engine of 2,500-horse power, while the draught will be 7½ feet. Staterooms for a company of 100 will be provided, while the seating capacity of the theatre itself, including parquet and two balconies, will be for 1,500 people. The parquet is to be on the front of the vessel, taking up little more than one-third its length, and the stage will be in the middle. The engine-room, staterooms and dining-rooms and kitchen will occupy the after part. The boat is to be built by contract in N. Y. city and will cost $250,000. It is to rejoice in the title of the Gladiator.

"We have the sympathy of some very eminent theatrical people," said one of the Trustees. "I may say that they are enthusiastic on the subject. Our object is simply this: There are 2,000,000 people outside of New York and Brooklyn, distributed in towns of from 10,000 to 20,000 inhabitants, who have no opportunities of witnessing a good performance without coming to the great cities. This is always inconvenient on account of the late return at night. Moreover, great actors will not go to small towns. Do you think Booth would play in Newark? He would positively decline to do so. We shall visit such towns as Newport, Albany, Newark, Paterson, Stonington, and Fall River, anchor alongside the dock, and give them a first-rate performance, such as could never be heard in the miserably appointed theatres of such towns. We shall have a regular stock company, who will live on the boat all the year round. The appointments of the theatre will be simply sumptuous. All that art and modern theatrical improvements can suggest will be found on board the Gladiator. We shall rival Wallack's and the Fifth avenue in point of completeness, while our company will be a second Madison Square troupe and conducted upon exactly the same principles as those which govern that theatre. We can move from place to place during the summer months, but we shall keep the company in action 365 days in the year. The cost of running it will not be nearly so much as that of managing a theatre on land. There will be no land taxes, and we can therefore afford to build a very fine boat, and a theatre which will be one of the best in the world. This will be only our first structure, and we shall not venture upon the ocean with it. Later on we shall have boats to take in the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays. We shall elect our officers in December, and next spring we hope to be able to launch the Gladiator."

A Creature of Impulse.

A friend of Mr. Christiancy, who was acquainted with his divorced wife, said to a reporter the day after the sudden death of Mrs. Christiancy:

"I never knew a woman in whom the scale of emotion was so long. It ranged from the loftiest exaltation to the deepest depression. She was a creature swayed by impulse. One day she would be buoyant with hope and the next day wretched. It was in one of these extremes that she married Mr. Christiancy and in the other that she told him on her wedding night that she did not love him, and cursed her fate. However, she soon returned to her state of exalted happiness. The Senator told me, even after his divorce proceedings were begun, that in her happy moods she was one of the kindest and sweetest women in the world. You may not believe it, or you may think he is a fondly foolish old man, but Senator Christiancy loved that woman with his whole heart and loves her now."

A Runner.

A Mr. Welch, of Casco, Me., ran to Oxford, twelve miles away, in two hours recently with his overcoat and cowhide boots on. After running around the square three a few times to show them "how kinky he was," he ran back, not walking a step or resting during his twenty-four mile run. He is a very singular man. He has run from Casco to Lewiston, twenty-one miles, and back several times. He takes a long steady lope, which he can keep up for hours. One time, when returning from Lewiston, he was overtaken by a man in a sleigh, who asked him to ride. "I'm in a hurry—can't stop to ride," growled Welch. Seeing by this insult to his horse the man whipped up and for ten miles tried in vain to pass this wonderful runner; then the horse gave out, but Welch kept on.

ACCIDENTALLY HEARD.

A FEW NOTES FROM THE PHILADELPHIA EVENING CALL.

IN NEW YORK.

Beggar—"Thank you, thank you. It is not every gintleman that will help a poor widdy. May you live forever and a day."

Philanthropist—"Oh, that would be a little too long. I would not want to live forever and a day."

Beggar—"Then may you live till the Bartholdi pedistal is completed."

FOR HIM POOR IS RICH.

They were returning home from the theatre and had nearly reached her home when the young man observed:

"Isn't the weather cold and raw."

She must have misunderstood him.

"Raw," she said rather hesitatingly.

"Yes, I like them raw, but" she continued, looking sweetly in his eyes, "don't you think they are nicer fried?"

What could he do?

DESERVING OF CREDIT.

"Yes," said the grocery man, "Jones has stopped drinking, is working every day and is taking good care of his family. He certainly deserves a great deal of credit."

At this juncture Jones came into the store and asked the grocery man if he would trust him to a sack of flour for a few days.

"No," was the reply, "times are too hard. I can't give any credit."

HOW SHE WOULD DO IT.

Mr. Jones—"I wonder why in the world Congress don't do something at once to stamp out polygamy?"

Mrs. Jones—"Because Congress is composed of men, and men don't know anything. I could kill polygamy with one blow."

Mr. Jones—"Oh, indeed! and how would do it?"

Mrs. Jones—"I would go to Salt Lake City and start a millinery store there."

VERY NECESSARY.

Materfamilias—"Mercy! John, what do you mean by practicing with that horrid revolver all day long, and you a theological student, too?"

John—"I am trying to learn to aim straight, ma."

Materfamilias—"But you are to be a clergyman. You will have no need of such a horrid accomplishment as that."

John—"Oh, yes, I will, too. Cousin Fred says that when I graduate he is going to get me a call for a congregation in his town, and you know he lives in Texas."

THE ADVANTAGE.

First Politician—"I hear that the salary of the Governor of Michigan is only $1,000 a year."

Second Politician—"Only $1,000? Well, that is getting things down pretty fine."

First Politician—"What puzzles me is that they should ever find anyone to take the position at that pay, for I learn that there are very few perquisites."

Second Politician—"But you forget the immense advantage of the office."

First Politician—"In what way?"

Second Politician—"A governor can not be arrested."

UNPRONOUNCEABLE NAMES.

A Russian gentleman by the name of Slobbetzoobskihivitch was traveling in Maine when a brakeman shouted:

"Wequetegnook; change cars for Androscoggin and Saccarappeconnect."

"Whatsky did he sayvitch?" asked the Russian gentleman in broken English of his traveling companion.

"He was announcing the names of stations," was the reply.

The foreigner smiled a superior smile as he leaned back in his seat, and remarked:

"We Russians are very much ahead of anybody at the heathenishest names you peoplesaff have in this country-shoff."

FOR THE CHANGE.

"I see by the papers that there is a clock in the postoffice in Monmouth, Oregon, which was brought across the plains in 1852, and has been running ever since."

"Nothing remarkable about that."

"Nothing remarkable?"

"No. I crossed the plains myself in 1852."

"Well, what of that? This clock was taken across the plains in that year and has been running ever since."

"Exactly. That clock was probably with our party. We were attacked by Indians, and I don't wonder it has been running ever since. I find the running myself every time I think of it."

BARNUM ON THE PANAMA.—Mr. Beecher paused in the middle of one of his announcements Sunday, knit his brow and then stumbled over the title of a lecture that was to be delivered. "I guess that's what something like it," he added in a tone of annoyance; "I'm in that detestable type which promises was nowadays, the date of which seems to be so make it impossible for anybody to tell exactly."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., FEB. 7, 1884.

A Yankee editor, observing that "the census embraces 17,000,000 women," asks: "Who wouldn't be a census?"

Mr. J. J. Mitchell has purchased the Alabama Progress, published at Florence. We can welcome Mr. Mitchell into the guild editorial, and hope that he may fare well with its cares, responsibilities, abuses, and last as well as least, its emoluments.

Rev. John DuBois, of the M. E. Church, known far and wide for his eminent piety and earnest christian character, died at Whistler, Ala., on the 31st ult., aged 85 years. He was the inventor of an excellent cotton gin known as the DuBois Flange Rib Gin, which is now extensively manufactured in Louisville.

We are told that the counties composing this Senatorial district take turns in furnishing a State Senator from the district, and that Chilton is entitled to the next Senator. If so, who is to be the man? Chilton must present a name to the district nominating convention, and if she presents the name of a good man, she will no doubt get the nomination.

Among the new applications of cotton is its use, in part, in the construction of houses, the material employed for the purpose being the refuse, which, when ground up with about an equal amount of straw and asbestos, is converted into a paste, and this is formed into large slabs or bricks, which acquire, it is said, the hardness of stone, and furnish a really valuable building stock.

The demand for southern outrage stories is so great and the supply so limited, that some of the Republican papers are likely to get out of raw material soon. Now is a good time for them to advertise their premium list, for instance: "For the best bloody shirt romance, $100; second best, $50: third best, $25. Small whippings and minor cases of intimidation, $5 per dozen. All communications of this kind paid for on delivery and no questions asked."

The following card, which appeared in the Seabright, N. J., Sentinel, edited by Rev. P. Hall Packer, of the Atlantic Highlands Camp Meeting Association, explains itself: "We heard a man remark the other day if our editor put anything in the paper about him he would walk into the sanctum and shoot the editor down like a dog. We would just say that we always keep on hand for the accommodation of such beings four clubs, one axe, one hatchet, one revolver, and two fighting editors with brass knucks, always under training. We hope he will call and see us, so he may have a small chance to practice."

Kindling a fire on a bitter morning in winter, when the alternative lies between dressing in the cold, or creeping back into bed until the room is warm, is a thing that wants to be done with expedition and certainty. There is neither time nor inclination to scurry around after kindlings, and the oil can means involuntary suicide. The best things are corn cobs. Take ten bushels of them, soak them a few minutes in hot water in which saltpetre has been dissolved in the proportion of one pound to six gallons, dry them well and have them handy. Chuck half a dozen underneath, pile on the wood, touch them with a match. It will be all right.

Let our people bear it in mind that this is the year for electing members to the legislature. Many matters of deep interest to every citizen will come up for consideration in our general assembly next winter, and the people cannot begin too soon to cast about for men who can and will fully and capably represent those interests. Owing to the fact that the per diem of a legislator will barely pay the board bill of a member while at the capital, men fully capable to represent the people and grapple with problems of state, are loath to leave their homes and private business for public work; but in making selections let the people organize a political draft and call for the best men and nominate and elect them. Go into the highways and by-paths and compel them to come in and do service.—Mountain Home.

Case of the Mob Convicted.

Birmingham, Jan. 30.—Bob Crews, a member of the mob that broke open the jail in search of Wesley Posey, the negro rapist, for the purpose of lynching him, on the night of Dec. 3rd, was convicted in the County Court to-day. The punishment is fixed at $25 fine or twenty days in the coal mines, with time additional for the costs, which would make the whole term about six months. The reason of the light sentence is mental weakness and drunkenness, both of which were proved. This is the first trial in the Posey disturbance.

Almost a Fatal Blunder.

It is said that the recent Temperance Convention at Tuscaloosa, but for the good sense of Mr. G. N. Gilmer, would have put a ticket in the field for State officers. If the so-called friends of temperance in this State want to kill the movement as dead as a herring, they have only to bring it into politics. We suspect the sincerity of some of the men engineering the temperance movement in this State. We think they are moved more by ambition than by philanthropy. It would be well for them to know that there is but one way to political preferment in Alabama, and that that way lies through the Democratic party.—Jacksonville Republican.

After a four days trial in the circuit court of Calhoun county, the jury in the case of the State vs. N. A. Graham, editor of the Shelby Sentinel, charged with libel of Judge W. L. Whitlock, returned a verdict of not guilty. This was nothing more than both parties to the suit expected, Whitlock having admitted that he was only keeping the case before the courts for the purpose of annoying Mr. Graham, who had charged him with being drunk, while presiding judge in the circuit court of Shelby, some five years since. Whitlock had admitted that he was drunk. In this particular, it was a remarkable libel suit, and one in which the law allowed a disreputable man to prosecute a good citizen for libel, without any grounds whatever.

A young lady recently addressed a letter to Ruskin on the subject of art training. Desirous of becoming an artist, and wishing good advice, she thought she could do no better than apply to so high an authority. The reply was characteristic and rather disappointing. The great critic, without giving her any hint as to the right course to pursue, told her "It would be better to write less and cultivate a good and beautiful handwriting. No one who writes as you do could make a good artist." It took five people to decipher the hieroglyphics in which Ruskin clothed these few words. The young lady framed this curious production and hung it in her studio.

The Baltimore Sun notices the filing of a suit in that city against the Mayor and City Council and Dr. Hunter, city physician, by Henry W. Wilson, claiming $30,000 damages for injury resulting from compulsory vaccination. It is claimed that in February, 1882, Mr. Wilson was called upon by Dr. Hunter and informed that he must be vaccinated. Mr. Wilson refused, when the doctor returned with a policeman. Under threat of being sent to jail the plaintiff submitted, and as a consequence of the operation he is now in a helpless condition from a constitutional disease, requiring the attendance of four physicians. This promises to be a cause celebre.

The Talladega Reporter and Watchtower of last week contained a complimentary editorial on Mr. H. A. Wilson, Receiver of Public Moneys at the U. S. Land Office in Montgomery. Mr. Wilson is a Republican, who was raised in Talladega, where he made his bond, which is a very large one. Some of his own party are endeavoring to have him ousted from his present position. The Reporter says that so long as a Democrat cannot get the position it would be best to keep an honest Republican in it. We agree, and think further that an honest Republican is to be preferred in any office to a Democrat who is dishonest.

A negro man was taken from the Chambers county jail on Saturday night last by a mob and hung. He had outraged and then stabbed a lady of the neighborhood. His victim was a young woman nineteen years of age. She is reported to be in critical condition. Lynchings will never cease as long as such crimes are committed.

The Farming Outlook.

Farm work has been very much retarded by the long continued bad weather, but the "knowing ones" claim that it is all for the best. The soil they predict, will be in much better condition, and more easily cultivated, and that 1884 promises to be a much better crop year than has been experienced in many years since the close of the war. So mote it be. Good crop years are needed.—Wetumpka Times.

A rich man has a plain and unattractive daughter, to whom no eligible young fellow pays much attention. At last one beau is noticed to be rather "gone," and the love affair develops for a couple of weeks. Then to him the father: "Young man, I notice you are paying very marked attention to my daughter."

The young man stammers and stutters, taken aback.

"Do not be alarmed. I am willing you should. Indeed, I may tell you that the day I give you my daughter I will place $100,000 in the bank to your account."

"You are very kind, I'm sure. But if it's all the same to you, supposing you put your daughter in the bank to my account and give me the $100,000."

George W. Childs declines to be Mayor of Philadelphia, because the owner of a newspaper, he says, should be free of political entanglements.

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promtitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and renew all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Miss Reed Hide has returned to Nashville.

Mrs. O. A. Duke is on a visit to relatives in Nashville.

S. E. Hirscher, Montgomery Music Emporium, has a large and elegant lot of valentines. Send your orders to him.

The VIEW is under obligations to Dr. I. D. Lanier, for interesting contributions to its cabinet of minerals and curiosities.

A brave man thinks no one his superior who does him an injury; for he has it then in his power to make himself superior to the other by forgiving it.

We were incorrect in announcing the date of the convening of our Circuit Court. It begins the fourth Monday in March, the 24th day, and continues one week.

The Messrs. Gullahorn have removed their stock of goods to Cooper's Station and stored them in their saw mill commissary for supplying their employees.

Our neighbor up the road, Calera, has been on a first-rate "boom" since it first voted whiskey away, two years ago. Property is advancing in value all the time and new citizens are continually moving in.

Read over the list of magnificent presents that are being offered to subscribers to the Greenville Advocate, when Clubbing with the Chilton View. You will get both papers and a chance to draw a valuable present for the small sum of $2.50.

One exchange remarks: "Scientists say that the reason kissing is so pleasant is because the teeth, jaw bone and lips are full of nerves, and when the lips meet an electric current is generated." To which another exchange replies: "Will scientists go far enough to assert that a lovely girl with cherry lips has more of such nerves than a cross old maid with a wart on her nose? If not, their kissing theory must fail."

A card of the Montgomery Eye, Ear and Throat Infirmary appears elsewhere in these columns. This is a noble charitable institution of which the capital city is justly proud. As will be seen from the advertisement, it is free to the poor. The Physician in charge is Dr. Benj. J. Baldwin, who has had experience as a specialist by extensive practice in this country and study in Europe. He has successively filled the positions of House Physician to N. Y. City Lunatic Asylum, 1877; House Surgeon to N. Y. City Charity Hospital, '78; Lecturer in Summer Faculty, University of Louisville, '79 and '80; Resident Surgeon to Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, N. Y. City, '81. Dr. B. is a graduate of Golden Square Throat Hospital, London; and as Surgeon to the Montgomery Eye, Ear and Throat Infirmary, he is meeting with great success. The Board of Directors of the Infirmary are among the best and most prominent citizens of Montgomery.

Kinchens Boat Goes "Dry."

At the election held in Kinchens boat (No. 6), on Tuesday last, on the whiskey question, the vote was 40 for prohibition and 26 for no prohibition, a majority of 14 for prohibition.

Something New.

Mr. Willis Lowe is making preparations to erect a building near the railroad to be used as a fruit-shipping depot. He will devote himself to raising and shipping fine fruit. His experience in fruit raising is extensive, and will enable him to meet with success. He will ship various fruits and melons, and will also retail, if he finds it profitable.

A Rare Entertainment.

To-night Rev. J. P. Word, President of the Talladega Synodical Female College, will give a literary entertainment at Clanton Academy which entertainment will be repeated at Verbena Academy tomorrow (Friday) night. Prof. Word is giving these entertainments for the benefit of the institution over which he presides. The morning after he gave an entertainment in Montgomery, he was approached on the streets by a citizen, who said to him: "Here is another half dollar. You don't charge enough. You made me laugh and you made me weep, and I am a better man for having attended you entertainment last night." Clanton and Verbena will not often have the opportunity of enjoying such an entertainment, and we predict for Prof. Word a large audience at each place.

Robbery.

A man by the name of Johnson, a lumber agent at Deatsville, was robbed of $50 and a pistol, at this place, on Sunday night last. Johnson, who was said to be very much intoxicated, was sleeping in front of Mr. W. A. Collier's law office. Two negroes, Nelson Peebles and Frank Smith were arrested on Monday morning. Smith was arrested as he was on the point of taking the accommodation train for Birmingham, and Peebles was arrested by a telegram to a deputy Sheriff at Jemison, who found him on the mail train. Both had bought tickets for Birmingham. A pistol was found in the possession of one, and the other was relieved of $35.65 by the Sheriff. They will have a hearing, upon a writ of habeas corpus to-day, and in the meantime have been resting in the county boarding house. One of the negroes, Peebles, claims to be from Montgomery county, the other says he has been employed at Dorman's mill, Deatsville. He came to Clanton with Johnson, and appeared to be taking care of the latter while he was spreeing.

Professor Word.

Prof. J. L. Dodson President of Oxford College, speaking of Prof. Word, who is to give a reading at Clanton Academy to-night says:

"He has fine taste, a thorough knowledge of the principles of the science of elocution, a well trained voice, and presents his subjects pleasantly and naturally. Those who attend his entertainments may expect a rare treat, and will be fully compensated for their time and money, besides the pleasure afforded them in aiding in the cause of education which commends itself to all good citizens."

Mountain Creek Locals.

Sickness prevails in our midst. Mrs. Spann, Mr. Robertson and little Nellie Marbury are lying dangerously ill.

Our community was saddened on last Friday at the death of Mrs. J. H. Marbury. Her funeral took place at the church on Saturday morning, Judge Falkner paid a beautiful tribute to her memory. The bowed heads and tearful eyes of the large congregation present told how highly this lovely woman was esteemed. She leaves a husband and eight little children. May God comfort and sustain them in this great affliction.

Mrs. W. M. Pylant will commence her school at Canaan church next Monday. We advise all who have children to send them to this excellent lady as there are few better teachers.

Mr. W. M. Pyron has withdrawn from the mill business. His son, J. M. Pyron, will start up next week in good earnest, and here is a good place for a few good men to get employment. ARLEY.

In the opinion of the Providence Press, there are two kinds of American hog—the gunny sack and the genus homo.

Verbena News.

Health good minus a few colds.

Mr. Brooks has a brand new wagon with his name painted in full size letters.

The school review exercises were a success.

A few days of mild weather. January went out in smiles.

Another hop at the billiard room. The dance possesses an irresistable fascination for some of our tender youths.

Mr. William Patterson is building a blacksmith shop near the Baptist Church.

A good missionary collection at the Baptist church last Sunday.

Mess. Smith and Marbury's mill, below Mountain Creek, will have telephone connections with Verbena.

Mr. Hanlin our model P. M., has made a change at the Post office. The boxes now front in the R. R. waiting room.

The Prof. has now a fine turn out, a good buggy and horse. Rumor is at work.

Spring oat planting progressing finely.

How many of 'Clantons lawyers want the Legislative pumpkin? Plant the seed early.

Prof. J. P. Word will give one of his select readings at Verbena Academy on Friday night.

BIJOU.

In the case of the State vs. Fred Wolffe which was tried last week in the Circuit Court of Montgomery county, the Jury returned a verdict for the State, and fixed the amount of Wolffe's liability at $20,000. Wolffe was tried for complicity in the Vincent defalcation.

A Valuable Patent.

Messrs. Shealy & Co, are now in Clanton selling Curtis & Bro.'s famous labor-saving and time-saving patent churn. This churn will make butter in from three to seven minutes. It is known as the "Cream Agitator," and is assuredly a great thing for house keepers. The Mess. Shealy have the churn on exhibition at the store of Bell & Son. Call upon them and they will show you what a valuable article they have to sell.

NOTICE!

I shall offer beginning January 12, 1884, $5,000 worth of first-class winter clothing regardless of cost, for the money!

The prices will sell it. Come Everybody!

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness after meals, Dryness of Skin, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Dimness of the Vision, Pain in the Head, over the right eye, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, &c., Sudden flushes of heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constipation, and Dreams, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt, removing all impurities through these three scavengers of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

A SPANISH BATTLE

ONE OF WHICH GIVES THE BULL THE BEST OF THE BARGAIN.

A Shopkeeper Loses Valuable Time in Mass and Encounters the Green Wolf.

Drifting but the wall of a child—a child two years old—asleep on the bed, and yet it broke out so suddenly, and it had such a high-drawn quaver in it that the mother started up with a scream.

A stove, table, bed, two or three chairs—a home in which a weak woman was battling with sickness and poverty, only asking for the bare necessities of life, and yet finding the battle going against her more and more as the days passed on. On this night there was not a mouthful in that house to eat. A hungry mouse could not have picked up crust or crumb. The last bit of bread had been given to the child at dusk, and now as it wailed out the mother clasped her hands and gasped:

"If he awakes and cries for bread—what then?"

Well! What then? It was only a question for the river with its cold, dark current. She could say to the angels in Heaven: "It was either that or starvation," and they would not judge her too harshly.

As she [illegible] there with beating heart and [illegible], the dim light making queer shadows dance about the room, a low, fierce growl made her heart stand still. The door had not swung open, and yet a gaunt wolf had found its way into the room. It stood there with blood-shot eyes looking into hers—its red tongue lolling from its mouth and flecks of foam falling to the floor. Its shaggy fur was stained and discolored—its yellow fangs clashing and grinding—a spectacle to have made a hunter's heart beat like a caged bird.

It was the Wolf of Starvation—the fierce brute which never tires—which is ever on the hunt for the helpless and weak—which growls with delight as the wails of despair and hunger reach its ears. It has scented its prey from afar, and its fangs were sharpened to rend and tear and devour.

For a moment the mother's heart stood still and she gasped for breath. Then, as she realized the horror of the situation, she rose up and cried out:

"You have come to drink the blood of my child! I'll fight you to the death!"

She had no weapon but the thin hands which had toiled and ached for long years—no hope but those born of a mother's love and affection for her offspring, but she sprung at the gaunt, strong beast and the battle began. Despair gave her strength—love steeled her heart. The beast retreated with fierce growls as she sprang forward to clutch him, and as she stood in the centre of the room she became a magnet round which he circled.

Now he slowly circles to the right, his red eyes watching her bony fingers, as they nervously worked, and every hair on his back standing up in anger. She turns slowly, always looking straight into his eyes—ready to clutch at his throat when he springs. Now he halts and glares at her, growling, sniffing—flinging the flecks of foam to the right and left and grinding those horrible fangs. Now he circles to the left—cringing, skulking, crawling like a serpent—watching to find her off her guard.

The child is aroused by the patter of the beast's feet and the labored breathing of the mother, and he sits up a silent witness of the scene. His face is whiter than snow—his eyes are big with terror—his heart chokes him.

Now the beast springs. With a cry of rage and triumph he springs full at his prey, and the woman's hands clutch his throat. They weave to and fro. They stagger this way and that. His yellow fangs graze her flesh and draw blood, and the foam-flecks are stained crimson. The child looks on with a fascination born of horror. He hears the clash of teeth as the jaws meet—he notes the fury of the vengeful eyes—his young heart seems to be stabbed at the sight of the mother's grim despair.

Such a battle! Such a prize if the gaunt, hungry beast succeeds—such a victory if the strength of a fainting, despairing woman holds out to save the life of her child. With a cry to Heaven for aid she calls up all her strength for one great effort and hurls the beast across the room. He is back again in a moment, and now he circles to the right—now to the left—now——!"

A step on the stairs! The beast halts in his circling, his ears work nervously, and as the steps come nearer his growl changes to a whine and he slinks into the darkness—away into space. The door is thrown open and Charity steps within, food in her basket and kind words upon her lips.

The battle is ended.—M. QUAD.

SAND WHICH SINGS IN THE WIND.—About twenty miles south of Stillwater, Cal., on Sand Springs Flat, at the foot of the mountain, there is a heap of sand about one hundred feet high and nearly a mile across, which sings in the wind and is constantly changing. It is thrown by the wind, which there has a circular motion, into a vast round wall with a hollow in the centre half a mile across, which goes two-thirds of the way to the bottom. It is steep and hard to climb to the top, and on the inside is even more steep, so steep that no one has ever dared to go down, for fear that the loose sand would slide down and bury them up. There are similar dunes on the Sandwich Islands, on the Hebrides, and on the Atlantic Coast.

DISCOURAGED. "Now," said the Irish mother to her family of one boy and four girls, who had been misbehaving themselves, "I am going to whip you all," and shecommenced on Jimmie to receive the first installment of the chastisement. "Mother," said Jimmie, "strike first, always." The old lady was so struck with this application of her own instructions that she did not strike any of the children, but let them off that time.—[New Haven Register.

GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS.

Private advices from Turkestan state that the Grand Duke Nicholas, feeling unhappy at his place of confinement, absconded to flee to India on horseback, but was overtaken and brought back.

The Grand Duke Nicholas was the bad boy of the Russian imperial family. He has been several times in disgrace before, and it was on account of one of his escapades and his supposed leaning toward nihilist doctrines that he was exiled. He was a nephew of the late Czar, and was born in 1831.

One night in the winter of 1871 there was a brilliant masked ball at the opera house of St. Petersburg. Among the company present was an American girl of extraordinary beauty, scarcely out of her teens, yet a widow. Among the company, also masked, was the Grand Duke. The couple became acquainted. The Prince was fascinated, and the result was that they were never parted afterward for two years and a half. The Grand Duke was, after this adventure, banished to the Caucasus.

In the lonely life of the steppes the exiled Prince looked about him for some one to love. Fair ladies were naturally scarce, but the Grand Duke ultimately settled his affection upon the exceedingly beautiful daughter of the Police Master Michaeloff, and married her. When the marriage was solemnized the Prince sent an humble and penitent letter to the late Czar, entreating his sanction for the unequal match. It was refused with anger, and the Czar, as a punishment for the offence, ordered the young Nicholas to join the expedition to the Amoor district for the exploration of Central Asia.

Meantime the beautiful daughter of the Police Master determined to take the business in her own hands, travelled to St. Petersburg, managed to get an interview with the Czar and entreated him to give his sanction to the marriage of his nephew. The imperial kinsman could not openly yield, but before the young lady departed for her home he created her Countess of Oremburg. This was taken as a proof that her appeal had made a favorable impression upon him, and when he died the Grand Duke was tempted to ask Alexander III. to let him return to the capital. The request was refused with scorn.

After this, the Grand Duke was allowed to return to St. Petersburg society and imperial favor. He took a prominent part in the Russo-Turkish war and received several distinguished marks of honor from the Czar. Soon after the latter was assassinated he again fell into disgrace, and on April 5, 1881, was arrested in the village of Sublinv, on the railway to Moscow, and interned in a castle near St. Petersburg. He was suspected of political intrigues in favor of his father, and of furthering Nihilistic plots to this end.

He was subsequently sentenced to imprisonment for life and was confined for some time in the fortress of Dunaberg. Six months later his sentence was commuted to banishment to Turkistan, where he has been for the last two years. He was given some employment in directing the building of a canal in Turkistan. Last July he was placed under arrest for a short time for interfering with the duties of the Governor of the province.

Domestic Recipes.

Here are two receipts for waffles; one for those which can be made and baked at once, and the other for those which are raised with yeast, and consequently require several hours in their preparation. Number 1: 1 quart of sifted flour, a pint of sweet milk, if it is possible to have this part cream it will be a great improvement, if not add a tablespoonful of melted butter. Beat two eggs very light, salt to your taste; a teaspoonful of baking powder should be mixed with the flour. The batter when done should be a little stiffer than for griddle cakes. These should be baked at once. Number 2: one quart of flour, one pint of sweet milk, two eggs, little melted butter, half a teacupful of yeast, or if the compressed yeast is used, a fourth of a cake will be sufficient. When light bake immediately. If the yeast is fresh these will be ready to bake in two hours after they are mixed.

A way to utilize cold buckwheat cakes has been discovered by an ingenious woman. Drop a lump of butter in a frying pan, put the cakes in, let them brown on both sides, pour a little milk over them, and send them hot to the table, and they make an entree that is astonishingly good.

A quickly made dessert is this: Make a batter as for common griddle cakes, then add an egg, and some fruit, either stewed or canned berries, drain the juice from them, and stir them into the batter; fry in a little lard and serve with pudding sauce.

A new way to make filling for layer cakes is to chop half a pound of blanched almonds, half a cup of raisins, and a small piece of citron very fine, sprinkle powdered sugar over them, let them stand well mixed for an hour, then put between the layers of any rich cake.

ALSACE-LORRAINE HAS NOW A population of 1,566,670, of whom 88,968 belong to the army. Of natives there are 1,418,025, of Germans born elsewhere 114,797, and of foreigners 33,848. Classed according to religions there are in the grand total of 1,566,670 a total of 1,218,468 Roman Catholics, 305,124, Protestants, 39,276 Jews, 3,413 persons belonging to minor Christian sects, a Buddhists, and 1 Mahommedan. In 1871 the Roman Catholic population formed 79 per cent. of the whole; it is now 77 per cent. Meanwhile, the Protestant population has increased from 17.50 to 19.43 per cent. of the whole.

A MAN'S OWN TROUBLES DO NOT HIDE his neighbor who about him no injury; for he has it then in his power to make himself superior to the other by forgiving it.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DRESSMAN THEORY: There is a lady in Hoosierdom who "sprung from a mummy." The mummy belonged to an organ grinder, and attempted to bite the boy.

TOMMIES: They were looking over the paper. "Oh, my, how funny," said she. "What is it?" he asked. "Why, here's an advertisement that says: 'No reasonable offer refused.'" "What's so odd about that?" "Nothing, nothing," she replied, trying to blush, "only those are my sentiments."

A SHABBILY dressed woman called upon one of our citizens for aid, claiming that she was in a starving condition. The citizen looked upon her plethoric form, estimating the aggregate of the superfluous fat, and answered, "You don't look like a starving woman." "I know it," she whiningly answered, "I'm bloated with grief."

HOLLOW STEEL SHAFTING, WHICH has come very generally into use in Europe, even for such heavy work as steamship propeller shafts, is found to very much lessen the weight in proportion to the decreased strength. It appears, for example, that a ten-inch shaft, with a hole four inches in diameter, has its weight reduced sixteen per cent., with a loss of only 2.56 per cent. of strength.

MISS MARY M. CAREY, YOUNG, pretty and gentle-mannered, is employed by the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad at Nemata as railroad and express agent. She has charge of yard work and signals around the station. She is at her post from 6 a. m. to 10 p. m. much of the time. She is respected by all, and understands her duties thoroughly. She is the eldest of four orphan girls who live and keep house together.

AN EXPERIMENT.—In a letter to the London Times a gentleman states that experiments made with a view to investigating the scattering of shot have convinced him that with an ordinary gun and ammunition there is much more scattering than people imagine; and to this fact he attributes many shooting casualties. For this reason he publishes the result of his experiments, with the hope that persons who use firearms will be more careful in the matter.

TWENTY YEARS AGO BIRMINGHAM, ALA., did not exist even as a village. The present site of the city was an old worn-out plantation with a surrounding mountain wilderness. Not a dollar of capital was invested in the development of its vast storehouse of hidden treasures. Now all is changed. Over $20,000,000 capital is invested in the coal and iron district of which Birmingham is the centre. Its population—about 16,000—is increasing, and the city is growing rapidly.

STAY THERE.—An eccentric farmer living in Ohio had a flock of sheep that had not been shorn for six years. The wool has grown over their eyes and is so long that it drags on the ground. On being asked why he did not shear his sheep, Mr. Sellers replied, "God put the wool on their backs to stay there and keep them warm, and I do not propose to interfere." The flock is a great curiosity, and people come from miles around to see them. Mr. Sellers never shaves, cuts his hair or finger nails.

IN SACRAMENTO, CAL., A FATHER had a young man arrested and brought before a justice on a charge of having offered an insult to his daughter. When the old gentleman came into court he saw that there would be difficulty in securing a conviction, and asked the Court that the proceedings be dismissed, and paid the costs. The old gentleman and the defendant left the court-room together. As soon as they reached the sidewalk the old man collared the youth and gave him a terrible thrashing. When he thought the boy had enough he gave him a parting kick, stepped back into the court-room and said: "Judge you witnessed the business; how much is it worth?" The Judge replied that he thought $10 would be the right figure. The old gentleman paid the coin and walked briskly off to his work.

POOLE, WHO WAS HANGED IN Dublin, is probably the last man who will have to pay the penalty for complicity in the Phœnix Park murders. His connection with the tragedy was something like O'Donnell's; he helped to kill Kenney, who was suspected of having given information to the Police about the assassination of Cavendish and Burke. We have yet to learn the fate of the other informers who betrayed their associates in the Phœnix Park affair. The British colonies refused them a landing, and at last accounts the English Government had not found an asylum for them. Then came the excitement about the killing of Carey, and under cover of that, they have managed to disappear. The hanging of O'Donnell and Poole adds to their chances of a long life, wherever they may be.

THE QUESTION OF BURNING coal in wet or dry state is still being discussed in the English journals, a large amount of both theory and practical information being set forth. One writer says that, although it is generally conceded to be true that wet bituminous coal will not produce as large a quantity of steam in a boiler as dry coal, there are few figures to substantiate this. The results of a series of tests, made recently with much care, are regarded as having considerable weight in the determination of the points involved. It appeared that a mass of washed slack holding eighteen per cent. of water and nine and nineteen-hundredths per cent. of ash, evaporated five and seven-tenths pounds of water per pound of fuel, while the same coal, with only three per cent. of water, made from eight to eighth and five-tenths pounds of steam; making due allowance for moisture by reducing to a standard of like quantities of coal free from moisture, a difference of fourteen per cent. is shown in favor of wet coal.

WRECKED BY CATCHUP.

The Forbidden Story of a Terrible Misfortune.

"I wish that I knew of some way of breaking myself of biting opium. I would be willing to go to jail—to do anything, in short, so that I could be placed in confinement until I had a chance to cure myself of this terrible habit. I never shall be able to do so if I am left to myself." These words were addressed to a correspondent by a man giving his name as George Johnson, who acknowledged that he was a confirmed opium eater. His appearance was a startling one. His face had the aspect of a haggard corpse, his eyes were hollow and sunken, but glittered with a half-maniacal fire; while a ragged growth of short black beard and long tangled hair added to his wretched appearance. His clothing was old and dilapidated; a ragged coat was buttoned up to his chin to hide a coarse, dirty shirt, and a straw hat, with a pair of brogan shoes, completed a costume that would answer equally well for a tramp or a footpad. Yet there was an air of refinement that clung to him with all his rags, and his hands, though soiled and hardened, were slender and delicate. "I am a perfect slave to opium," he continued, "and I would hesitate at nothing to procure the drug when the desire for it is on me. I will lie or steal. I heard a friend say once"—here he paused and looked significantly at the reporter—"that he would kill a man if necessary to get morphine, and I wouldn't blame him. I have fallen from a respectable station down to what you see me, and there is no telling how much lower I will get unless I have help. The amount of morphine I can take has not, I suppose, ever been equalled. One time I took ninety grains, and it did not injure me. I think by gradually increasing the dose I could take twice as much without danger. When I can't get enough morphine to do me any good I take crude opium or chloroform. I know you will hardly believe me when I say that in one night I used a pound of chemicaled pure chloroform by inhalation, yet it is a fact. I have gone for three or four days at a time without eating, in order to buy morphine or opium with the little money I had. I am only twenty-seven, but I began using it when I was but twenty-two. At that time I was a deacon in a Christian church; I never drank, swore or gambled. I was then the owner of a retail drug store in Hickman, where I remained all through the yellow fever epidemic. Out of a population of 1,200 200 died, among them eight doctors, but I came out of it healthier than ever. When the habit took firm hold on me I commenced going down hill. I lost my property—lost my health, my friends and my self-respect. I believe the knowledge of it hastened my father's death; it has beggared me, estranged the girl to whom I was to be married, and it will prove my death. It hangs over me like the blackest of nightmares; it has taken possession of my every waking thought, and usurped every dream of night. The horror of my situation has benumbed every faculty but that of dread, and every day I grow more keenly alive to my awful condition. I would part with anything, even my mind, and be contented to live the remainder of my life in a maniac's cell, if I could only be cured."

War Anecdotes.

Adjutant General Townsend, of the U. S. Army, in his anecdotes of the civil war gives us the following: "General Townsend was at General Scott's headquarters when the dispatcher came in announcing the rout of the Union forces in the first battle of Bull Run. In regard to the movement, by the way, which ended so disastrously, the author says that McDowell's plans were approved in detail by the President and his cabinet, and by General Scott and his staff. Among others to whom they were submitted, General Fremont was especially asked by the President if he perceived any objection, or could suggest any improvement; not a word of criticism, however, was forthcoming from any source, and the unlucky programme was unanimously sanctioned in all its features.

"Amid the panic and confusion that followed the defeat, General Scott was at all events, it seems, unwavering as a rock. When reports were brought him that the rebels were advancing unopposed on Washington, and would soon be on the Long Bridge, the old soldier would calmly look on the informant and reply: 'It is impossible, sir! We are now tasting the first fruits of a war, and learning what a panic is. We must be prepared for all kinds of rumors. Why, sir, we shall soon hear that Jefferson Davis has crossed the Long Bridge at the head of a brigade of elephants, and is tramping our citizens under foot! He has no brigade of elephants; he cannot by any possibility get a brigade of elephants.' But though Scott kept his head, hardly anybody else did, and 'for a time,' according to the author, 'there is little doubt that had a squad of men mounted on black horses (the Virginia troop of 'Black Horse' had been a bugbear for some weeks) appeared on the Long Bridge or in the streets of the city, there would have been a stampede worthy of a flock of sheep.'"

SAVED.—A stout man smoking the street the other day was on the point of being run over by a reckless driver when, at the risk of her own life, a beautiful young lady ran to his rescue and piloted the poor man to the pavement. A rich bachelor saw the transaction, and straightway sought her out, was introduced, courted, proposed, was accepted, and married the heroine. The effect has been wonderful. Hopeful young ladies may now be seen standing in the vicinity of street-crossings with one eye searching for stray blind men, and the other on the lookout for a rich bachelor, for it would be a terrible move to tackle the old blind man without the rich bachelor being around.

An Undoubted Blessing.

About thirty years ago a prominent physician by the name of Dr. William Hall discovered, or produced after long experimental research, a remedy for diseases of the throat, chest and lungs, which was of such wonderful efficacy that it soon gained a wide reputation in this country. The name of the medicine is Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and may be safely relied on as a speedy and positive cure for coughs, colds, sore throat, etc.

WHAT SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

I cannot speak too highly of the ARGOSY, my boys think they could never do without it.
MRS. M. E. ATTELL, West Richfield, Ohio.

THE ARGOSY has been so good this year I must have it another; enclosed is $1.75.
DAN. W. SUFFRONEDGE, Boston.

I like the ARGOSY very much, and think it greatly in advance of the usual style of papers for the young—the boys like it.
MRS. AGNES S. ARMSTRONG, Ephraim, Utah Ter.

I have taken a number of papers, but I never had one I like as well as THE ARGOSY. To sit before the fire these cold evenings and read it is the best enjoyment I know of. To-night I am reading my old papers over again.
W. S. KNOWLTON, Portland, Me.

I should take the ARGOSY another year if I had to sit up nights to earn the money to pay for it; enclosed is $1.75.
ED. L. FERRERTON, Ansonia, Conn.

I am so deeply interested in the ARGOSY I should feel lost without it; please extend my subscription another year.
WINNIE S. HOOPS, Audubon, Ia.

I have been a reader of the ARGOSY the last year, and cannot now do without it, let it cost what it will.
D. E. BROTHERS, Wakefield, Kan.

THE ARGOSY is the very best paper of the kind published. I would not do without it for twice $1.75.
FRANK G. JOHNSON, Painesville, O.

I prize the ARGOSY above all family papers. Its high moral tone and instructive reading is sure to leave a lasting impression with its readers.
MRS. IDA ADAMS, Fort Bidwell, Wy.

The character of the ARGOSY commends itself to all.
WM. S. CLARK, Washington, D.C.

I have read the Golden Days, Youth's Companion, and Wide-Awake, for beyond all it has given me the ARGOSY. I would not give it for any paper I ever saw.
A. B. WALLACE, Quincy, Ill.

EARLY MORNING SCENE.

You may talk of moonlight scenes,
Where fair Lorne's mellow beams
Bathe with soft, translucent splendor, vale and hill;
But, if on some autumn morn,
When the day is newly born
You will look, you'll see a sight more love. still.

On fair Mississippi's bank,
Where the grass lay dark, and dank,
At the early morn I lately took my way;
All around was hushed and still,
Heavy fragrance seemed to fill
The soft air, and usher in approachin day.

In deep silence vast, profound,
All things earthly seemed then bound,
And I shud'ring, held my breath in dree and fear;
Ghostly figures gray, and slow,
Seemed to hither, thither, go,
Drawing every instant nearer, and mor mar.

But in scarce a moment's time,
Aye, before the church bell's chime
Could have struck the hour of day that no had come;
There arose a murm'ring breeze,
And a rustling in the trees,
That sounded like a tiny muffled drum.

And far in the east was seen
A shade of roseate gleam,
And the ghostly shadows vanished fror my sight;
And another moment's space,
And such wondrous change took place,
As the greatest poet pen could neve write.

For, behold! the scene so gray,
Had by magic passed away,
And the earth in all its pristine glory shon
As it never shone before,
Since those old, old days of yore,
When in Eden's vale sin ne'er had cause a moan.

Upon hillside, vale and dell,
The bright sun god's radiance fell,
Clothing every thing it touched with beaut rare;
Till dame Nature's brilliant dress,
Seemed embodied loveliness
That no power in all the earth could mak more fair.

Every leaf, and blade of grass,
By this great magician's glass,
Was most quickly made to shine with dia monds bright;
And the foliage's hue
Autumn painted, hung with dew,
One could ne'er believe had known th shades of night.

Then talk not of moonlight fair,
For more lovely far, and rare,
Is the moment when the Day God comes t view;
Fairy fingers paint the scene
With rich colors, wondrous sheen,
And each morning is transformed b beauties new.

STELLA M. N.

THE HAUNTED POOL.

BY DAVID KER.

The sun was setting over the Ganges one bright summer evening in 1871. The day had been a hot one even for India, and it was an unspeakable relief to everyone when the scorching sun began to decline at last, and the lengthening shadows of the tall palms along the river-bank told that night was at hand.

And now the Hindu inhabitants of the neighboring village, who had been lying motionless all afternoon under the shade of their reed-thatched roofs, or of the vast overarching banyan trees around them, came trooping down to the water in a body.

Instantly the whole bank of the great river—so lovely and silent all through the long, burning day—became all alive with noise and bustle. Children paddled in the broad, still pools, or chased each other in and out of the tall, feathery bamboo clump that grew along the bank. Women filled their earthen pitchers from the stream, or washed their threadbare clothes. Men began to scour their brass lotahs (drinking vessels), or to kindle fires for the cooking of their evening meals; while a little farther down the stream, a group of young girls, wading out into the shallow water, fell to splashing each other with might and main, amid shouts of merry laughter.

To any one accustomed to the ways of India, it would have seemed strange enough to see, upon the wrists and ankles of nearly all the girls, and many of their mothers likewise, heavy bangles of solid silver, which any western lady might have been proud to wear. But the Hindu peasants, to whom savings banks are utterly unknown, have no way of keeping their money safe except by carrying it about with them in this fashion—a somewhat hazardous plan, it must be owned, in a country swarming with the most expert and daring thieves in the world.

Suddenly, one of the girls, who had wandered a little farther out into the stream than the rest, disappeared under the water with a piercing shriek, as if dragged down by some overpowering force. A few bubbles that rose suddenly to the surface were the only token of her fate, while her terrified companions turned and rushed back to the bank as fast as possible, screaming:

"A crocodile! a crocodile!"

Several days had passed before any of the village women dared to approach the scene of this terrible mischance. At length, the bolder ones of the band ventured in again, and the others, seeing that no harm came of her daring, began to follow her example. More than a week passed without any accident, and everything was beginning to go on as usual, when, one evening, a second girl disappeared in precisely the same manner as the first.

The terror was now universal, and all the best brains of the village set themselves with one accord to get rid of this [illegible] monster; but, look for him as they might, nothing was to be seen of him.

Several days later the wife of one of the villagers was washing her white wrapper on the bank of the river, when it slipped from her hands and floated slowly out into the wide, still pool formed by the bend of the stream. The woman at once waded after it, and had just succeeded in clutching it, when she was seen by those on the bank to give a sudden start, throw her arms convulsively into the air and disappear under water just as the other two had done before.

* * * * * * *

About three days after this last catastrophe, Mr. Henry Sparks, the British Commissioner for the District of Junglywallah, was at work in his office amid a perfect mound of papers, halting every now and then to wipe his streaming face (which, despite the numerous punkah, or swinging-fan, worked by his native servant outside with a cord passed through a hole in the wall, looked very much like a half-melted snowball), when he was suddenly disturbed by a knock at the door.

"Come in!" cried he snappishly, expecting the entrance of some Hindu farmer or peasant with a complaint as long and unintelligent as an Assyrian inscription. But at the first glimpse of the person who entered his face cleared at once.

The visitor was a tall native, with the handsome features and stately bearing of a Mahratta. His figure, nearly six feet in height, was so gaunt and sinewy that it seemed to be made of pin-wire, and his piercing black eyes looked out from beneath the folds of his white turban with the quick, keen, watchful glance of a practical hunter.

In truth, Ismail, the Mahratta, was well used to tracking other game beside deer or tigers. Over and above his occupations as scout, hunter and government courier, he was in constant request as a detective, and, for tracking down either a wild beast or a criminal, he had no equal in Bengal.

Gliding into the room as noiselessly as a shadow, he made a low salaam, and said in his own language:

"May the humblest of his servants speak to the Sahib?" (master).

There was nothing particularly humble, it must be admitted, in the speaker's bearing; on the contrary, he held himself erect, and looked the Commissioner full in the face with the air of a man who knew his own value, and had something to tell which he felt to be worth hearing; but Mr. Sparks, with whom Ismail was an old acquaintance, appeared to understand these signs perfectly, and said:

"What has Ismail to tell? I am listening."

"I have been at the village of Ramganj," answered the Mahratta, laying a stress upon the last word.

"Ramganj?" echoed Mr. Sparks. "Ah, to be sure; the place where that crocodile's been eating up so many people."

"Are you quite sure, Sahib?" asked the Hindu, keenly watching the effect of his words, "that it was a crocodile that did it?"

The Englishman started, and looked fixedly at Ismail's immovable face.

"That's how I heard the story told," rejoined he. "If it wasn't a crocodile, what was it?"

"Did the Commissioner, Sahib," inquired Ismail, "ever hear of a crocodile being so nice in his eating as to devour none but women, and only such women as had plenty of silver bangles on?"

Again Mr. Sparks gave a slight start, and the sparkle of his eye showed that he was beginning to guess the riddle, but he took care to make no interruption, seeing that Ismail wished to have the pleasure of telling the whole story himself.

"I went to the village," continued Ismail; "and talked with the people. Then I dived into the river (my lord knows that I can find my way through water as well as through thickets), and at the bottom I came upon a noosed rope.

The Commissioner nodded with the air of a man who understood the whole affair perfectly, but still he said nothing.

"The Sahib understands how it was done," proceeded the Hindu. "When any woman worth robbing went into the water, the noose tangled her feet, and the robber, hidden among the bushes on the opposite bank, dragged her down and drowned her, and then plundered the corpse at his leisure."

"I see," said Mr. Sparks. "Well, Ismail, you know there's a Government reward of a thousand rupees ($500) for every murderer brought to justice; now what you can make of the case."

The Mahratta's black eyes flashed fire, for five hundred dollars is more to a Hindu than five thousand to a white man, and such a chance did not come to him every day. He went out without a word, but Mr. Sparks felt satisfied that there would be news of the criminal before long.

Ismail plunged at once into the surrounding jungle, and traversed it at a pace which few men could have kept up over such ground and in such a climate, till he came in sight of Ramganj, but instead of entering the village he struck down a by-path to the river, swam across, and slowly up the opposite side till he came to a [illegible] together, and made [illegible] side them.

had his reasons for what he did. Then placing the stone in the shallow water with the sharp side uppermost, and the rope lying right across it, he vanished into the thicket.

An hour had passed since his disappearance, and night had already set in when a dark figure came creeping up to the same spot, and pulled at the half-severed cord, which instantly parted in his hand.

The man started, and held up the broken ends to the light of the rising moon, but finding them rough and frayed as if by constant rubbing, and feeling the sharp-edged stone lying just beneath, he appeared satisfied that it must have been an accident and knelt down to knot the cord together.

So engrossed was the villian with his treacherous work that he never lifted his head to look around him, but even had he been less preoccupied he would scarcely have heard the noiseless footfall of one who had been tracking the tiger and the antelope through their native jungles ever since he was ten years old. The rogue was still quite unsuspicious of harm, when a tall, shadowy figure rose behind him as suddenly as if it had started up through the earth, and a tremendous blow from a heavy bamboo club falling upon his bowed head like a thunderbolt, felled him senseless to the earth.

That very night the crestfallen robber was sent off to the nearest British station, escorted by a strong guard of native policemen, to be tried and executed, as he deserved, while Ismail received from the hands of the Commissioner himself, together with a warm commendation of his shrewdness, the thousand rupees which he had so well earned.—Our Continent.

The Country Editor.

[From the Atlanta Constitution.]

The country editor has a hard time of it. He is the reporter, bookkeeper, mechanical-superintendent, business manager, collector, mailing-machine, and soliciting agent of the establishment. His work is hard, his receipts small and his creditors numerous. In a small town an editor has to steer his course so as to avoid giving offence to different circles of society, the religious denominations, the business community, and the rural population. If an influential old farmer wants a three-column notice of his new barn, it must appear or the editor may lose a hundred subscribers. Patchwork quilts, big beets and phenomenal eggs also clamor for space in the columns of the country paper. In the course of time the rural scribe becomes either jocose or morose, but in either frame of mind he continues to make friends who demand free advertising, and enemies who work against him.

The country editor is always getting ready to abandon journalism for something else, but he rarely carries out his threat. He generally dies in harness. In some wild communities editors occasionally meet with rough treatment. Sometimes they are driven out of the county, and when other methods of getting rid of them fail, they are sent to the Legislature. The city editor gets a good deal of fun out of the country editor's work, but the man who bears the burden regards it as a serious business. And in the best sense it is serious. The little local weeklies scattered all over the country are in their way potential factors of civilization. They develop their localities, bring their resources before the public, and in a manner educate their readers. They are always on the side of the churches, the schools, progress and reform. Men who live and die working for such objects are public benefactors and deserve a substantial reward.

Transplanting Trees.

A writer in Farm and Fireside, in his directions respecting the treatment of trees before their removal, states as follows:

"A tree in full leaf may be compared to a powerful pump, the roots absorbing water from the soil, which is carried upward through the stem and exhaled from the leaves in the form of vapor. This exhalation from the leaves is really the primary operation, however, being simply a process of evaporation. If, now, the principal portions of the roots be cut away, and especially the fine rootlets which are farthest from the stem and through whose extremities nearly all the water is absorbed, the leaves, if allowed to grow, will exhaust the water from the stem and roots more rapidly than it can be supplied by the remnant of the latter, and the consequence will be the destruction of the tree. Hence, in transplanting trees the leaf-bearing twigs should be cut away in proportion to the loss of roots, and it should be remembered that the root surface is generally equal to that of the twigs; consequently the safest rule is to remove nearly all the branches, trimming to bare poles. It is hard to do this, but the after growth of the tree will be enough more rapid to compensate the apparent loss. In moving large trees it is an excellent plan to dig down and cut off a large portion of the roots a year before transplanting, removing a portion of the top at the same time. This will cause the formation of new rootlets near the stem, which may be preserved in the final transplanting."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., FEB. 14, 1884.

John Wesley DuBose has escaped from the mines at Birmingham, and Messrs. Comer & McCurdy are offering $50 reward for his recapture.

Troy, Ala., must be a good place to sell drugs, as we notice that one medicine firm advertises in the Messenger to the effect that said firm will write an advertisement to fill a column as soon as they can find time.

The Republican State Executive Committee met in Montgomery on Saturday last. The committee called a State convention to be held on the 15th of April. The purpose of the convention, it is supposed, is to nominate a State ticket and to organize for the coming campaign.

The Boston Post says: "Two young doctors were recently comparing notes in the office of a well-known hotel in this city, and one of them was heard to say: 'In a case of that kind you use (a certain drug) and it will have (a certain effect) or it won't, I am not sure which!'"

Col. H. A. Herbert, of the Montgomery district, has introduced a bill in congress the purpose of which is to do away with advertising homestead entry notices in newspapers. If such a bill should become a law would it not open the doors to fraud in the land offices of the country?

The grading of the new railroad south from Sheffield to Birmingham began last Wednesday, and a thousand men will be worked and the road pushed to rapid completion. J. H. Semple, chief engineer, has two parties in the field. Messrs. Eugene and Walter Gordon are directing affairs. The town of Sheffield, located two miles north of Tuscumbia, is being surveyed. Lots will be for sale soon.

The Supreme Court of Alabama after hearing the argument in the case of the negro rapist, Wesley Posey, granted a writ of error to remove the case from the Circuit Court of Jefferson county to the former tribunal named. It is stated that one of the grounds of the application was that the members of the grand jury who returned the indictment against Posey were not sworn. The Birmingham Chronicle is of the opinion that if Posey is turned loose in Jefferson county he will be hung.

The Gadsden Times observes: "It seems to have escaped the notice of our Legislature that the act releasing Pratt, on payment of a sum to be reached by compromise is a special enactment coming plainly within the provisions of section 23, of the amended Constitution, and is therefore, unconstitutional and void. Mr. Pratt has no guarantee against future claims upon him, except the sympathy of the people, on which, however, we think he can safely rely."

The Jacksonville Republican was unfortunate enough to be misinformed that, but for the good sense of Mr. G. N. Gilmer, the temperance convention recently in session at Tuscaloosa would have put a ticket for State officers in the field. Col. R. H. Powell, editor of The Union Springs Herald and President of the convention, corrects this report in very emphatic language. He says, in an editorial in his paper, that "there was not a word uttered by a single member, so far as he was heard and as the published proceedings show, in any discussion that was had during the session looking to or advocating the putting of a temperance ticket in the field for State officers.' So settled and fixed was the sentiment against any such policy that Col. Gilmer's resolution was passed without debate, and we believe, without a dissenting vote." Col. Powell says further: "If if (temperance) is ever brought into politics in our State, it will be done by the opponents of the movement. The friends of this great moral reform will never disturb the peace of political parties by willingly dragging it into politics." Rev. C. H. Mead, who was there as a representative of the National Temperance Alliance, remarked casually in our presence the other day that he found the sentiment overwhelmingly against making prohibition a political issue. This was said in casual conversation, and was the judgment of an impartial visitor.

A Model Farmer.

Bartow county, Ga., has a model farmer in the person of W. S. Barron, of Cassville. He is a practical and successful tiller of the soil. He writes a concise and excellent letter to the Department of Agriculture of Georgia, in which he gives an account of his operations. He writes:

I cultivate eight acres of land as follows: Two acres in corn, peas and pumpkins; it makes me eighty to one hundred bushels of corn, twenty to thirty bushels peas, and three hundred to five hundred pumpkins, weighing from twenty to fifty pounds each. One acre in sweet potatoes, making one hundred and fifty to two hundred bushels. One acre in turnips and Irish potatoes, about two hundred bushels. Three acres in oats, from forty to sixty bushels per acre. One acre in wheat, twenty-five to thirty bushels.

I keep two milk cows; the butter more than pays for their food; the buttermilk is fed to my hogs, thereby raising more than twice as much bacon and lard as I can consume. I keep money on hand and pay cash for everything I buy. I also raise a few extra fine beeves and milk cows for sale. I never carry my stock or provisions to market, and ask a man "what he will give me for it." As I never go in debt I keep my produce until people want it, and then they will come to my house and ask me what I will take for it. I am fifty-three years old. I never bought a sack of guano nor raised a bale of cotton in my life. I live at home and do my own work. I have plenty to eat and wear and some for charity."

The commissioner of Agriculture in replying to Mr. Barron, truthfully remarks:

Pursued as you follow farming, it becomes the only perfectly insured business among human avocations. While God sends rain and sunshine to bless the earth, and the farmer feels that he must not only sustain his own family from the soil, but the non-producer by his surplus, there can be no such word as fail.

With industry, sensible economy, cheap manure and plenty of it, and then abundance of home supplies, with our climate—water and other advantages, we will in the near future be the most comfortable and well to do people on earth. I wish you all success, and your example universal imitation.

We commend Mr. Barron's example to our farmers and desire for publication just such pithy letters as his.

The Homestead Law.

From the Conecuh Star.]

EDITOR STAR: Perhaps since the good old ante-bellum days, the days when the halls of our national legislature were less frequented by lobbyists and monopolists, when our legislators had the interests of their constituency more at heart, and were characterized everywhere as being true to their convictions of right, perhaps since those days there has been no act passed that has proved, and may prove, so beneficial to the poorer classes (especially in the south) as the Homestead Act. But judging from the number still without homes, it seems they scarcely realize what a blessing they have in the homestead law, compared to the narrow and restricted privileges of the same class in the densely populated countries of the Eastern continent. There in many cases, large families are shut up on a few acres of land, forced to pay high rents, and they themselves little better than slaves, with barely enough left to keep soul and body together. Here in our "Sunny South," the poorest, for a trifle, may have his 40, 80 or 160 acres, if he so desires, with all the outlet and freedom of the ancient aborigines. Hence, the greatest possible inducements are held out for their encouragement, contentment and happiness in this sunny land of the free! But the question arises, will it always be so? I think not. It is to be feared, the day is fast approaching when the opportunity for securing cheap homes will be lost, Northern, and even foreign capitalists, are fast becoming interested in the intrinsic value of our pine lands, and in future will, no doubt, take every advantage of the market in buying up those lands.

Then a word to those who have not yet taken advantage of the homestead law. Make hay while the sun shines. While this golden opportunity is offered secure a home for yourselves and children. Europe is running over with inhabitants, and pouring them into the United States daily by thousands. The tide of immigration must soon turn to the Gulf states, and ere long all the available lands will be taken up and you, perhaps, left homeless.

"Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

A word to the wise is enough.

J. F. J.

Col. R. D. Boykin was murdered at his home in Dallas county one day last week. A negro was arrested the next day, and confessed to having been paid $35 by a man named Shaver to commit the deed. Shaver was also immediately arrested and the two were placed in jail. It is said that Shaver had a grudge against Col. Boykin was why he sought to get rid of him. Some talk of lynching was indulged in, but wiser counsels prevailed.

A Dignified Senator.

Wash. Cor. Times-Democrat.]

The speeches of Messrs. Beck and Morgan were very effective and vigorous. The former's style is rough, abrupt and trenchant like the blows of a stalwart blacksmith, to whom in his personal bearing and wide swing of his arms the honorable senator bears a much stronger resemblance than to an august conscript father of so aristocratic a body as the United States senate. Senator Morgan is every inch a Senator—a manly, dignified person; a face full of intelligence and honest sincerity; a firm, manly voice; an easy fluency and graceful dignified phraseology, in fact, he is the only senator I have heard who has produced in that body of persons, the style, the bearing and the elocution of the old senate when it met in the room at present occupied by the United States Supreme Court.

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promptitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and renew all these secretions healthy.

Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

The prohibitionists will probably call a county election soon.

Commissioner's Court met in regular term on last Monday.

Mr. Frank J. Davis is building a neat cottage residence in Clanton.

Mrs. E. C. Lawrence, of Jemison, visited Clanton during the past week.

Voters in beat two who desire to vote for prohibition will find tickets at the store of J. P. Allen & Co., Jemison.

Mr. J. J. Honeycutt, of Jumbo, one of our county commissioners paid us a pleasant visit on Monday. He was in attendance upon commissioners' court.

The prohibitionists of Jemison and Clear Creek beat (No. 2) are hopeful of carrying their beat two to one for prohibition on the 4th of March. We hope they will.

We learn from Mr. W. J. Simpson, depot agent at this place, that the freight receipts at this point during the past business season have doubled last season's receipts.

A negro by the name of Wade Oakley was arrested at Verbena last week and lodged in jail. Cause, affray with another negro, which took place as far back as 1880.

Several persons were killed by a mob with Winchester rifles at Hot Springs, Arkansas, on the 9th inst., and considerable excitement caused. It began with a street fight.

Considerable improvments are just now going on in this neighborhood, and our home carpenters are kept busy. Mr. B. H. Chesnut has made an addition to his residence and the Gilchrist house is being likewise improved.

The Valentine Hop to-night at the Court House is to be a pleasant affair. The young men managing it will endeavor to see that all who attend enjoy the evening. Thanks to the committee for a beautifully printed invitation.

Messrs. Wellman & Co., Birmingham, the champion clothiers of the State, have renewed their "ad" in this paper. This is a substantial and reliable house, and one that handles the best stock. Good clothing at easy prices has been the platform upon which they base their success. Call and examine their stock when you visit the Magic City.

We learn that a certain party has succeeded in getting a petition signed by a requisite number of householders and freeholders of Benson beat and will shortly open a whiskey shop in the north end of that beat. The complaints against whiskey selling in that beat are severe, and especially so in this instance, as the petitioner got the signatures of citizens in one neighborhood, and proposes to sell whiskey in another portion of the beat, and in a neighborhood where the citizens are very much opposed to whiskey selling.

According to announcement, Rev. J. P. Word, President of the Talladega Synodical Female College, gave a reading at Clanton Academy last Thursday night. An appreciative audience which attended came away unanimous in the verdict that Prof. Word's entertainment was superior in point of excellence to anything of the kind ever heard here. Prof. W. is easy and distinct in his utterance, and his excellent selections were delivivered in such a manner as to cause many to wish them repeated. We hope Prof. Word may visit our town again.

Prohibition Again Triumphant.

At the election held for this beat (No. 4) on Tuesday, on the question of prohibition or no prohibition, the result was a majority of fifty votes for prohibition. One hundred and thirty-five votes were cast for prohibition and eighty-five votes were cast for no prohibition. Two years ago, the election in this beat on the same question stood 90 for prohibition and 42 for no prohibition, making a total of 132 votes, or three less than the number of votes cast on Tuesday for prohibition. Thus in the two years prohibition has made a gain of 45 votes, and no prohibition a gain 43, and thus our town is again to be congratulated upon a triumph of peace and good order over crime and beastliness.

MAPLESVILLE, Feb. 7, 1884.

ED. CHILTON VIEW: Sir—I find in the VIEW, under the head of "Miscegenation," an article which in my opinion is incorrect in several instances. The article states that John Selman's wife is a mulatto woman. Now a mulatto is the offspring of a white person and a negro. Again, it is stated in the VIEW that about a year ago Selman made application to the Probate Judge of Chilton county for a marriage license. This is untrue. It is stated in aforementioned article, that the mother of the woman was present at the trial. This is also untrue. The above facts are certified to by the following citizens of this community, all of whom are honest in the belief that John Selman's wife is a white woman: G. Smitherman, J. C. Gardner, J. T. Tucker, B. G. Glasscock, J. W. Cox, William Garner, J. W. Foshee, S. D. McCary, Jessie Martin.

Very respectfully,
J. D. McGEE.

Verbena Views.

Rev. Dr. Oliver, of Calera, paid us a visit last week.

Mr. F. P. Dunham, of Helena, is visiting our town.

We hear of several cases of sickness. The colds have developed into something like pneumonia.

Monday appeared to be a flush day with our merchants.

Prof. A. L. Haralson will build a dwelling on the site of the school boarding house burned down last October.

Mr. Sam Strock, of Kincheon, paid us a visit last week. He has a good school, and we shall soon dub him with the title of Professor.

Mr. F. M. Ansley has removed his family to Louisville. Our Baptist friends will lose an efficient worker by the departure of Mrs. Ansley.

Prof. J. P. Word, of Talladega, gave the students of our Academy a lecture on the principles of elocution last Friday evening. At night his literary entertainment was well attended. As a mimic he displayed fine talent, and kept his audience in a roar of laughter. His selections were, for the greater part, taken from the humorous, and were true to nature. We hope that he will repeat his visit.

BYOU.

A communication appears elsewhere which is intended to correct an item which appeared in this paper sometime since under the head of "Miscegenation." The only error of importance which it attempts to correct is the statement that Selman made application for a marriage license to the Probate Judge of this county about a year ago. Our information in this instance was based on the fact that Selman stated to the Sheriff in our presence that such application was made at the stated time. As to the mother of the woman being present at the trial, we understood the Sheriff to say that she was present. He has since informed us that she was not present. We are glad that our correspondent has seen fit to call attention to any errors that we might have unintentionally made. The citizens whose names he gives, are, no doubt, more familiar with the Whatley pedigree than are we. As the case is to be tested by the courts, nothing further need be said. The prisoners have made bond and been released, until the circuit court convenes.

Calliopolis Items.

We are now rejoicing in sunshine and milder weather. Farming and gardening are the topics of conversation. Fewer horses are hitched around Dixie, and fewer men visit the stores, so our merchants are having a resting time. We hope our tired Dr. has also, as the health of our people seems to be improving.

Mr. King has recovered and moved into our village. His interesting family will add much to our society.

Mrs. Dr. Callier is spending some time in Rome, Georgia. Her kind ministrations among the sick, have been greatly missed.

We miss the pleasant company of Miss Annie Callier, who has gone to her home, but Miss Sallie Crum has returned.

We rejoice in the prosperity of our mill towns—the great amount of lumber which is shipped from them, both north and south proclaim the progress of our State.

Stanton and Howison's station seem to vie with each other, and Welch's mill. Howison & Co. are building the second dry house. Two negroes had each a hand severely mangled by the saw at the last mentioned.

Madam rumor tells that whiskey caused an affectionate young husband, not far off, to try to kill two of his brothers, then turn on his father, who was able to manage him. We sympathize with his mother and bride, and with them blame the man who sold the poison.

M. A. H.

Wendell Phillips, the famous leader of the Abolitionists, died at his home in Boston, Feb. 2d, after an illness of one week. Mr. Phillips was born in Boston, Nov. 29, 1811. He graduated at Havard college in 1831, took a law course at Cambridge, and was admitted to the bar in 1834. In 1836 he abandoned his profession, to advocate the cause of the Abolitionists, then in its infancy. He soon proved himself a master of fiery philippic and passionate denunciation and became famous as a bold and untiring leader of the party which from a small handful of despised enthusiasts grew to be a controlling power in the land.

The Boston Medical and Surgical Journal says there is now living in Penn Yan a man who, for two years, has had a bullet embedded in his brain. Before receiving the shot he was dissolute, morose, and quarrelsome, but has now become a peaceable, sober, and industrious citizen. The records show analogous cases, but few that are so well marked.

A Valuable Patent.

Messrs. Shealy & Co, are now in Clanton selling Curtis & Bro.'s famous labor-saving and time-saving patent churn. This churn will make butter in from three to seven minutes. It is known as the "Cream Agitator," and is assuredly a great thing for house keepers. The Messrs. Shealy have the churn on exhibition at the store of Bell & Son. Call upon them and they will show you what a valuable article they have to sell.

A LITTLE PILGRIM.

[This anecdote, its source has a history, the half of which I cannot tell. It was picked up by an old man in my district, years ago, but it, and with God's blessing, it did him real good. He read it to a dying woman, and through it she was led to the Savior. It came into my hands, and I had it printed, and lo, as copies have already been circulated. Many thousand letters have been sent me, telling glad tidings of its usefulness. Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.—J. Kenrick.]

One summer's evening, ere the sun went down,
When city men were hastening from the town,
To reach their homes—some near at hand, some far,—
By sporting train, by omnibus or car,
To be beyond the reach of city din,—
A train-car stopped, a little girl got in;
A cheery looking girl, scarce four years old;
Although not shy, her manners were not bold;
But all alone! one scarce could understand.
She held a little bundle in her hand—
A tiny handkerchief with corners tied,
But which did not some bread and butter hide;
A satin scarf, so natty and so neat,
Was o'er her shoulders thrown. She took her seat,
And laid her bundle underneath her arm,
And smiling prettily, but yet so calm,
She to the porter said, "May I lie here?"
He answered instantly, "Oh, yes, my dear."
And there she seemed inclined to make her stay,
While once again the tram went on its way.
The tall conductor—over six feet high,
Now scanned the travelers with a business eye;
But in that eye was something kind and mild,
That took the notice of the little child.
A little after, and the man went round,
And soon was heard the old familiar sound
Of gathering pence, and clipping tickets, too—
The tram was full and he had much to do.
"Your fare, my little girl," at length he said.
She looked a moment, shook her little head,—
"I have no pennies, don't you know," said she,
"My fare is paid, and Jesus paid for me?"
He looked bewildered—all the people smiled;
"I didn't know; and who is Jesus, child?"
"Why, don't you know He once for sinners died,
For little children, and for men beside,
To make us good and wash us from our sin;
Is this His railway I am traveling in?"
"Don't think it is! I want your fare, you know."
"I told you Jesus paid it long ago:
My mother told me just before she died,
That Jesus paid when He was crucified;
That at the cross His railway did begin,
Which took poor sinners from a world of sin;
My mother said his home was grand and fair;
I want to go and see my mother there—
I want to go to heaven, where Jesus lives,
Won't you go too? My mother said he gives
A loving welcome—shall we be late?
Oh, let us go before he shuts the gate:
He bids us little children come to Him."
The poor conductor's eyes felt rather dim,
He knew not why—he fumbled at his coat,
And felt a substance rising in his throat.
The people listened to the little child,
Some were in tears—the roughest only smiled,
And some one whispered as they looked amazed:
"Out of the mouth of babes the Lord is praised."
"I am a pilgrim," said the little thing;
"I'm going to heaven. My mother used to sing
To me of Jesus and His Father's love;
Told me to meet her in His home above,
And so to-day when aunt went out to tea,
And looking out I could not father see,
I got my bundle—kissed my little kit,
(I am so hungry—won't you have a bit?)
And got my hat, and then I left my home,
A little pilgrim up to heaven to roam;
And then your carriage stepped, and I could see
You looked so kind. I saw you beckon me,
I thought you must belong to Jesus' train.
And are you just going home to heaven again?"
The poor conductor only shook his head:
Tears in his eyes—the power of speech had fled.
Had conscience by her prattle roused his fears
And struck upon the fountain of his tears,
And made his thoughts in sad confusion whirl;
At last he said, "Once I'd a little girl,
I loved her much; she was my little pet,
And with great fondness I remember yet
How much she loved me. But one day she died."
"She's gone to heaven," the little girl replied:
"She's gone to Jesus—Jesus paid her fare,
Oh, dear conductor, won't you meet her there?"
The poor conductor now broke fairly down;
He could have borne the harshest look or frown,
But no one laughed; but many sitting by
Beheld the scene with sympathetic eye.
He kissed the child, for she his heart had won,
"I am so sleepy," said the little one,
"If you will let me, I'll lie here and wait
Until your carriage comes to Jesus' gate;
Be sure you wake me up, and pull my frock,
And at the gate give just one little knock!
And you'll see Jesus there," The strong man wept!
I could but think as from the car I stept,
How oft a little one has found the road,
The narrow pathway to that blest abode;
Through faith in Christ has read its title clear.
While learned men remain in doubt and fear.
A little child! The Lord oft uses such
To break or bend, the stoutest heart to touch,
Then by His Spirit bide the conflict cease,
And once for ever enter into peace.
And then along the road the news we bear,
We're going to heaven—that Jesus paid our fare!

DICKIE RITCHER.

He was Too Confiding.

If all men were as innocent and confiding as good Deacon Ebenezer Cummings, a pillar in the Orthodox church of a certain town in Maine, who had slept under the ministrations of no less than twelve pastors during the thirty years of holding the diaconal office, this world would be a much more desirable place of residence than it now is. Not long ago certain charges were made in the church meeting against a brother whose course had long been regarded with anxiety by the more conservative members of the parish, and the question of disciplining him arose. It was voted to be desirable, however, not to excite a scandal or bring cause of reproach against the church, and, as a preliminary step in the matter, Deacon Cummings was delegated to visit the erring brother and inquire into his disposition and intention in the affair. Accordingly he set out, found the subject of discussion at home, and, after some conversation, returned to the meeting, which was awaiting his report. The good Deacon came in radiant and somewhat indignant, withal. "I tell you," said he, "that Brother Blank has been abused. He's just as straight as I be, or the minister, either, and there ain't a word of truth in the hull business." "What evidence, Brother Cummings," said the pastor, "have you procured to that effect?" "Evidence!" quoth the Deacon; "the very best of evidence! Why, he told me so himself!" In spite of this convincing testimony, however, it was voted to investigate the matter further.—Boston Journal.

A Genius.

It is a New Hampshire genius who is credited with using an auger profitably at a ball game. Hundreds of boys found the view from an adjacent free hill shut off by a tight fence. There was a wild search for cracks, but the fissures had been carefully battened. To whittle a peephole would have been an hour's job. Then the Yankee drew an auger and quickly bored through. An eager throng pressed upon him with beseeching requests for a loan of the tool.

"I wouldn't have this auger drilled for anything," he said, "but I'd just as soon bore a few holes, though I've got to tax you five cents per bore. Hand over a nickel and I'll punch the board. First come first served. Here we are. Where'll you have it?"

The man took in something like two dollars before the demand for his services ceased.

SELECT COLORED PEOPLE.

SELECT SOCIAL CIRCLES SEPARATE FROM THE WHITE SOCIETY OF THE CAPITAL.

A Description of Some of the Most Prominent Colored Men and Their Financial and Social Standing.

There are 65,000 colored people in Washington, says a newspaper letter from that city. In no city in the United States, not even New Orleans, is there a larger colored population. The colored people here enjoy all the social and political rights that law can give them, without protest and without annoyance. The public conveyances are open to them, and the theatres, the jury box, are theirs. Many of these men are wealthy, and the aggregate wealth of the colored property owners in the District amounts to millions of dollars. Hundreds own comfortable homes, and some handsome residences; their churches are many, including three or four buildings that are ornaments to the city. But the color line is rigidly drawn in what is known as society. Wealth, learning, official place, give no colored family the right or privilege of entering the best or the commonest white society on terms of equality or endurance. In this respect the colored race lives as separate and as exclusive a life as in the days of slavery. There are three recognized social classes among the colored people. Neither acknowledges the others, and it is the ambition of those in the lower to be received in the higher circles, just as among the whites.

The upper crust, so to speak, consists of men of wealth, learning and high political place. These people exchange calls, with all the ceremony of the whites, some of them driving in their own carriages, leaving cards with scrupulous attention to etiquette. They dine with each other, and are waited upon by colored servants, with whom they will permit no other relations than those of master and servant. Probably the leading family in the highest colored society here is that of ex-Senator Bruce, who is now the Register of the Treasury. Bruce is a light-complexioned, intelligent-looking man. He is said to be worth about a hundred thousand dollars. He lives in a handsome house that he owns on M street. It is richly furnished. A superb piano stands in the reception room and a choice collection of books lines the wall of the library. Mrs. Bruce is a handsome woman, with not a suggestion of her race in her face, and whose manners are regarded as the consummation of ease, grace and courtesy. She dresses as richly and handsomely as any woman in the city.

Another member of this social circle is John T. Cook, the Collector of Taxes for the District. He lives in excellent style and entertains handsomely. Prof. J. M. Gregory, professor of Latin at the Howard University, and John M. Langston, the Minister to Hayti, with their families, are recognised members of the best colored society, while Dr. Charles B. Purvis's society and that of his wife are eagerly sought.

Dr. Purvis is a very busy man, being the surgeon in charge of the Freedman's Hospital, and the Professor of Materia Medica at the hospital school. Nearly all of his scholars are white. Dr. A. T. Augusta and his wife also are received in the highest circle of colored society, while Dr. Augusta as a physician commands the respect of his white brethren in the profession. Mr. Henry Smith, for many years the Librarian of the House of Representatives, entertains a good deal, and his wife calls in her own carriage. R. T. Greener, a member of the District bar and a graduate of Howard, and his wife, who is an accomplished musician, are much in society. The Rev. Dr. Alex. Crummel, rector of the leading colored church of the Episcopalian denomination, is always welcomed. He is regarded as the most learned colored man in the District, and is highly respected by the white clergy of his denomination. Of course Fred Douglass ranks as the leading colored man of the District, but he goes but little into society. He lives on the Eastern Branch of the Potomac. Douglass is worth about $200,000. While his wealth and ability make him easily the foremost man of his race, he is not popular. He is regarded as guilty of the same sins toward the colored men of which he accuses the whites, namely, refusal to recognise them or have personal relations with them.

Mr. M. M. Holland, who is an officer in the Post Office Department, is said to be the best classical scholar in the District, and his attainments bring him the highest social recognition of his people. Wormley, of Wormley's Hotel, is a leader of the best set on account of his wealth, reputed to be $150,000, and his relations with prominent white men. Smith Wormly, one of his sons, is a large owner of real estate here, and another son has an excellent practice as a physician.

There is another and a much larger society here that may be designated as of the second rank. While holding no social relations with the set just mentioned, they are equally exclusive as regards those whom they hold beneath them in the social scale. This class is composed of Government clerks and of people in comfortable circumstances. There are a good many colored men in Government employ as clerks. They form the basis of the society of the second rank. Many of them own comfortable little houses, and one of the finest streets in the city is occupied by them. This is Sixteenth street, between the Scott statue and the White House. It is a splendid avenue, broad, well paved, and in the heart of the most fashionable part of the city. Nearly all of these colored residents own their houses, and refuse to sell. The property is very valuable, and must ultimately pass out of their possession. These people are very fond of social life, but they do not find it in entertaining, but rather in celebrations, balls, parties, and especially in their churches. They are well ... seem to prosper, and are happy. For the great bulk of the colored population,—the servants, laborers, and the poor—they have sympathy, but no more have social relations with them than a white family would. These latter in the main are thriftless, living from hand to mouth; happy if they do nothing, happy if they get a job. Their social instincts are gratified by the organization and maintenance of societies of all sorts, benevolent, patriotic, social, and economic. There are nearly 100 of these organizations, supported almost entirely by the laboring colored people.

IRISH CONGER EELS.

Ten Feet Long and Said to be Descendants of the Snakes Expelled by St. Patrick.

"I was reading in the Sun the other day a story of big eels and sea snakes," said an old fisherman, who once caught mackerel and herrings off the deep sea-coasts of Ireland, but now earns his living by crabbing in Newark Bay. "I don't think the average American has much idea of what a real big eel is. When they see one a little larger than usual they say it is a serpent. If they saw the congers off the Irish coasts they would have some reason to call them serpents; for, you know, there are no snakes in Ireland. St. Patrick drove them all into the sea, and it is a common superstition that they became conger eels. You can't find them anywhere else in the world. Of course they catch eels here, and every where, that they call conger, but they are no more like the Irish conger than a sprat is like a salmon. I know it is hard to credit it, but I have caught scores of them, each ten feet long, and nearly as thick as a man's thigh. They are only to be found in the deepest water, and are fond of lurking under great rocks. They are caught with a stout line and hook, and will grab at any bait offered to them. But fishermen don't much care to hook them, and when one is hauled into a boat he makes, usually, an unwelcome addition to its occupants. He lashes around like a boa constrictor. He never attacks a man, but if your foot gets into his mouth you must take his head off to get it out again. An Irish fishing crew, however, is not likely to be long bothered with him. They daze him with a blow from a boat hook, and then cut deep into the back of his neck; but even after that has been done he must be watched, or he will pass quickly over the side, and back into the sea.

"Dublin, I suppose, is the best market for conger eels, and after we had caught a lot of extra big ones we used to run for Kingston harbor, and land them on the pier. Ladies strolling on the pier often nearly fainted at seeing one going straight at them. It was impossible to persuade them that the eel did not intend to attack them. The act is congers get stone blind when they are a few hours out of the water, and have no idea where they are going. They will live for days, however, out of their element.

"No, not even in the sea will a conger attack a man so far as I know. They will take a dog down, though. I have seen one seize a good-sized water spaniel by the throat and throw his tail over its back so that the poor brute sank with hardly a struggle."

Politeness in Arkansas.

Let me relate an incident. I suppose that Arkansas is about as dangerous a place as Texas for a bully to go to, but from personal observation at both points I think Arkansas is a little safer place for a gentleman than Cincinnati. The general urbanity of the people astonished me more than anything else. This is what I propose to illustrate. We stopped at one station, and traveled about forty miles by stage. On our return, the stage—a large spring wagon without top—was loaded with men. They were of different types. One had a bottle of whisky. One was a minister. We came to a creek where a party had stopped to water their horses. There were two women and a little girl, apparently very poor. They wore sun-bonnets and faded calico dresses. The horse was poor, and the vehicle was as shabby and rough an old specimen as I ever met with. One of the women had unhitched the horse and led him back to the water, and had just turned to come up the bank as we reached the level after crossing.

Our driver stopped. A well-dressed man hopped out of the stage, and with a bow, offered his assistance. He led the old horse up to the vehicle—I don't know what else to call it—hitched him in, assisted the woman to her seat, and then, as she heartily thanked him, he politely bowed her good-day, lifting his hat clear off his head. In a moment he was in the stage again, and on we went. After my experience in the north, it struck me that this was all for sport, and that the men would have lots of fun about the affair. But I soon found it was all in earnest. All regarded it as a matter of course. For from that moment on to the end of our journey, not one man uttered one syllable about it. Not a sneering remark was made, no joke or pun, no remark of any kind—not one single word! I had to confess to myself that I never saw more politeness than this.—Nasby.

The First Prize.

Captain Fortier, who was killed in the political disturbance in New Orleans, has been an active Ogden man throughout the canvass. He was well known in the West and South as the Captain of Fortier's crack volunteer battery of artillery. Two years ago he competed for the artillery prize at Louisville and Indianapolis in the military drill. He won first prize at Louisville, and claimed that he was jockeyed out of it at Indianapolis, and refusing the second prize there, appealed to the Secretary of War for a revision of the judge's verdict. The matter was referred to a board of artillery officers, who decided that Fortier's detachment was entitled to the first honors on that occasion. Last summer the detachment won first prize at Nashville.

Petro'eum V. Nasby.

D. R. Locke, Petroleum V. Nasby, editor Toledo Blade, writes: "I had on a forefinger of my right hand one of those pleasant pets, a 'run-round.' The finger became inflamed to a degree unbearable and swollen to nearly twice its natural size. A friend gave me Henry's Carbolic Salve, and in twenty minutes the pain had so much subsided as to give me a fair night's rest, which I had not had before for a week. The inflammation left the finger in a day. I consider it a most valuable article."

THE OLDEST CHRISTMAS HYMN

[The Greek III of Clement of Alexandria is given (in Greek) the most ancient hymn of the Primitive Church. It is therefore hundred and fifty years older than [illegible] believed to be of much earlier origin. The following version will give some [illegible] of its spirit.]

Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth,
Through devious ways;
Christ our triumphant King!
We come thy name to sing,
And here our children bring
To shout thy praise.

Thou art our holy Lord!
The all-subduing Word,
Healer of strife
Thou did'st thyself abase!
That from sin's deep disgrace
Thou might'st save our race
And give us life.

Thou art wisdom's High Priest?
Thou hast prepared the feast
Of holy love:
And in our mortal pain
None calls on thee in vain,
Help thou dost not disdain,
Help from above.

Ever be thou our Guide,
Our Shepherd and our pride,
Our staff and song.
Jesus, thou Christ of God!
By the perennial word,
Lead us where thou hast trod,
Make our faith strong.

So now, and till we die,
Sound we thy praise on high,
And joyful sing.
Infants, and the glad throng,
Who to thy Church belong,
Unite and swell the song
To Christ our King.

Making Amends

Intended for Business Men.

BY DUDIE WHITE.

"Christmas comes but once a year," yet when it comes it brings—it brings—useless expense—a day's lull in business—a laziness peculiar to all employees for a succeeding week—an unwise exchanging of gifts when the money is oft needed for other and necessary purposes—a hurrying, scurrying, foolishly busy, top-turvy people, wishing each other a "merry Christmas" to-day, and endeavoring, with a new vim, to rob each other to-morrow. The streets, full of itinerent ware men, with their cheap, trashy merchandise; leering, familiar beggars, with their alcoholic "jist a penny for Christmas, sir!"

A gorging of dyspeptic sweets and unwholesome food—a—a—folly! folly! that I, Phineas Rugby, will omit year after year, as I have done since I arrived to years of discretion—bah! bah! Yes, my name's Phineas Rugby. Not a very elegant one, you think, for Phineas, according to the Hebrew, is "mouth of brass." Ha! ha! And Rugby—well, is just Rugby, and one can't Frenchify that. But I like it—it suits me. I've grown with it—lived and succeeded with it.

But it's not a handsome name. Oh, no! I'm not a handsome man. But, some way, the little, uninteresting, bald-headed, hawk-eyed proprietor of one of the largest book-stores in a large city is looked up to, is bowed to, for money's money, whether in a silk purse or a greasy pocketbook.

If you look closely at me you will see, all over my face, many scams and scars, that time alone did not imprint there. One has to work hard, very hard, if they would make money squarely and legitimately. Most of it brainwork, too, that is ten times the more wearying than real, downright manual labor.

Well, I know what it is to scrape and pinch to pay expenses, oft going to bed hungry and discouraged. It is, and always was, cash down with me. I owed nobody, and allowed nobody to owe me. If I lived through it, others could, and must. I made no excuses, I listened to none. And so, if this Christmas eve, in the year 18—, I can sit in my own lodging, knowing that I am the Phineas Rugby, of the prosperous house of that name. I can say I have earned it. Spent money, time, happiness, home comforts and all to earn it. And yet—are I be ever satisfied.

It's Christmas to-morrow, Phineas, I say to myself, watching the lighted coals smoldering amid the ashes in the grate, before which I am sitting in gown and slippers—Christmas to-morrow; and Phineas, my boy, what is it you have done during the past twelve months that you feel proud of this eve? I guess you haven't thought of that before.

Let's see—let's see—thumb. I owe no man—first finger—no man owes me—second finger. I, six months ago, discharged my bookkeeper Jacoby, a very good-for-nothing rascal—third finger—I—I—I—well, I guess that's all. Not much to brag of, hey, Phineas? Sh, sh—well, a good night's rest, and to-morrow I will again be—Phineas Rugby. How to rouse that sleepy-looking fire—there. I hope I haven't put it out! I've to be careful of my old enemy, rheumatism, with his troop of inflammations—and now—now for bed.

And's the place after all, where one can, as Shakespeare says, "crouch his thrice where golden sleep doth reign." Positions are restful, too (yawningly), yes, full of rest—full of rest. Full moon to-night on the wall opposite; I can see its reflection. "The moon shines in dividual generosity," and what a place for a magic lantern.

When we were boys, how Bob and I used to wish, and wonder if we ever could make money enough to buy one and when we had the money we wanted something else we couldn't get. Bob's dead now, and I—why I see the moon over my left shoulder. Wonder if one can wish if the moon is full. I might try. Let's see—what do I wish. Yes, yes, an idea! I wish I could see objects and things on that circle opposite, as I lay here and take it easy—that's an idea!

Am I dreaming. It can't be that one glass of porter! I sit up in bed—I shake off my nightcap—I pull my hair—pinch myself—gaze helplessly forward, but see where late had been a circle of pale light. A room—small—mean—uninviting—cheerless—cold. No carpet on the floor, save the little ugly green strips before a bed in one corner, and the dark fire-place. Two cane bottomed chairs, feeble as to legs, and paint of no known color. A table, reminding one of the Rebellion. A tin candlestick, a few dishes, a much thumbed Bible on the mantle shelf. A picture of a sweet-faced lady, in an old-fashioned frame on the wall, and no more.

A door to one side opens, and there enters—a wee body, scarce ten years of age, but such a prematurely aged ten. Such a wizened face, hungry-looking ten. Such a poorly clad, large head, large eyes, shivering, puny-looking ten. The head is good—I can see that, ideality a little too marked perhaps. But the hair is smooth, glossy and curling. He brings a chillness within that even I feel as I pull the bedclothes closer up about my neck.

Now the door is closed, and the faded old straw hat and ragged scarf hung on a nail. The basket, which he carries in one of his claw-like hands, set upon the hearth, and he proceeds to remove the lid, whistling all the time—actually whistling, if that feeble little pucker of those blue lips can be termed a whistle. First there comes from this mysterious basket two candles, then a box of matches. The old candlestick is taken down from the mantel, one of the matches ignited, a candle lit and placed proudly in the center of the table.

Now he delves down again into the basket, and this time two bundles of wood and a loaf of bread are brought forth, his face becoming perfectly radiant as he beholds them. He is singing now, over and over, "Won't dear father be surprised!"

There is not much music in this little song, yet there is a choked feeling in the throat of Phineas Rugby that he hasn't felt for years. What a busy little man he is now, running to and fro, building a fire, placing the most comfortable-looking chair before it invitingly. Just putting the last finishing touches on all as the door again opens, and there enters—bless me, Jacoby! my ex-bookkeeper!

"Father, father, see!" the boy cries, as he dances to his father's side, and pulls him down in the chair, "your Christmas present from your little son! I earned it myself—all myself. I'm most a big man now, and we won't be hungry any more. Oh, father!"—his arms clasped about his neck, and his tiny face close to the elder one—"ain't we blessed?"

Jacoby says nothing; but tears, such as I never knew a man could shed, fall on the dark curls of the little one. He had changed a good deal in six months, Jacoby had, and not for the better—no, no.

"Phineas Rugby, take my hat and put it where it belongs," he says, after a short and mournful silence; "then come and sit on father's knee and tell him all about this wonderful surprise."

"You see," and the little head is pressed close to the faded great-coat of the man, "after you went out I was thinking and thinking of the story you had just told me—of the good prince that went out in the world to help his father, the king. And, then I remembered mamma used always to give you a Christmas present, and something seemed saying: 'Go, Davey, go, go!' So I just put on my hat and that nice warm scarf of yours, took the basket, locked the door, and went out, just like the prince, in the cold world. I was a little 'fraid at first, but nobody noticed me, and I hadn't went very far when I came to a store—not the most beautiful store, father, with two large windows, all full of such nice books and pretty cards; and I was a-wishing that you and I owned just such a place, when I spelt under the window on a sign P-h-i-n-e-a-s—Phineas R-u-g-b-y—Rugby, and then I knew it was the place, where you worked when mother was alive and we had such a nice home. And Phineas Rugby was the man who sent you away because you couldn't work when dear mamma was dying.

"That is if you couldn't help it"—shaking the head about his neck. "But I thought perhaps he never knew what was the matter, when you didn't come to the store; and I was going in to tell him all about it, when a little, cross-looking man came out and told me—if I didn't get away from the door in two minutes, he would have me arrested.

"I knew you didn't want your little boy took up in the bad station-house, so I ran away as fast as ever I could, and was standing on the corner a shivering a little—you know it was getting pretty cold—when a kind lady asked me to come home—meaning for her to her hotel—which was only a block away from our street, father. And when I had done it—and it was awful light—she gave me a whole twenty and five cents. You ought to have seen me; I was that glad I near forgot I was a Prince, and cried. And, but I didn't; I run fast to the grocery man and buy—now count, father—these candles, five cents; two bundles of wood, five cents; one loaf of bread, five cents; one box of matches, one cent. How much is that?"

"Sixteen cents."

"And here's nine for you, right here in my pocket, and it's all my Christmas present—all for you."

All is quiet for a minute; then Jacoby says, huskily:

"Keep the money for Christmas sweets, Davey. I wish I could add more; but I have had no success; everyone asks for reference. Rugby denied me that. But we won't think of it to-night—'tis the blessed Christmas eve—and God watches over and will take care of us, if we only ask Him, Davey."

A little figure slides to the floor and kneels with clasped hands, and reverent, upturned face, and the prayer is answered as it floats to me—miserable! repenting!

"Dear God, I'm only a little boy, and a care to my father and Thee. But please, God, make Mr. Rugby see father couldn't help it, for Jesus' sake. Amen."

The room, Jacoby and little Davey I now cannot see through my tears, and I hide my head in the bedclothes and sob like a child.

When I look up again, all is changed. A large store—books all about in their gay, vari-colored bindings.

Fancy Christmas and New Year cards, fancy stationery—everything speaking of plenty. There's no one in the store now, save three young clerks, and a bookkeeper, perched on a high stool behind his desk.

Clerk No. 1.—"Most time for old Rugby. Fly about, boys. Thank goodness, a holiday to-morrow."

Clerk No. 2.—"Yes, hurrah for Christmas; he can't take that away from us."

Clerk No. 1.—"I wonder if he won't break his heart this once, and give us a quarter. Or, to be honest, he might take us all out and treat us."

Bookkeeper (head hid in ledger).—"If he hears you, Simpkins, he'll treat you to a grand bounce. The old miser! When he gets hold of a dollar it's a prisoner for life."

Clerk No. 3.—"I'm willing to do my duty every time. But it's work, work, from morn till night, with never a 'Thank you.' Never remembering we are men as well as he, and a kind word once in a while does a fellow as much good as a dinner."

* * * * * * *

Early, Christmas morning, and I'm up and dressed, a new man! "It may have been a dream," I say to the clock striking the hour of seven, "but I'll never believe it. I've been a selfish, mercenary, short-sighted man in the past, thinking of nothing but making and hoarding money, which never did me or anybody else any good. I'm an old man—I surely can't take it with me in the other world. I haven't a kith or kin to leave it to in this. Phineas Rugby, wake up! Look about you! There is something in life after all."

Merry Christmas to everybody.

Merry Christmas to all.

I'm in the street now, walking along briskly; breathing in the fresh, effervescing air; humming to myself, dropping a penny here, a penny there in the outstretched palm of every beggar I meet. Feeling like a boy let loose from a rigid school, my feet so light, with the very thought of what I have in my mind—that they scarcely touch the walk. I go into a poulterers. I buy four large turkeys and send them, with an envelope containing twenty-five dollars, to each of my clerks and my bookkeeper—from the "old miser" (my little revenge, I chuckle).

I can't spend money enough. Every boy I meet that reminds me in the least of little Davey, I take in somewhere and buy him a turkey. Then I order one of the best dinners that money can procure to be sent to No. 10 Marks Place, Jacoby's and Davey's home. (I knew where they lived, I had kept an eye on them, but it had been a blind eye, Phineas). And laden with all the prettiest books and cards I can get from the store—my store—the store he thought so beautiful, I go to their mean house, not to be so any longer, if old man Phineas Rugby lived long enough to change it.

Such ceremony as knocking on the door, I forget in my excitement as I burst in like a whirlwind—tearful, foolish—trying to be merry, and failing.

"Jacoby," I say, "forgive me, I have been an old fool—let's—let's—"

He has hold of my hand now, and I hold the other one out to little Davey as I say:

"Davey, my little man, your prayer is answered. Mr. Rugby sees father could not help it, and will make reparation, for to-morrow morning the sign of Phineas Rugby will shine on a warm fire, and in its place a new one shall bear the names of Rugby & Jacoby—God bless 'em."

"Christmas comes but once a year—"

"Yet when it comes it brings Uncle Rugby," says Davey.

Jacoby asked his wife, "Why is a hen-hawk like dough?" He expected she would give it up, and he was going to tell her that it was because a woman needs kissing but she said it was because he was hard to get off her hands.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

WORDS OF WISDOM BY BROTHER GARDNER.

The Presidential Responsibility and Power, Power and Precedent.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

The Chairman of the Committee on Harmony of the Lime-Kiln Club, announced his desire to submit a report, and being encouraged by a smile ten inches long he read twelve pages of closely written manuscript. Waydown Bebee has for the last three years done everything in his power to bring out and encourage poets. Several months since Judge Conge demanded an investigation, stating his belief that the principle was calculated to work evil to society, and the matter was turned over to the Harmony Committee.

The Chairman now reported that he had personally investigated several cases as follows:

1. William Henry Green, of Indiana, formerly an industrious mechanic with money in the bank. Had written three poems and one idyl, and was now in jail for stealing a giraffe belonging to a circus.

2. Bradawl Watkins, of Ontario, formerly one of the best whitewashers in the civilized world. He had written two odes and an obituary in verse, and had been fined $20 for pounding his wife.

3. Judge Glucose Blindhoof, of Ohio, formerly a blacksmith earning $3 per day and having a laugh which could be heard half a mile away. Had written four verses on "The Dying Year," and yet his whole nature seemed to have undergone a change. Had had three fights with neighbors, lost his situation, been drunk and had applied for a divorce.

The Chairman said he could give several further instances of the fiendish results of Brother Bebee's efforts, but before he had time to do so Givesdam Jones presented the following:

"Resolved, Dat from dis date de Lime-Kiln Club will use ebery means widin its power to discourage de makin' of poets an' de producksham of poetry."

Waydown Bebee arose to begin an argument, but was shorted down and the resolution put to vote and carried with a whoop.

A WARNING.

Samuel Shin then presented the petition of Liveforever Smith, a colored resident of Detroit, but not a member of the Lime-Kiln Club, who desired the club to indorse his application for a pension from the government for injuries received during the war.

"Brudder Shin," sternly replied the President, "you raise the winder an' drop dat paper into de alley."

Samuel obeyed.

"Now, sah, I want to say to you an to all odder members, dat dis club am not workin' de pension racket. De man who went to wah an' was crippled an' disabled deserves recompense at de hands of his gov'ment, an' has probably had it fur y'ars past. De pension biz-ness of to-day am fo'-fifth swindle an' one-fifth claim agent. Uncle Sam pays ebery dollar dat he owes to his defenders, an' an applicashun at dis day should be regarded wid astonishment, if not suspishun. We doan't assist any man, black or white, to make out dat twenty y'ars arter he come back from wah he suddenly falls lame from havin' slept on de ground. Let us now blow out de lamps an' go home."

How to Make a Bed.

Says the Philadelphia Press: Let every bed-maker, as soon as all the covers are spread, turn down the upper sheet, and all above it, leaving a generous margin below the bolster. Some people, you know, pull all the covers straight up to the top and lay the bolster upon them, so that when bedtime comes they must be rearranged at the head. Boys don't like this way, and perhaps some other folks don't either. It is the custom to pile two big, square pillows on the top of the bolster, and then put on two pillow-shams, and then, sometimes, or perhaps before the pillow-shams, a sheet-sham. This is setting a trap for the unwary. Only a remarkably careful woman is equal to the task of getting off all the "finery" properly. Why not almost, if not altogether, abolish shams of all kinds. Why not honestly take off the big, square pillows and supply every bed with a comfortable bolster to take the place of pillows? If you like adornment, embroider or decorate the slips and sheets themselves without any make-believe. Silk, lace and the like stow out of place on a bed, which should suggest repose. Imagine a big boy with boots on flinging himself into the midst of a fairy creation of pink satin and lowlace! Let beds be what they look like, and let them look like what they are—real resting places.

Coast Current.—The quantity sent from anthracite mines in the year 1883 has been 30,468,033 tons, against 28,005,603 tons in 1882. There has been an increase of over 2,000,000 tons in the Wyoming regions, over 400,000 each by the Delaware and Hudson and Delaware and Lackawanna and nearly 200,000 by the Pennsylvania; and about 600,000 from the Schuylkill district, nearly all by the Reading. The delivery from the Lehigh district shows a decrease.

SENDING INDIANS TO COLLEGE.

A Western View of the Situation—What Poor Lo Would Have to go Through.

A gentleman named Ketchin, living in Green Lake county, Wis., has had several Indian boys at work for him the past summer on a farm, and they proved so valuable, and so willing to work, and so anxious to leave the roving life of the tribe and engage in the civilized pursuits, that he has interceded with the government to educate the young Indians, and they are to be sent to college. This seems to us to be a fatal mistake. If they would send the young Indians to a district school, and teach them the English language, surrounded by the boys of farmers and mechanics, it would be well for the Indians, but to put them into a college will break them all up. The Indian who goes to a college will find it hard, after the life he has led, to adopt the ways of civilized college students, and become hazers, who practice cruelty on boys who are physically weak. The Indian boy who has never been on the war-path would be sick at heart at witnessing a hazing match, where a consumptive freshman is taken from his warm room, undressed, and held out of a fourth story window until the marrow in his bones is frozen, as has been done within the last year by civilized sons of rich men attending college. The Indian boy is not naturally hard hearted, and to be thrown into the society of boys who think it fun to take a freshman blindfolded, in a hack, ten miles from the college, strip him, and turn him loose to find his way back through the blinding snow, would be too much for them, and they would drift back to the uncivilized life to which they have been accustomed.

Again, it would be hard to make college dudes of sensible Indian boys. You take a plain, unvarnished Indian boy, put on his head a visorless college cap, a collar four inches high, a tight coat, cut off too short at the lower end, a pair of pants that he would have to put French chalk inside of, to get his legs in, and long tooth-pick shoes with yellow tops, and give him a cane, and teach him to say, "Ah, by Jove, you know," and he would be a picture that would cause his tribe to weep. Suppose the father and mother of the Indian student, thus attired, should give the muskrat that they trap, a holiday, and go to the college to visit their sons, and should find him as described, and he could put his eye-glass into one eye and say, "Ah, governor, glad to see you, you know; and madame, I am yours truly," the aged rat trapper would pull his gun and if he could get two of them in range he would shoot them, though he would hesitate to waste a charge of powder on a single one, while the squaw mother would wrap her blanket around her form and go and lean against a fence and be sick. The Indian would have too much sense, uncultured though he may be, to be proud of such an outfit as a son, and instead of blessing the day that his son decided to become cultivated, he would curse it. If it is deemed advisable to educate the Indian boys, let us commence at the right place, the country school, and when the Indian has learned enough to be able to transact business, let him go into some business that he can do, and if he has got it in him to become a man, he will have encouragement from all decent people, but if we start him in a college, where half the boys go because all the other places to get rid of them are closed, the Indian will come out a big-headed piece of uselessness, and when he gets out there will be no place good enough for him. He will be above catching rats, and the world will owe him a living.—Peck's Sun.

The Irish.

At the last census the natives of Ireland who were present in England and Wales numbered 562,874, being in the proportion of 21.65 to 1,000 of the entire population. The number is not an increasing quantity, for in 1861 it was 601,634, and at each census since it has fallen gradually. These figures show that relatively to the whole population of the country the Irish element is not formidable, but its unequal division over the country consentrates its strength in certain districts. In the agricultural counties the number of Irish is insignificant, but but in the manufacturing and mining counties and boroughs they form a large proportion of the population. Thus, in Liverpool they are reckoned at 12.8 per cent., in Birkenhead 8.6, in St. Helen's 8.5, in Manchester 7.5, in Salford 7.4, in Lancashire 6.1, in Cumberland 5.6 per cent., and so on.

Boots Bowers.—The steward of a prominent hotel gives this advice: "Any housekeeper can prove the honesty of her grocer, or his butter, by melting it. Pure butter melted produces a pure, limpid, golden oil, and it retains the butter flavor. Malt oleomargarine, and the oil smells like tallow and looks like tallow, and a scum rises to the surface. Butterine is a mixture of dairy butter and lard. Melt that, and the butter oil will rise to the top. Pour this off, and you will find the lard at the bottom, whitish in color and giving off a disagreeable smell."

AN IRISH GIRL'S HEROISM.

Refusing to Swear Falsely to Save O'Donnell's Life.

The Dublin News publishes a letter from Mr. A. M. Sullivan, who was one of Patrick O'Donnell's counsel, entitled: "Susan Gallagher, the Irish Jeannie Deans—an Episode of the O'Donnell Trial." Mr. Sullivan describes the connection of Susan Gallagher with the killing of James Carey, and argues that the facts redound to the credit of the Irish peasantry. In this case, he says, a simple Donegal girl outrivaled the Midlothian heroine in humanguish, sacrifice, devotion and truth. Mr. Russell's masterly and irresistible argument proved a hundred circumstances and considerations in favor of Carey having handled a pistol during the tragedy. Years ago O'Donnell separated from his wife in America. While revisiting Donegal, O'Donnell met Susan, who consented, under the representation that she was his sister, to accompany him to the Cape, where they intended to marry. When after he returned to England she was questioned by Messrs. Pryor and Sullivan, Susan stated that after leaving Cape Town she sat listless, seasick, and dazed in the steamer's saloon on a bench; and when Mr. Sullivan approached the critical point concerning Carey's pistol, Susan realizing the tremendous importance of the question, suffered intense mental anguish and trembled like an aspen-leaf. Sobbing, she replied: "My back was turned toward them, Sir. Oh, if I had only turned round before! Oh, Sir, I was not looking the right way. I heard some noise on the floor. It might have been he shuffling of feet. It was a small matter." Mr. Sullivan adds: "Who could contradict her if she testified that she beheld Carey with pistol in hand? Or what could be easier than for her to decline that she heard the pistol fall." In conclusion he says: "The people of Tyrconnell may claim with pride the humble heroine of religion and truth, Susan Gallagher, the Irish Jeannie Deans."

The Decline of Winnepeg.

This is not a very jolly British city to visit just now, says a newspaper correspondent, although bed and board were in such demand a year or eighteen months ago that the owner of a canvas tent twenty by sixty feet could retire to the Lake of Como for the remainder of his life after a month's rental from it. But now all is changed; city lots that sold as high as $1,400 a front foot are held for an offer, and there is no one to make it. The city has had its boom and high fever; and relapse, and collapse in fact, is upon the capital of the Province of Manitoba, the first city of the great Northwest. Within two years the rush was so great from Upper Canada that there was not room in the cars nor in the hotels of Winnipeg for the crowds. Demand for anything soon begets supply, of course, and so frame buildings quickly went up for hotels, and then more leisurely brick buildings followed, and now it is said the hotels in that city are as numerous as churches in Rome, where the learned reader of "Hare" and other guide-books will remember, there are churches, or, more accurately speaking, a church, for every day in the year. Be the number as it may, they are numerous and varied in style, from "The Queen's," which is very English in its musty atmosphere and in the solid silver or plated service on the tables to the lodging houses, in imitation of the English, where for twopence one can get a musty if not nasty shake-down.

"You can live on a crust a day in Europe," says Bayard Taylor, "but below four cents for a bed you can't go."

But Winnipeg, save in the name and air of its principal hotel, is not in any manner an English city. You don't see a "red-coat," and the "bob"—the learned traveler will remember that a London policeman is called a "bob," and he will also remember that an English shilling is called a bob—the "bob" in the huge buffalo coat will tell you that he came here from Wisconsin. The people in the streets are Americans, and the wares in the shops are Yankee. But the heavy swell with the glass disc in the left eye tethered by a string to his coat, is, of course, a Britisher. He is yaw-yawing upon one subject or another. The city is American, and in the character of its houses you could imagine yourself in Kansas or Minnesota.

The collapse has been a serious one, but bottom is not touched, and from the mutterings one hears, it is not difficult to imagine that the mother country may have a mimentary South Carolina on her hands in the near future; that, in fact, there may be a seceding State from the Dominion of Canada. Then the precedent of aid and comfort and rebel gunswill arise to distort the Britisher.

"Mr. Wiener," said a Harrisburg lawyer to a witness in the box, "at the time these papers were executed you were speculating, were you not?" "Yes, sir." "You were in oil?" "I was." "And what are you in now?" "Bankruptcy," was the solemn reply.

The Pullman Car Company have 35,000 blankets. If you don't believe this give the porter fifty cents on a cold night and he will show you one.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO LAUGH OVER.

WHY HE WORRIED.

Doctor—"And how do you feel this morning, my poor fellow?"

Sufferer—"Much better in many ways, but I am afraid I won't mend very fast; I worry too much."

Doctor—"You have nothing to worry about. You will not lose any of your limbs and the railroad company can be made to pay heavy damages."

Sufferer—"I know that; but just think of the humiliation!"

Doctor—"The humiliation!"

Sufferer—Yes; I was always considered a man of energy and activity, but now my reputation is ruined. No one will want to employ a man who was so lazy as to get run over by an accommodation train."—Philadelphia Call.

MARRIED TWO WOMEN.

"Did you hear of that man down town who married two women in one day?" asked Fogg at the tea table the other evening. "Isn't it awful?" exclaimed the landlady. "Do tell us all about it, Mr. Fogg." "Oh, there isn't much to tell," replied Fogg; "you know him well. "I know him! the villain!" shrieked the landlady. "Don't say that, ma'am," said Fogg, soothingly; "don't say that. It was the Rev. Mr. Dotted, your beloved pastor, and it wouldn't like to hear you talk so about him. And, by the by, he married the women to as two likely young fellows as there are in town." The landlady says she never could bear that Fogg.—Boston Transcript.

AN INVALID.

"Your daughter has a touch of malaria," said a physician to a New York lady. "I will call again in the morning."

The mother then went to her daughter's room with a look of great anxiety on her face, and said:

"My dear, the doctor says you have malaria. What is it? Is it dangerous?"

"Not very, mamma, and oh, it's so aristocratic! I will wear my blue silk wrapper, and we must get some cut glass bottles for the medicines, and if any of the Smythes girls call have them brought to my room. It will take them down a peg or two, I can tell you."

And the sick young woman looked the very picture of happiness and content.—Philadelphia Call.

WHAT IT MEANT.

"I never saw a man who would pick up his clothes and put them where they belonged," growled Mr. Edsall as she slammed her husband's pants across the back of a chair.

"And I never saw a woman who wouldn't," replied his wife, "and go through all his pockets and lift out the best parts of his money and read all his business notes, and ask what '16-19-21 meant on an insurance company's memorandum."

"I don't," said she.

"You do," said he, and as he dodged the hair brush he ran into June with both hands full of coffee and cups and then went out to buy his breakfast at some dining room.—Hartford Sunday Journal.

A STRIKE IN CHICAGO.

The proprietor of a Chicago paper was sitting in his private office when a boy from up-stairs opened the door and announced that a strike had just been inaugurated.

"Great Scott!" exclaimed the proprietor, turning to the boy, "What's the matter with the printers this time?"

"It's not the printers," he replied; "it's the editors. The hull staff has struck."

"Oh," said the proprietor, with a sigh of relief, "I thought it was the printers. Tell them their demands are not complied with, and then go to the post-office and get the exchanges. It won't take me long to write editorials enough to last a month. I don't need editors, anyway."—Philadelphia Call.

HEARD IN A HOTEL.

"Who is that man, papa?"

"He is one of our city fathers."

"What is he doing?"

"He is trying to get his dinner charged to the city account."

"Is he not able to pay for his own food?"

"Perhaps; but it is not the usual way of doing business."

"Will he succeed in converting the clerk to his way of thinking?"

"Not this time."

"Is he what you call a 'trusted city official'?"

"He was, but he got trusted too much; he pays cash now for his meals or eats them somewhere else."

"Will he go home?"

"No, he prefers to go hungry."

"Perhaps he will go to work?"

"Yes, wanting the first week, according to dining professors."

"Yes, papa, but I thought I saw the proprietor of the hotel and restaurant the two lunch counters and—"

...HILTON VIEW.

...d Every Thursday Morning.

...LANTON, ALA., FEB. 21, 1884.

Judge B. S. Bibb died in Montgomery on Sunday last. He was one of the oldest citizens of the State, being 68 years of age.

The exhibition of Alabama minerals, woods and grasses made by the L. & N. railroad at the Louisville Exposition, will be placed on exhibition at the New Orleans Centennial.

Upon one occasion when one of Wendell Phillips' anti-slavery speeches was drowned by the noise of his angry audience, he exclaimed: "Howl on. I address here (pointing to the reporters) 30,000,000 of people."

It is not what we earn but what we save, that makes us rich. It is not what we eat but what we digest, that makes us strong. It is not what we read, but what we remember, that makes us wise. It is not what we intend, but what we do, that makes us useful. It is not a few faint wishes, but a life-long struggle, that makes us valiant.

A few weeks ago a French nobleman shot himself in the Hotel de Paris at Monte Carlo. Before, however, committing the "rash act," he paid a graceful tribute to his female friends. Some twenty ladies, both of the grande and the demi-monde, received a handsome bouquet with the Comte de——'s compliments, and regrets that unavoidable circumstances prevented him from further continuing their charming acquaintance.

The party who figured in a Minnesota bigamy case as having two contemporaneous partners was not the man, but the woman. It happened that her time was divided between two counties distant from each other, and that in each she had a suitor whom she loved. Therefore, when they almost simultaneously popped the question, she said yes in both instances. The weddings were only two months apart. But her double wedlock was soon discovered, and she is to be prosecuted.

One day as Thackeray was walking along Wych street he passed a group of dirty little street Arabs. One little female tatterdemalion looked up at him as he passed and then called out to her younger brother: "Hi, Archie, do you know who him is? Him's Becky Sharp." "By Jove," said Thackeray to a friend, "strange as it may seem, that little maiden gave me more pleasure than if I had received a complimentary letter from his Grace the Duke of Wellington. When your name gets into the slums that means fame; you have touched the bottom."

The town of Riverside, Ala., on the Georgia Pacific railroad, and west bank of the beautiful Coosa river, bids fair to become a place of some importance. The river is being improved, and will be navigable for boats to Rome, Ga. A narrow gauge road will soon be built from Talladega, Ala., to the Broken Arrow coal fields (eight miles from Riverside) and will cross the Georgia Pacific at this point. Iron ore and coal being in such close proximity, the citizens are anxious to see it developed. Mr. J. R. Coleman, who owns a great deal of land here, will donate twenty acres for the purpose of building a cotton factory or iron works. Capitalists could find a safe investment at this place. The hotel will soon be completed and ready for guests.

Mrs. Weldon is a lady who wants the English Divorce Court to compel her husband to live with her. She has brought suit for "restitution of conjugal rights," and the Court has no option but to compel Mr. Weldon to live with her or send him to jail for contempt. The Court, however sympathizes with Mr. Welden, and considers that this procedure of compelling persons to live together is preposterous. It has, therefore, suspended any punishment of Mr. Weldon pending an appeal he has made. So impatient, however, is the lady, that she actually applied to the Lords Justices of Appeal to get her husband's appeal taken out of its turn, which was refused. He had offered her $2,500 a year, but in vain. She is a notorious litigant, always carrying on a suit against some one, and nothing pleases her better probably than a suit against her husband. She has a marvellously beautiful voice, and was very much in society some years ago.

Political.

The State Democratic Executive Committee met in Montgomery, on the 14th inst. The Committee is composed of the following gentlemen: J. M. McKleroy, Chairman, Tennent Lomax, Secretary, H. C. Semple, N. H. R. Dawson, Willis G. Clark, Mims Walker, H. R. Hood, J. N. Arrington, D. G. Dunklin, J. H. G. Martin, J. H. Rainer, W. R. Nelson, J. B. Cocke, M. A. Smith, J. R. Dowdell, L. H. Scruggs. The first business transacted was the election of Maj. H. C. Semple, of Montgomery, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Gen. L. W. Lawler, as a member of the National Executive Committee. It was decided that the fourth day of June, 1884, be selected as the time for holding the State Convention. On motion, it was decided that the counties be allowed one delegate for each two hundred votes cast, and one additional for each fraction of one hundred or over. The State election of 1882 was adopted as the basis of representation. This will give Chilton five votes in the convention.

There are some important questions which the people of the county must shortly be asking themselves: Who is to be our next State Senator, who our next Sheriff, tax collector, representative, &c.? If there are candidates for the various positions, they should make themselves known to the people, and not continue a still hunt, until an expected more propitious time. The people have a right to know the names of the men they are to select officers from. An unreasonable, though, perhaps, not a causeless prejudice exists in the county against conventions, and where such is the case, it is not always that we can get good men in office, for, as a rule, such men will not join in a "scrub" race. The people should keep the eye political well open, both as to county and State candidates. If they do not, and instead, affect or assume indifference in a matter concerning so materially the interests of each and every voter, there may be cause when too late to regret such indifference. There is danger in doing nothing as well in politics as in business. Each citizen is a sovereign whose duty it is to assist in the selection of proper servants for the political household, though his only reward may be the knowledge that he is doing a good work for his country and his neighbor. If he neglects this duty, dishonest or vagabondish servants may be the consequence. Though the foregoing remarks may be crudely stated, we hope they may not be unworthy of favorable reflection by every voter who desires to see only good and fit men in office, and who would give honor only to those to whom honor is due.

D. W. ALLEN.

John Logan owes his seat in the Senate to the affability, political shrewdness and good management of his intellectual and ambitious wife. If he attains the Presidency, or gets near enough to say "how dy," he will owe all to Mrs. Logan. That that good lady is determined to seat her husband in the White House is evidenced by the fact that she went out a hundred miles the other day to meet and escort the Illinois editors to Washington City. Knowledge is power, the press is powerful, and blessed is the limited statesman who has a noble helpmeet. Three cheers for Mrs. Logan.—Ex.

The Greenville Advocate, of last week contained the following items:

"Mr. McCain, who resides near this place, left his home, in the forenoon of Sunday, the 3rd inst., and returning in a short time found his wife missing. Thinking she had gone to a neighbor's house, he felt no uneasiness until the approach of evening, when he came in search of her to Greenville. At the depot he learned she had purchased a ticket for Pensacola, which she returned and had her money refunded. Since that time he has been traveling up and down the road in the vain endeavor to find her, and is in great distress. Mrs. McCain left three children at home, went without any luggage or money—her husband can place no construction on the disappearance save temporary derangement, and he describes their domestic life as very happy. We publish this distressing item reluctantly, but with the hope that it will be the means of aiding him in obtaining information with regard to her and securing her restoration to her family."

The several commercial organizations of Mobile have issued an address to the people of Alabama appealing to them in behalf of the great Exposition at New Orleans. They urge upon the various commercial bodies in the State to appoint delegates to the convention proposed in Mr. Pratt's recently published address. They appeal to the boards of county commissioners, to all industrial companies, heads of manufacturing establishments and to meetings of citizens to appoint delegates to that convention in order that an association may be formed whose number and character will at once guarantee success. Alabama must be worthily represented and the people must do the work.

The lunatic lover who used to haunt the Lyceum and serenade Miss Anderson nightly with tearful tunes upon a flute as she left, disappeared from Wellington street some time ago, and it was hoped he was dead or in a madhouse; but he is to the fore again, flute and all, piping in tones to melt the heart of a stone. This victim of a hopeless passion is an ex-wrangler of Cambridge University and a scientific author of some note. He is not the only English moth or masher who has been sadly scorch by the blazing beauty of the majestic Mary. The Carmelite chapel where she attends mass on Sunday exhibits such a number of highly colored converts, captured by the American enchantress, as might almost excite the envy of Monsignor Capel.

Clanton Male and Female Academy.

The exercises of this institution were resumed on Monday, October 8th, and will continue for nine months. The course of instruction is divided into three departments, with the following rates of tuition:

Primary (per month)	$1.50
Intermediate	2.00
Academic	3.00

No deduction for absences, except in cases of protracted sickness.

The patronage of the public earnestly solicited. W. C. CARPENTER,
Oct. 11, 1883. Principal.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Roscila Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promptitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

mr 8-tf J. M. CORDERIE.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but rich, bringing out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LODGES.—Regular communications Clanton Lodge of A. F. & A. M., No. 423, first Saturday in each month at 7 o'clock p. m.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mr. A. C. Wells preached at the Methodist Church on Sunday night.

Every one of Clanton's merchants worked hard and worked well for prohibition.

Mr. H. N. Langford, of Jemison, has removed to Clanton, and been placed in charge of the county jail.

The town of Goodwater, Coosa county, was almost entirely destroyed by fire on Monday night last.

The creeks which surround Clanton in every direction have been swimming for several days. No damage to report.

Some of our music loving young people are preparing for a concert which they propose to treat the Clantonian world with shortly.

The VIEW has received from the State Commissioner of Agriculture, a number of his "Circulars to Farmers." Any farmer desiring a copy can get one by applying at this office.

Mr. J. L. Farr, of Kincheon, is visiting Clanton with a view of locating and doing business here. Hope that he may decide to stay with us. There is room here for many yet.

All parties who have expressed a desire to join the lodge of Knights of Honor at this place are requested to report to Dr. I. D. Lanier, by have all sums for, March 1st, for examination, or the organization of the lodge cannot be perfected.

We learn from parties in Clanton that several of the men whose names were given by our correspondent last week to prove that John Selman's wife was not a mulatto, have been dead for years. One of them died before the war.

Prof. A. E. Burns, late principal of Jemison Academy, has withdrawn from the work of "teaching young ideas how to shoot," and has accepted the position of book-keeper at Messrs. Hanff & Callen's Saw mill. Mrs. E. C. Lawrence has taken charge of the Academy as principal.

The Selma Times closes a report of the killing in that city of a Mr Robinson by a Mr. Plattenburg, with the following paragraph: "To conclude whiskey has beat the long roll again. Another victim has gone to swell the "innumerable caravan that moves to the pale realms of shade" and keeps death busy making more room in its charnel house for the suckers at the bung-hole of damnation."

Our correspondent, "Bijou," writes rather sharply against the votaries of Terpsichore at Verbena. The young people should be allowed to enjoy themselves occasionally, but they should not keep late hours nor allow their amusements to interfere with their studies. This is our advice to them, but it is probable they will do just as most people do about such things—that is—just as they please. Ay, Romeo?

Verbena Views.

We can soon look for the advance crop of Spring poetry.

St. Valentine's day passed off lively enough for our young folks.

Mr. F. M. Ansley has removed to Richmond Junction, and not to Louisville as stated last week.

Let out temperance men push the work until the whole country is solid for Prohibition!

Master Bennie Strock has returned from Tuscaloosa.

Our merchants are doing an extensive advancing business.

Prof. Acree's debating society was well attended last Friday night. We hope to make it entertaining to the public, as well as instructive to the boys.

Rev. J. L. Thompson received a fine suit of clothes as a mark of appreciation from the ladies of his Deatsville church.

We must at last raise our denunciations against the dancing nuisance that is at present so demoralizing to the youth of our community. Managed as these dances are, by a number of immoral young men, the influence is in direct opposition to our churches and Sunday schools and must be stopped.

BIJOU.

Benson Views.

Rain in abundance, roads muddy, almost impassable. Farmers are wearing long faces; farm work at a stand still. Gardening backward, but very few seeds sown as yet, and the prospects for sowing gloomy. Sickness all over our neighborhood. Harvest time for the pill men. Mr. Bowen Jones, Mr. Minor Wooley and Mr. G. W. Jones are dangerously ill. Numbers of others have been, but are convalescing.

A petition is being circulated, to change the mail route from Maplesville to Verbena, so as to start from Randolph, in place of Maplesville. Much success to the petition.

A whiskey shop is in full bloom, in the vicinity of Mr. John P. Nix. Is there no way to put this evil from among us? Where are the good men of best three? Why not have an election? A majority are ripe for prohibition.

Elder J. M. McCord preached a highly interesting sermon, at Mulbery church on yesterday. He is a very pious and orthodox young man and bids fair to make an efficient laborer in the vineyard.

Mr. John Milford, Sr., occupies a house which was built in 1821. Supposed to be the oldest log house in the county. Can any one tell us of an older one? BENSON.

Grand and Petit Jury.

The following are the grand and petit jurors drawn to serve at the Spring term of the circuit court, which begins Monday, March 24th:

GRAND JURY.

W. H. Brown, L. F. Grace, Elijah Mims, D. A. Kemp, Ezekiel Eddings, J. L. Williams, Sr., James T. Thomas, W. R. Bowline, A. J. Hall, W. B. Strock, John Parnell, J. W. Broadhead, W. H. Shelby, Anderson Baker, Sr., Elijah Easterling.

PETIT JURY.

G. W. Pierce, James L. Wells, John A. Rollins, C. W. Culp, John A. Rogers, B. T. Robinson, R. S. Owens, John Marcus, R. H. Wilson Floyd Ellison, B. T. Rasberry, C. T. Zimmerman, H. J. Norris, R. M. Robuck, Peter C. Nix, T. J. Traywick, L. A. Honeycutt, J. M. Wooley, W. S. Lawrence, Jasper T. Smitherman, Wiley Littlejohn, B. W. Scarbrough, H. C. Vinson, W. W. Green.

Congratulatory and Complimentary.

A communication from "Alpine" has been received. It congratulates Clanton and her people on the result of the prohibition election, and compliments the VIEW profusely on the part it took in the work of keeping Clanton "dry." We ask our correspondent to excuse us from publishing his communication. We did no more than our duty in working against whiskey and its evils, and it would make us feel too "exceeding small" to have others read praises undeserved, besides, we are very well satisfied with the result, compliments left out.

When the VIEW was established two and a half years since, it started with a small circulation. Among the first list of jurors published in its columns only a few were subscribers to the paper. Our attention was called to this fact by reading the list of jurors published elsewhere in this issue, only three of whom are non-subscribers. At least two-thirds of the jurors drawn in 1883 were subscribers to the paper. We intend to tackle those three jurymen when they reach Clanton, and hope to have their names on our subscription list before they leave. It may be that they have not visited their burg of justice since the VIEW came. Anyway we are satisfied the VIEW is gaining popularity.

Newspaper Items.

The Harrisonburg Patriot makes the following sensible comments on an old subject: We presume that some people think newspaper men are persistent duns; let a farmer place himself in a similar position, and see if he would not do the same. Suppose that he raises one thousand bushels of corn and his neighbor should come and buy a bushel, and the price was only one dollar or less, and the neighbor says, "I will pay you the amount in a few days." As the farmer does not want to be small about the matter he says, "All right." Another comes in the same way until the whole of one thousand bushels are entrusted to one thousand different persons, and not one of the purchasers concerns himself about it, for it is a small amount they owe the farmer, and of course they will not help him any. He does not realize that the farmer has fritted away his large crop of corn, and that its value is due in a thousand little driblets, and that he is seriously embarrassed in his business because his debtors treat it as a little matter.

An esteemed contemporary, the Atlanta Constitution, begins an editorial article on the Mormons as follows:

"The tyranny of the Mormon system is indescribable. When the missionaries make female converts abroad they send their photographs to Utah. At the Sunday services in the temple these pictures are displayed from the pulpit and all good Mormons who need fresh wives inspect these portraits, select the woman they want, and furnish money to pay their passage to Utah. When the female converts arrive they are frequently dragged from the cars by the brutal Mormons who have bargained for them, placed in wagons and driven away."

For reckless extravagance of statement this rather beats the Michigan man, who is sending circulars to the newspapers asking them to raise their voices to 'crush from the fair land of liberty the 200,000 polygamists who are polluting American society.' For the sake of the profession we hope the editor of the Constitution didn't know that he lied in every statement that he made in the above paragraph.—Salt Lake Herald.

We are morally certain that the Constitution did not know that it lied; but nearly everybody who read the article, knew that it did. It is only nessessary to see the faces of the "Gals" who leave this country for Mormondom to be convinced that they never would bear inspection, much less could be made saleable.—Asheville Ægis.

Every body that attended enjoyed the Valentine Hop at the court house last Thursday night. An excellent band from Montgomery was on hand, and furnished fine music. The young ladies were lovely, and the same might be said of some of the young men, were the press permitted to prevaricate.

LETTERS OF EXPLANATION

BY LIEUTENANT R. W. STUDDY.

They were brought about in this way. There had been a regatta on the Schuylkill, at Philadelphia. Mr. Charles Graydon, a resident, had been presented to Miss Thurlow, a visitor. They talked of boats and rivers, and thence drifted to the ocean and steamers.

Said Miss Thurlow: "Sometimes I fancy I should like to be a sailor—a real professional sailor, I mean. I'd like to command an ocean steamer, to cross and recross the Atlantic a half-dozen times a year."

Yes, Mr. Graydon had crossed the Atlantic several times, and generally enjoyed his trips abroad thoroughly. He had formed pleasant acquaintances on steamers, which developed afterward into close friendships. He had been deceived, too, by outward appearances.

"I remember several years ago," he said, "I was going over on the Cunard line. There was on board a young clergyman whom everyone liked. We became very friendly, and spent many a half hour walking the deck together. Just before we reached Queenstown he said to me, 'Graydon, I find myself a little embarrassed. I haven't as much money left as I need. Would you lend me fifty dollars till we reach London? I'll pay you there. I hate to ask you, but I am really in need of it.' I naturally understood his delicacy, and so made light of the matter, replying merely, 'Certainly, Waldron, I am only too glad to be of service to you,' and I handed him the sum he asked for. We parted at Queenstown to meet in London; but, do you know, I have never heard from my young clergyman since. He wore his cloak very well."

A bright color was in Miss Thurlow's cheeks as she asked, "What did you say his name was?"

"He called himself Theodore Waldron, although I doubt whether that was his real name."

Miss Thurlow's brow contracted and her eyes flashed, but she said, calmly: "There must be some mistake. Surely a clergyman could not be guilty of such an act. Tell me, when did this happen?"

"In July, 1868. I have not been over since."

After leaving Miss Thurlow, Mr. Graydon wondered why it was that she grew so suddenly cool in her manner toward him. "She must be a clergyman's daughter," thought he, and the matter passed from his mind.

These are the letters that ensued. The first was received by Mr. Graydon some ten days after the regatta:

"CHICAGO, September 15, 1873.

"MR. CHARLES GRAYDON, Phila.:

"Sir:—My sister, Miss Thurlow, has related to me in detail her conversation with you in Philadelphia on the occasion of meeting you at a regatta. While I deplore her misfortune in having presented to her notice a man so unprincipled as you have shown yourself to be—a man who deserves no better name than blackguard when he attempts to cloud the unsullied reputation of another—I am forced so far to recognize you as to demand a retraction on your part of the gross calumny you have uttered. The Rev. Theodore Waldron is a lifelong friend of mine and of my family. He is not at present in Chicago, but even if he were here I should not hesitate to take this matter into my own hands. You cannot fail to understand that I expect you to retract and apologize.

FRANK THURLOW."

"PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 19, 1873.

"MR. FRANK THURLOW, Chicago, Ill.:

"Sir—Your very extraordinary letter of the 15th inst. has been received. I am not quite clear upon the subject, but fancy you must have written it from a mad-house. You demand an apology, a retraction—I don't quite know what. I am in the dark. Do I understand that you expect me to confess to lying—that you expect me to say that what I said of Mr. Waldron is not true? Why, sir, the more I think of it the more am I irritated. It is you that have insulted me. It is you that will apologize. I have spoken nothing but the truth; and as regards Mr. Waldron, your life-long friend (and associate, I presume), I reiterate that he borrowed money from me under false pretenses, and I add now that he deserves to be branded publicly, although in justice to myself I must say that the mention of his name was quite accidental and unintentional on my part. Miss Thurlow drew from me his name in full, and thus identified him. When you have taken time to reflect you will recognise your hastiness, and no doubt tender me your full and ready apology.

"CHARLES GRAYDON."

"CHICAGO, September 25, 1873.

"MR. CHARLES GRAYDON, Phila.:

"I hardly know what to say to you, sir. On my return to this city yesterday Mr. Thurlow laid your letter before me, and also a copy of the one he had previously written to you. Moreover, a full statement of your malicious and cowardly attack has been given me. Your motive for such action is beyond all conjecture.

"Our acquaintance was but a limited one in point of time; still in our constant intercourse and mutual confidence during those few days on board ship, I felt that you were a gentleman. My life has not been one to give me the experience and judgment necessary to combat with a man so wily and unscrupulous as you seem to be, and yet it is strange that a man can be refined and gentle in manner and a scoundrel at heart. Why did you lend me the money at all? Did you even then intend to injure me, and look to the fact as a future weapon with which to strike me? How could you have known that I was about to marry Miss Thurlow? What have I ever done that you should wish to come between us now? I can only look upon this dastardly act as something beyond my comprehension.

"Fortunately, I remember the exact date of depositing the money to your credit at Mann Brothers'. I was detained in Ireland, and on my arrival in London was unable to find you. I therefore did all I could when I paid the sum at that bank where you unconditional having a letter of credit.

"I have written to Mann Brothers, and by return steamer shall possess a receipt showing that on August 4, 1868, the money was paid to your account. I have now merely to say that your scheme has utterly failed, and that I leave you to the contemplation of yourself.

THEODORE WALDRON."

Mr. Graydon read this letter, turned to his diary, and found that on August 3, 1868, he had drawn his balance at Mann Brothers', and left London. He rushed out, and a half-hour afterward this cable dispatch was flashing under the Atlantic:

"MANN BROTHERS, London:

"Have I a balance at your bank? If so, how much, and when was it deposited? CHARLES GRAYDON."

The next day he received this:

"CHARLES GRAYDON, Philadelphia:

"A balance to your credit of ten pounds six shillings. Deposited August 4, 1868.

MANN BROTHERS."

The last letter:

"PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 29, 1873

"REV. THEODORE WALDRON,
Chicago, Illinois:

"MY DEAR SIR:—With feelings of deep shame and bitter regret I offer you an apology. Since receiving your letter I have telegraphed to Mann Brothers, and have learned by their reply that your statement is absolutely correct. It is perhaps useless for me to say more. Yet, feeling that I have never had a desire to injure you in any way, that I have never harbored a wish to annoy you even, I may be allowed to state that I left London on August 3, 1868, on which date I drew from the banking house of Mann Brothers all the money due me. I wish also to assure you that although I have often related the incident of our brief acquaintance, I never before mentioned your name. My inadvertence on this occasion would have probably passed unnoticed under any other circumstances. For this unfortunate affair I am more than sorry: I am humiliated. I beg that you will convey to Miss Thurlow a separate apology for having so unconsciously wounded her.

"Yours very contritely,

"CHARLES GRAYDON."

Among the presents displayed at the wedding of the Rev. Theodore Waldron and Miss Thurlow, was one which attracted no little attention—an ingenious Swiss clock, so constructed that, on striking, a figure representing Charity stepped forth and drew a veil over the hour that had passed. On a card lying near it was written, "With the best wishes of Mr. Charles Graydon."

When He Went Aloft.

"When I was a lad, my greatest desire was to go to sea," remarked a well known citizen to a reporter the other day. "My father was a farmer, but tilling the soil had no charms for me. I was discontented, and one day my father, thinking it was the best way to cure me, gave his consent to my becoming a sailor. I was never so happy in my life, and all the boys in the neighborhood envied me. Before a fortnight passed I envied them.

"That was in the days of merchantmen, and my father was acquainted with a merchant in New York who engaged in the China trade, and to him he gave me a line asking him to put me on one of his vessels. The captain was a bluff, hearty old fellow, the very beau ideal of a sea captain—when on shore I was very much pleased with his appearance, but subsequently he didn't look half so pretty to me. He was a thorough sailor, though. I never saw the night that he didn't come on deck two or three times to see that all was as it should be.

"I felt a little bit homesick as a little tug took us down the bay, but I forgot all about it when we got outside and commenced making sail. There were three of us boys on board, and we stood huddled together on the lower deck watching the sailors as they ran out the spars and let fall the sails, and we fell to wondering how long it would be before we would be required to go aloft and lay out on a yard. One of us thought it would be a month or two and another thought it would be six months. Finally we concluded that we would be worked into it gradually; sent up a little way one day, a little farther the next, and so on until we could go all over the rigging. You can imagine my surprise, therefore, when, after all the ropes had been coiled up, the deck cleared and everything made ship shape, the captain turned to me and said:

"'Here, youngster, do you see that rope a-flying up there? Go up and bring it down.'

"It was a bit of marline, about three feet long, flying from the topmast cross-trees, and I suppose some sailor had put it there on purpose. Gracious! the thought of going way up there made my hair stand on end, and I told the captain I was afraid I couldn't do it.

"'You are, eh! Well, I can take all that out of you!' and he started for a rope's end.

"I didn't wait for him to get it, but ran up the rigging as well as I was able, never expecting to get back alive. There was quite a heavy sea, and the mast swayed frightfully. If I could have been put back on the farm at that moment, no one would ever have heard me say another word about going to sea."

"Did you get the marline?"

"You bet I did. And we'n't I proud when I handed it to the captain! And didn't I put on airs over the other boys: I'd been aloft and they hadn't."

MUTTON.—A London scientific paper says that a shoulder of mutton contains one-third more bone than a leg, and considerably more fat and connective tissue, and that, consequently, a shoulder at 20 cents a pound is dearer than a leg at 20 cents.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MR. PARNELL'S MOVEMENTS HAVE been always wrapped in much mystery. He is seldom in Ireland, and there are not more than half a dozen to whom his London residence is known. His sudden disappearance from the scene in the midst of more than one great crisis occasioned some reflection, and for some while preceding his recent triumphant appearance in Dublin his Cork constituents could not hear from him or ascertain his whereabouts.

IT HAS BEEN SAID that because cattle sometimes prefer impure water to pure drinking water, no pains should be taken to supply them with pure water. The British Medical Journal explains to agriculturists that the reason for this fact is that cattle when given tank water are not properly supplied with rock salt. In their desire for saline food animals will drink the most impure fluids, and will even eat earth. The writer thinks it both injudicious and cruel to deprive cattle of salt, and thus compel them to seek it in refuse.

AT LEEDS, LATELY, MR. ARTHUR NICHOLS delivered a lecture on "Snakes and Snake Charming," in which he gave an instance of the appearance of the sea serpent which occurred in his own experience. It turned out to be the body of a dead whale around which were collected thousands of gulls and albatrosses, and which simulated the shape and form of a monster with a mane and long tail. It is a pity that every master of a vessel from which the sea serpent is seen has not courage enough to steer close to it, so that its real nature may be made evident.

THE SECRETARY OF ONE Western Board of Trade has mastered the alphabet of business. "It may be true," he writes in substance, "that we have produced 100,000,000 bushels less than an average wheat crop, and that Europe has produced 150,000,000 bushels less than an average crop of wheat and rye," but the trading public, after losing two cents a bushel per month for six months on the strength of these stories, is getting tired of believing them. It occurs to him that enormous accumulations of grain, here and abroad, tell a different story. So did the statistics, to those who did not prefer to believe the stories of manipulators.

SACRIFICED TO THE FISHERIES.—Seventeen vessels and 209 lives were lost in the Gloucester fisheries during the past year. Forty of the men are known to have left widows and a number of children, of whom there is a record of 66. Seventy-one men who were capsized or went astray in dories reached the shore, or were rescued by passing vessels, many of them after great exposure and suffering. A summarized list gives the following figures: Total tonnage of the 17 vessels, 1,120; value, $91,300; insurance, $76,972. In 1882 12 vessels, valued at $79,700, and 115 lives were lost. The total losses in the New England fisheries, outside of Gloucester, principally in Maine, were 12 vessels, of 650 tons, and 17 lives.

SHORTLY AFTER MISS ALCOTT'S "Little Women" was published a quiet-looking lady entered a Boston circulating library and asked the lady clerk to pick her out "a good book that would rest and amuse her." Naturally "Little Women" was offered; and declined. "It's very nice; you'd like it," urged the clerk. "I should not care to read it," said the other. "But at least look at it." "No," came the answer, firmly, and with an odd smile; "it is not a book that I should care to read." Then the clerk, pretty angry, walked away to the chief librarian and cried: "There's a woman down there wants a book, and if you want her waited on some one else must do it. I won't." "Why, why not?" "Why, she says 'Little Women' isn't good enough for her to read." "Do you know who that lady is?" "No, and I don't care." "Well, I'll tell you. That is Louisa M. Alcott. Now go and get her a book."

THE IMPORTANT MATTER of irrigation is receiving much attention in Colorado. Until recent years little was done in this regard beyond the digging of ditches or flumes a few rods in length. In the last few years, according to the Denver Tribune, companies with large capital have been organized, with the object of bringing under cultivation the thousands of acres of land, otherwise arid, but which with proper irrigation prove as arable and fertile as the most favored farming sections in the rich West. This new industry of irrigation not only provides labor for hundreds of men and teams, but adds to the wealth of Colorado by increasing the acreage of arable lands and swelling the aggregate volume of natural products, notably cereals, fruit and vegetables. Two blades of grass are made to grow where one grew before, and Colorado, from being dependent for home consumption upon natural products imported from other States, is fast becoming a source of supply for Eastern markets.

A Mexican Hurricane.

A hurricane occurred on the Mexican coast on November 4, which entirely destroyed the town of Altata, at the port of that name. Not a house remained standing, and vessels and launches at anchor suffered severely. At Mazatlan the wind blew with great violence, and the sea was excessively rough. When the gale commenced the Mexican steamer Democrata and barks Carlos Paladin and Margedina were at anchor. The Paladin cut away her anchors, losing her first mate in the operation, as he was washed overboard and drowned. She then commenced to drift, and finally, after striking on the rocks in front of Olas Altas, drifted on the beach at Puerto Viejo, near the Cimarron. Her crew succeeded in reaching the shore, with the exception of two, who were drowned. The Margedina cut down her upper masts and yards, and rode the gale out in safety.

THE EDITOR'S CONSCIENCE.

A Wee Story Told by a Western Editor.

(From Puck's Sun.)

To-day a letter came from the business office to the editorial desk, and when the editor opened it and saw the date-line "Troy, Alabama," his heart smote him, and he reached for his check-book, instinctively. Then he stopped and read the letter, and breathed freer when he found that it was only a letter from a boy who wanted the editor's autograph. What could have caused the editor's heart to jump up into his mouth when he opened that letter from Troy? What made him reach for his check-book? Reader, young reader particularly, the editor once stole a horse at Troy, Alabama. Do not hold up your hands in horror, at the deed, and say you have always mistrusted that the bald-headed man, with the pleasant face, was a horse thief in disguise, for you have never thought any such thing. Besides, a man was not considered a horse thief in those days who took another man's horse. It was in 1864, and a cavalry regiment to which the editor belonged made a raid through that portion of Alabama, and one afternoon stopped at the beautiful little village of Troy. There was a thin, pale, nervous, red-headed soldier in the regiment who had been riding a hard-hearted, deceptive, diabolical, disgusting mule for a week, a mule that didn't care whether school kept or not, a mule that would not keep up with the procession, and tried hard to lag behind so the rebels would capture the red-headed soldier. To keep up with the regiment it was necessary to wear out a pair of spurs, a clapboard, two fence rails and the rider, every blessed day, on the mule, and much of the hatred of mules which the present editor has was born of that experience. That evening the soldier gave of his rations to a little colored boy who looked smart, and told him to always be a good boy, and learn to read, and be kind to his old master, and he would be all right, when the colored boy told where there was a fine horse in a pasture a few miles away, a "furrer bred" he said. There is no person except one who has ridden a mule a week who can appreciate a story about a fine horse belonging to the enemy. The mule was saddled, and soon the soldier and the colored boy, and another soldier and another colored boy, were trying to catch that horse. O, he was a beauty. As he galloped across the pasture and neighed and snorted and put on scallops he looked like a picture.

It was not long before the red-headed soldier's saddle was on the fine horse and the procession rode up by the planter's house. Ah, there was the rub. The old mother and father of the boy who owned the fine horse, who was in the confederate army, sat on the veranda. They had seen the soldiers go through the granary, the smoke house, and everything where they could get anything to eat, and the old people had not murmured. They sat there smoking corn-cob pipes, acting as though in war times they must submit to war measures. But when the red-headed soldier rode by on the beautiful horse, his canteen and sabre rattling, and the horse looking so proud, as though he had been left out of the war, and was now going in fresh to put a stop to it, the old folks saw the animal, the old lady said, "Oh, pa, the Yankees have found Bub's horse," and then they both burst out crying. "Bub," the brave young confederate, was away with his regiment, and poor old pa and ma had to sit there and see his horse go off with the Yankees. The slim soldier had a heart concealed about his person even then, and he thought of his old father and mother in Wisconsin, and he had half a mind to take the horse back, notwithstanding the fact that another soldier would take him in a holy minute, but just then the bugle sounded for the "assembly," the soldiers yelled and spurred their horses toward camp, and the new horse began to prance and wanted to go along so bad, that the slim soldier "let him went," and a beautiful race it was. For nearly two years after that horse was the constant companion of the slim soldier, who rode him about ten thousand miles more or less, but there was hardly a day of all those long marches that he did not think of the poor old father and mother of the soldier boy who owned the horse, and of their tears when they saw the noble animal go down the lane carrying a Yankee, when they would have been so delighted to have seen their own gray-coated soldier on his back. And so it was, when we opened the letter from the boy who wanted our autograph, who was probably unborn when the horse was taken, we came so near putting the autograph on a check and sending it to the old people who smoked the cob pipes nineteen years ago and wept over the horse.

A Novel Plot.

Philadelphia furnishes a capital plot for a novelist. A lady named Hardy married James Black, a wealthy tradesman. In her own right she inherited considerable property, which involved her in a long and tedious lawsuit. She entered into a written contract with Joseph F. Farrar, an insurance agent to give him a large share of the estate if he would collect the necessary evidence and establish her identity. This agreement was lodged with a lawyer for safe keeping. The case was a long time in the courts, and a decision in Mrs. Black's favor was finally reached only a short time since. Meantime Mr. Farrar had died. He had for years been estranged from his wife and all trace of his only heir, a daughter, named Frances Josephine, was missing. Under a provision in the father's will and at the desire of Mrs. Black, the lawyer with whom the agreement was placed entered upon an active search for the child, and after much difficulty succeeded last week in finding her.

A LIVE AMERICAN GIRL ABROAD.

A Marvelous Dream.

Last summer I was "doing London" as thoroughly as all American women without escort can, when one morning, after catching prudent glimpses of what remains of the "Seven Dials," immortalized by Hogarth or Douglas Jerrold, and of the "Seven Dials," I turned into New Oxford street (which is joined by Tottenham court road and ends at Mudie's Library). Walking along towards Holborn I found myself involuntarily stopping before one of the prettiest fronts I had yet seen. Naturally I looked up and saw above the number 3 an aesthetic-looking sign against the front (for projecting signs are inadmissible in the great metropolis), on which I read "Dr. Pierce's Medicines." At once I gave a little ejaculation of joy, and fairly rushed into the shop. Why! I had been during two whole days lamenting the awkwardness of a railway porter, who, in my transit from Southampton, after landing, had so carelessly handled my "box" (trunk is also inadmissible in England as to break not only my supply of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, that I had brought from New York, but all of his Purgative Pellets (so advisable to ladies in traveling) excepting a bottle I had in my reticule. The clerk appeared to notice my satisfaction as I looked around and saw a portrait of Dr. Pierce, whose acquaintance I had first made at a ball in the White House, when he was Congressman from the fine city of Buffalo, and saw pictures of its World's Dispensary building and of its Invalids' Hotel, in which I had been a guest patient (as well, let me add, as a patient guest) during a course of treatment with World's Dispensary medicines, which had changed me from a nervous, dyspeptic, fretful woman into the cheerful and healthful traveler I now found myself to be. The clerk was vastly polite as I told him what a surprise it was to me to find that the boons of my life time had found a home in London. "Why," he interrupted, with a smile, "the medicines of which this is the European entrepot have won thousands of grateful patients as enthusiastic as you seem to be." Of course in a short time the mishap with the railway porter was forgotten, and, after giving an order for a new assortment of the "Golden Discovery" and "Pellets" sent to my lodgings in Bernal street, I was again threading my way through the London crowds. Fatigued with the day's exercise and enjoyment I retired early to bed, and with the pleasant incident of Oxford street well to the fore in my mind as I fell asleep. What wonder that I dreamed, or that my fancies traveled across the Atlantic to Buffalo and to the Invalids' Hotel, which had to me the same grateful memories as the church of her marriage has to the happy wife.

I seemed to be in a palace car between Albany and Buffalo, and the newsboy had brought me a copy of the marvelous book sold freely on all the trains, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by Dr. Pierce, ex-Senator and ex-Congressman. I was again reading its pages, expressed, as all medical books for the people should be expressed, in "plain English," and which is full of everything relating to the ills which flesh is heir to, so that the book may be well called the Invalids' Bible and the Testament for the already strong, who would keep themselves always strong. The book, which takes the child in the cradle through all the ills of nutrition and dentition; the mother in her agonies; the husband in his depressions; the father in his sufferings from overwork; and shows each and all (and even the practicing physician, who thinks he knows so much and yet has always new things to learn) how the brain is weakened in functions, the lung poisoned, the blood contaminated, the liver made torpid, the heart disarranged, the muscles made rigid, the nerves shattered, and the tissues and absorbents infected with the subtle poisons of excesses and malaria. And finally, the precious volume—the veriest gospel of health in this world—turns the reader's attention to the Golden Medical Discovery, that, whether it is used upon the pores of the body or sent into the channels of the body through the processes of assimilation and digestion, immediately "cools the brow and tempers the brain, and maketh the faint one strong again." In my dream I had arrived at Buffalo, given my book to an interesting invalid of a girl who sat near me, and whose modestly filled purse seemed to forbid her the boon of the book albeit it was so unusually cheap—six pages of the profusely illustrated book for each cent of its dollar and a half cost! And I had been repaid by her looks of gratitude. Then in my dream the once familiar sound of "Dr. Pierce's World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel" was heard from the healthy and attentive porters awaiting the arrival of patients. Then I was driven to the old place with its revivifications of architecture and comforts.

As I drove up I seemed to see the hotel in a blaze of light, and heard music and the sounds of happy voices and of lightly moving feet. More surprised than ever before I was taken in hand by a female attendant—as bright looking as those ever are in dreamland, and in a moment, as it seemed, was clad in full evening costume, and soon, escorted by an usher, was entering the great dining-room, transformed into a salon of reception. At one end in huge electric letters I saw the words, "Welcome, restored old patients,"—at the other end, "Dr. Pierce, the Hotel Founder,"—in the center of one long side, "Golden Medical Discovery," and along the ceiling, also in electric letters, "Purgative Pellets."

As soon as this wonderful spectacle of dreamland had become sufficiently naturalized to my dazed senses I looked around and saw such happy congratulatory groups as made me think I was indeed in a phase of Paradise. With words of whispered assurance, the usher led me to the highest portion of the room, where sat a Cleopatra-like woman of rare beauty and condescending carriage. "Permit me, oh, Queen of Health, to present to you another of your subjects—she who only a year ago was, without her will, excluded from, but has now re-entered, your dominions." She placed her cool hand in mine, the which as I kissed a thrill of new delight ran over my veins, and with a sceptre-headed with a charmingly cut bottle of silver bearing in monogram the letters "G. M. D.," she touched both my eyes which seemed to anew drink in the gorgeous sight around me. "And now," said the Queen of Health, "let me present you to my Prime Minister." Timed with her gesture to the right, I turned my eyes and there saw, in evening costume, a robust gentleman of medium stature, who was in physique the very ideal type of American manhood. He seemed the very embodiment of healthful vigorous vitality, and on his full lofty brow I saw great indications of comprehensive mental power, sweet benevolence, unvarying courtesy, tender sympathy, and business sagacity. He smiled and extended his hand. When I recognized him in the instant, and rushing impetuously towards him seemed in my dream to say, "Oh, Queen, this my preserver, my ever-to-be remembered physician, Dr. Pierce." He greeted me as warmly as I greeted him. At this the music struck up congratulatory chords in unison with the beating of my heart, and he whispered in my ear, "My best delight (and to it I have given my life, even at the sacrifice of a public career and promised honors) is to benefit those whom illness and disease afflict."

A fresh procession of guests arriving at the foot of the throne of the Queen of Health, and demanding her attention, as it seemed to me in my exhilarating dream, as well as the attention of her Prime Minister Pierce, I receded with my escort, and was soon mingling with the happy groups, the members of which seemed bent upon enthusiastically exchanging with each other memories of their happy experience under the advice, whether here or at their homes, of Dr. Pierce, through his books and through his medicines, now controlled by a syndicate of capitalists, under the title of the "World's Dispensary Medical Association." I was a sickly school girl," said one, "ignorant of the very rudiments of physiology, and a victim internally to my ignorance, but the 'Medical Adviser' recommended the 'Favorite Prescription' and it soon restored me to bellehood, and here I am, full of health and gratitude." Her escort was a Harvard student, who told me that a short time previous he had been worn by indiscreet alternations of Boston pleasure-seeking and Cambridge study, a very martyr to poisoned blood and dyspepsia, but "Medical Discovery," he joyously added, "not only made me what I am, but, by its constant use, keeps me what I am." As he moved away with the young lady, his affianced wife, I could not but regret the small numbers in good society of as handsome healthy young fellows as he. "I" remarked a plump matron in black velvet and diamonds, "had all the world could give me except health. We exhausted the baths of Europe and spent what to some would be a fortune on 'eminent' physicians of Paris, until I returned home to die. But chance—more chance, I am now ashamed to say—threw Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' in my way, and all my weariness vanished as the dew before the rising mid-summer sun. In two months I was a well woman." The powerful voice of a baritone, pressed into the service of a song—still in my dream—at one of the grand pauses of the invalids' hotel, aroused my wonder, and to the possessor of the voice was exciting my marvel by the narration of how he owed it, after a total destruction of voice by bronchitis, to an entire resuscitation of his throat through "Golden Discovery," which was now his constant companion. Gratefully adjusting to the opening quadrille

I saw a gentleman whom I was assured had not long ago been crippled with rheumatism beyond even the palliation of the Hot Springs of Arkansas, yet who, under "Golden Discovery," had seemed to renew his strength, like the fairness of the Psalmist's eagle. As I moved about from group to group, I heard but one strain told in many ways—and that how marvelously, in its one great mission of purifying the blood (which was the fountain of health or disease) the Golden Medical Discovery had come to their homes—in some instances after years of suffering and useless expenditures—to conquests, and to make the names of Dr. Pierce and the World's Dispensary Medical Association household words of cheer. Some had been cured by the Discovery of great eating ulcers, that had gnawed away at their flesh for years despite all the usual remedies. Others had been restored to the full vigor of health after one lung had been wasted by consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs), and after night-sweats, spitting of blood, and kindred symptoms, had manifested themselves. Various forms of scrofulous diseases, as fever-sores, white swellings, and hip-joint disease, had been conquered with the world-famed blood-purifier—Golden Medical Discovery.

Presently a bugle from the orchestra gave the summons to supper and all the guests began to pair. Little Nubian boys in scarlet uniforms (bright as everything bright is in dreamland) then glided in bearing little silken pennons, each expanding the words "Hope in G. M. D.," which they distributed in line of march, and which each guest joyfully bore aloft. Another bugle call for attention, and I saw two venerable, sweet-faced men of Greek features approaching the Queen of Health, holding in their hands two wreaths of evergreen—the veritable laurel from the Athenian groves. She stepped from her throne, as complaisant monarchs do, and raised them to her dais. Another bugle for silence and she spoke: "My guests, before we sup an interesting ceremony remains. He on my right is Hippocrates from the Spirit Land. He on my left is Æsculapius. They come to crown our Dr. Pierce with the great laurels of his noble profession—they the great Past Grand Masters of the Healing Art, who best know who is conqueror of disease." In a moment Dr. Pierce was about bending his knee in respectful obeisance to these ancient Professors when a gesture from both arrested him, as with dainty but dignified motions they placed upon his head the laurel leaves—each saying in a unison of musical monotone, "Thou art our legitimate successor," while a burst of orchestral acclaim and a chorus of thanks giving buzzaz from the guests arose. Immediately above this royal and supernaturally looking tableau I saw in pillars of rosy light these great words, the motto of the crowned Dr. Pierce, and which reveals the secret of his almost divine success, "THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

And with that I awoke, in my quaint little lodgings, to find (an unusual thing for London at early morning any day) cheery sunlight streaming into the room, as there upon my toilet table were my restored adjuncts to continued life and happiness—the Oxford street supply of Golden Medical Discovery, the guarantee of my continuing health.

Dear reader, although the foregoing is only the narration of a dream, yet it but truthfully reflects the marvelous cures wrought by those world-famed medicines that have, from their intrinsic merits, become standard remedies in all civilized countries for the commoner ills of mankind.

Resolved.

The Secretary of the Lime-Kiln Club announced an official communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture setting forth the fact that he had succeeded in making sorghum at a cost of only $1.62 cents a pound, and asking the Club to assist him in circulating the glorious news among the laboring men of the country.

Nelson Slabs thereupon offered the following resolution:

PATENTS—

LETTERS OF EXPLANATION

BY LIEUTENANT R. W. STUART.

They were brought about in this way. There had been a regatta on the Schuylkill, at Philadelphia. Mr. Charles Graydon, a resident, had been presented to Miss Thurlow, a visitor. They talked of boats and rivers, and thence drifted to the ocean and steamers.

Said Miss Thurlow: "Sometimes I fancy I should like to be a sailor—a real professional sailor, I mean. I'd like to command an ocean steamer, to cross and recross the Atlantic a half-dozen times a year."

Yes, Mr. Graydon had crossed the Atlantic several times, and generally enjoyed his trips abroad thoroughly. He had formed pleasant acquaintances on steamers, which developed afterward into close friendships. He had been deceived, too, by outward appearances.

"I remember several years ago," he said, "I was going over on the Cunard line. There was on board a young clergyman whom everyone liked. We became very friendly, and spent many a half hour walking the deck together. Just before we reached Queenstown he said to me, 'Graydon, I find myself a little embarrassed. I haven't as much money with me as I need. Would you lend me fifty dollars till we reach London? I'll pay you there. I hate to ask you, but I am really in need of it.' I naturally understood his delicacy, and so made light of the matter, replying merely, 'Certainly, Waldron, I am only too glad to be of service to you,' and I handed him the sum he asked for. We parted at Queenstown to meet in London; but, do you know, I have never heard from my young clergyman since. He wore his cloak very well."

A bright color was in Miss Thurlow's cheeks as she asked, "What did you say his name was?"

"He called himself Theodore Waldron, although I doubt whether that was his real name."

Miss Thurlow's brow contracted and her eyes flashed, but she said, calmly: "There must be some mistake. Surely a clergyman could not be guilty of such an act. Tell me, when did this happen?"

"In July, 1868. I have not been over since."

After leaving Miss Thurlow, Mr. Graydon wondered why it was that she grew so suddenly cool in her manner toward him. "She must be a clergyman's daughter," thought he, and the matter passed from his mind.

These are the letters that ensued. The first was received by Mr. Graydon some ten days after the regatta:

"CHICAGO, September 15, 1873.

"MR. CHARLES GRAYDON, Phila.:

"Sir:—My sister, Miss Thurlow, has related to me in detail her conversation with you in Philadelphia on the occasion of meeting you at a regatta. While I deplore her misfortune in having presented to her notice a man so unprincipled as you have shown yourself to be—a man who deserves no better name than blackguard when he attempts to cloud the unsullied reputation of another—I am forced so far to recognize you as to demand a retraction on your part of the gross calumny you have uttered. The Rev. Theodore Waldron is a life-long friend of mine and of my family. He is not at present in Chicago, but even if he were here I should not hesitate to take this matter into my own hands. You cannot fail to understand that I expect you to retract and apologize.

FRANK THURLOW."

"PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 19, 1873.

"MR. FRANK THURLOW, Chicago, Ill.:

"Sir—Your very extraordinary letter of the 15th inst. has been received. I am not quite clear upon the subject, but fancy you must have written it from a mad-house. You demand an apology, a retraction—I don't quite know what. I am in the dark. Do I understand that you expect me to confess to lying—that you expect me to say that what I said of Mr. Waldron is not true? Why, sir, the more I think of it the more am I irritated. It is you that have insulted me. It is you that will apologize. I have spoken nothing but the truth; and as regards Mr. Waldron, your life-long friend (and associate, I presume), I reiterate that he borrowed money from me under false pretenses, and I add now that he deserves to be branded publicly, although in justice to myself I must say that the mention of his name was quite accidental and unintentional on my part. Miss Thurlow drew from me his name in full, and thus identified him. When you have taken time to reflect you will recognise your hastiness, and no doubt tender me your full and ready apology.

"CHARLES GRAYDON."

"CHICAGO, September 25, 1873.

"MR. CHARLES GRAYDON, Phila.:

"I hardly know what to say to you, sir. On my return to this city yesterday Mr. Thurlow laid your letter before me, and also a copy of the one he had previously written to you. Moreover, a full statement of your malicious and cowardly attack has been given me. Your motive for such action is beyond all conjecture.

"Our acquaintance was but a limited one in point of time; still in our constant intercourse and mutual confidence during those few days on board ship, I felt that you were a gentleman. My life has not been one to give me the experience and judgment necessary to combat with a man so wily and unscrupulous as you seem to be, and yet it is strange that a man can be refined and gentle in manner and a scoundrel at heart. Why did you lend me the money at all? Did you even then intend to injure me, and look to the fact as a future weapon with which to strike me? How could you have known that I was about to marry Miss Thurlow? What have I ever done that you should wish to come between us now? I can only look upon this dastardly act as something beyond my comprehension.

"Fortunately, I remember the exact date of depositing the money to your credit at Mann Brothers'. I was detained in Raleigh, and on my arrival in London was unable to find you. I therefore did all I could when I paid the sum at the bank where you manifested having a letter of credit.

"I have written to Mann Brothers, and by return steamer shall possess a receipt showing that on August 4, 1868, the money was paid to your account. I have now merely to say that your scheme has utterly failed, and that I leave you to the contemplation of yourself.

THEODORE WALDRON."

Mr. Graydon read this letter, turned to his diary, and found that on August 3, 1868, he had drawn his balance at Mann Brothers', and left London. He rushed out, and a half-hour afterward this cable dispatch was flashing under the Atlantic:

"MANN BROTHERS, London:

"Have I a balance at your bank? If so, how much, and when was it deposited? CHARLES GRAYDON."

The next day he received this:

"CHARLES GRAYDON, Philadelphia:

"A balance to your credit of ten pounds six shillings. Deposited August 4, 1868.

MANN BROTHERS."

The last letter;

"PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 29, 1873

"REV. THEODORE WALDRON,
Chicago, Illinois:

"MY DEAR SIR:—With feelings of deep shame and bitter regret I offer you an apology. Since receiving your letter I have telegraphed to Mann Brothers, and have learned by their reply that your statement is absolutely correct. It is perhaps useless for me to say more. Yet, feeling that I have never had a desire to injure you in any way, that I have never harbored a wish to annoy you even, I may be allowed to state that I left London on August 3, 1868, on which date I drew from the banking house of Mann Brothers all the money due me. I wish also to assure you that although I have often related the incident of our brief acquaintance, I never before mentioned your name. My inadvertence on this occasion would have probably passed unnoticed under any other circumstances. For this unfortunate affair I am more than sorry: I am humiliated. I beg that you will convey to Miss Thurlow a separate apology for having so unconsciously wounded her.

"Yours very contritely,

"CHARLES GRAYDON."

Among the presents displayed at the wedding of the Rev. Theodore Waldron and Miss Thurlow, was one which attracted no little attention—an ingenious Swiss clock, so constructed that, on striking, a figure representing Charity stepped forth and drew a veil over the hour that had passed. On a card lying near it was written, "With the best wishes of Mr. Charles Graydon."

When He Went Aleft.

"When I was a lad, my greatest desire was to go to sea," remarked a well known citizen to a reporter the other day. "My father was a farmer, but tilling the soil had no charms for me. I was discontented, and one day my father, thinking it was the best way to cure me, gave his consent to my becoming a sailor. I was never so happy in my life, and all the boys in the neighborhood envied me. Before a fortnight passed I envied them.

"That was in the days of merchantmen, and my father was acquainted with a merchant in New York who engaged in the China trade, and to him he gave me a line asking him to put me on one of his vessels. The captain was a bluff, hearty old fellow, the very beau ideal of a sea captain—when on shore I was very much pleased with his appearance, but subsequently he didn't look half so pretty to me. He was a thorough sailor, though. I never saw the night that he didn't come on deck two or three times to see that all was as it should be.

"I felt a little bit homesick as a little tug took us down the bay, but I forgot all about it when we got outside and commenced making sail. There were three of us boys on board, and we stood huddled together on the lower deck watching the sailors as they ran out the spars and let fall the sails, and we fell to wondering how long it would be before we would be required to go aloft and lay out on a yard. One of us thought it would be a month or two and another thought it would be six months. Finally we concluded that we would be worked into it gradually; sent up a little way one day, a little further the next, and so on until we could go all over the rigging. You can imagine my surprise, therefore, when, after all the ropes had been coiled up, the deck cleared and everything made ship shape, the captain turned to me and said:

"'Here, youngster, do you see that rope a-flying up there? Go up and bring it down.'

"It was a bit of marline, about three feet long, flying from the topmast cross-trees, and I suppose some sailor had put it there on purpose. Gracious! the thought of going way up there made my hair stand on end, and I told the captain I was afraid I couldn't do it.

"'You are, eh! Well, I can take all that out of you!' and he started for a rope's end.

"I didn't wait for him to get it, but ran up the rigging as well as I was able, never expecting to get back alive. There was quite a heavy sea, and the mast swayed frightfully. If I could have been put back on the farm at that moment, no one would ever have heard me say another word about going to sea."

"Did you get the marline?"

"You bet I did. And wa'n't I proud when I handed it to the captain! And didn't I put on airs over the other boys: I'd been aloft and they hadn't."

MUTTON.—A London scientific paper says that a shoulder of mutton contains one-third more bone than a leg, and considerably more fat and connective tissue; and that, consequently, a shoulder at 10 cents a pound is dearer than a leg at 20 cents.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MR. PARNELL'S movements have been always wrapped in much mystery. He speaks in Ireland, and there are not more than half a dozen to whom his London residence is known. His sudden disappearance from the scene in the midst of more than one great crisis occasioned some reflection, and for some while preceding his recent triumphant appearance in Dublin his Cork constituents could not hear from him or ascertain his whereabouts.

IT HAS BEEN SAID that because cattle sometimes prefer impure water to pure drinking water, no pains should be taken to supply them with pure water. The British Medical Journal explains to agriculturists that the reason for this fact is that cattle when given tank water are not properly supplied with rock salt. In their desire for saline food animals will drink the most impure fluids, and will even eat earth. The writer thinks it both injudicious and cruel to deprive cattle of salt, and thus compel them to eat it in refuse.

AT LEEDS, LATELY, MR. ARTHUR NICHOLS delivered a lecture on "Snakes and Snake Charming," in which he gave an instance of the appearance of the sea serpent which occurred in his own experience. It turned out to be the body of a dead whale around which were collected thousands of gulls and albatrosses, and which simulated the shape and form of a monster with a mane and long tail. It is a pity that every master of a vessel from which the sea serpent is seen has not courage enough to steer close to it, so that its real nature may be made evident.

THE SECRETARY OF ONE Western Board of Trade has mastered the alphabet of business. "It may be true," he writes in substance, "that we have produced 100,000,000 bushels less than an average wheat crop, and that Europe has produced 150,000,000 bushels less than an average crop of wheat and rye," but the trading public, after losing two cents a bushel per month for six months on the strength of these stories, is getting tired of believing them. It occurs to him that enormous accumulations of grain, here and abroad, tell a different story. So did the statistics, to those who did not prefer to believe the stories of manipulators.

SACRIFICED TO THE FISHERIES.—Seventeen vessels and 209 lives were lost in the Gloucester fisheries during the past year. Forty of the men are known to have left widows and a number of children, of whom there is a record of 68. Seventy-one men who were capsized or went astray in dories reached the shore, or were rescued by passing vessels, many of them after great exposure and suffering. A summarized list gives the following figures: Total tonnage of the 17 vessels, 1,120; value, $91,300; insurance, $76,972. In 1882 12 vessels, valued at $79,700, and 115 lives were lost. The total losses in the New England fisheries, outside of Gloucester, principally in Maine, were 12 vessels, of 650 tons, and 17 lives.

SHORTLY AFTER MISS ALCOTT'S "Little Women" was published a quiet-looking lady entered a Boston circulating library and asked the lady clerk to pick her out "a good book that would rest and amuse her." Naturally "Little Women" was offered; and declined. "It's very nice; you'd like it," urged the clerk. "I should not care to read it," said the other. "But at least look at it." "No," came the answer, firmly, and with an odd smile; "it is not a book that I should care to read." Then the clerk, pretty angry, walked away to the chief librarian and cried: "There's a woman down there wants a book, and if you want her waited on some one else must do it, I won't." "Why, why not?" "Why, she says 'Little Women' isn't good enough for her to read." "Do you know who that lady is?" "No, and I don't care." "Well, I'll tell you. That is Louisa M. Alcott. Now go and get her a book."

THE IMPORTANT MATTER of irrigation is receiving much attention in Colorado. Until recent years little was done in this regard beyond the digging of ditches or flumes a few rods in length. In the last few years, according to the Denver Tribune, companies with large capital have been organized, with the object of bringing under cultivation the thousands of acres of land, otherwise arid, but which with proper irrigation prove as arable and fertile as the most favored farming sections in the rich West. This new industry of irrigation not only provides labor for hundreds of men and teams, but adds to the wealth of Colorado by increasing the acreage of arable lands and swelling the aggregate volume of natural products, notably cereals, fruit and vegetables. Two blades of grass are made to grow where one grew before, and Colorado, from being dependent for home consumption upon natural products imported from other States, is fast becoming a source of supply for Eastern markets.

A Mexican Hurricane.

A hurricane occurred on the Mexican coast on November 4, which entirely destroyed the town of Altata, at the port of that name. Not a house remained standing, and vessels and launches at anchor suffered severely. At Mazatlan the wind blew with great violence, and the sea was excessively rough. When the gale commenced the Mexican steamer Democrata and barks Carlos Paladin and Harmodius were at anchor. The Paladin cut away her anchors, losing her first mate in the operation, as he was washed overboard and drowned. She then commenced to drift, and finally, after striking on the rocks in front of Olas Altas, drifted on the beach at Puerto Viejo, near the Camaron. Her crew succeeded in reaching the shore, with the exception of two, who were drowned. The Harmodius cast down her upper masts and yards, and rode the gale out in safety.

THE EDITOR'S CORRESPONDENCE.

A Wee Happy Visit by a Western Editor.

[From Puck's Sun.]

To-day a letter came from the business office to the editorial desk, and when the editor opened it and saw the date-line "Troy, Alabama," his heart smote him, and he reached for his check-book, instinctively. Then he stopped and read the letter, and breathed freer when he found that it was only a letter from a boy who wanted the editor's autograph. What could have caused the editor's heart to jump up into his mouth when he opened that letter from Troy? What made him reach for his check-book? Reader, young reader particularly, the editor once stole a horse at Troy, Alabama. Do not hold up your hands in horror, at the deed, and say you have always mistrusted that the bald-headed man, with the pleasant face, was a horse thief in disguise, for you have never thought any such thing. Besides, a man was not considered a horse thief in those days who took another man's horse. It was in 1864, and a cavalry regiment to which the editor belonged made a raid through that portion of Alabama, and one afternoon stopped at the beautiful little village of Troy. There was a thin, pale, nervous, red-headed soldier in the regiment who had been riding a hard-hearted, deceptive, diabolical, disgusting mule for a week, a mule that didn't care whether school kept or not, a mule that would not keep up with the procession, and tried hard to lag behind so the rebels would capture the red-headed soldier. To keep up with the regiment it was necessary to wear out a pair of spurs, a clapboard, two fence rails and the rider, every blessed day, on the mule, and much of the hatred of mules which the present editor has was born of that experience. That evening the soldier gave of his rations to a little colored boy who looked smart, and told him to always be a good boy, and learn to read, and be kind to his old master, and he would be all right, when the colored boy told where there was a fine horse in a pasture a few miles away, a "turrer bred" he said. There is no person except one who has ridden a mule a week who can appreciate a story about a fine horse belonging to the enemy. The mule was saddled, and soon the soldier and the colored boy, and another soldier and another colored boy, were trying to catch that horse. O, he was a beauty. As he galloped across the pasture and neighed and snorted and put on scallops he looked like a picture.

It was not long before the red-headed soldier's saddle was on the fine horse and the procession rode up by the planter's house. Ah, there was the rub. The old mother and father of the boy who owned the fine horse, who was in the confederate army, sat on the veranda. They had seen the soldiers go through the granary, the smoke house, and everything where they could get anything to eat, and the old people had not murmured. They sat there smoking corn-cob pipes, acting as though in war times they must submit to war measures. But when the red-headed soldier rode by on the beautiful horse, his canteen and sabre rattling, and the horse looking so proud, as though he had been left out of the war, and was now going in fresh to put a stop to it, the old folks saw the animal, the old lady said, "Oh, pa, the Yankees have found Bub's horse," and then they both burst out crying. "Bub," the brave young confederate, was away with his regiment, and poor old pa and ma had to sit there and see his horse go off with the Yankees. The slim soldier had a heart concealed about his person even then, and he thought of his old father and mother in Wisconsin, and he had half a mind to take the horse back, notwithstanding the fact that another soldier would take him in a holy minute, but just then the bugle sounded for the "assembly," the soldiers yelled and spurred their horses toward camp, and the new horse began to prance and wanted to go along so bad, that the slim soldier "let him went," and a beautiful race it was. For nearly two years after that horse was the constant companion of the slim soldier, who rode him about ten thousand miles more or less, but there was hardly a day of all those long marches that he did not think of the poor old father and mother of the soldier boy who owned the horse, and of their tears when they saw the noble animal go down the lane carrying a Yankee, when they would have been so delighted to have seen their own gray-coated soldier on his back. And so it was, when we opened the letter from the boy who wanted our autograph, who was probably unborn when the horse was taken, we came so near putting the autograph on a check and sending it to the old people who smoked the cob pipes nineteen years ago and wept over the horse.

A Novel Plot.

Philadelphia furnishes a capital plot for a novelist. A lady named Hardy married James Black, a wealthy tradesman. In her own right she inherited considerable property, which involved her in a long and tedious lawsuit. She entered into a written contract with Joseph F. Farrar, an insurance agent to give him a large share of the estate if he would collect the necessary evidence and establish her identity. This agreement was lodged with a lawyer for safe keeping. The case was a long time in the courts, and a decision in Mrs. Black's favor was finally reached only a short time since. Meantime Mr. Farrar had died. He had for years been estranged from his wife and all trace of his only heir, a daughter, named Frances Josephine, was missing. Under a provision in the father's will and at the desire of Mrs. Black, the lawyer with whom the agreement was placed entered upon an active search for the child, and after much difficulty succeeded last week in finding her.

A LIVE AMERICAN GIRL ABROAD.

A Marvelous Rescue.

Last summer, I was "doing London" as thoroughly as an American woman without means can, when one morning, after gazing at the profane glimpses of what remains of the "old Bailey," immortalized by Hogarth or Douglas Jerrold, and of the "Seven Dials," I turned into New Oxford street (which is cut by Dickens's coach road and seats at Mudie's Library). Walking along towards Holborn I found myself involuntarily stopping before one of the prettiest fronts I had yet seen. Naturally I looked up and saw above the number 3 an esthetic-looking sign against the frost (for projecting signs are inadmissible in the great metropolis), on which I read "Dr. Pierce's Medicines." At once I gave a little ejaculation of joy, and fairly rushed into the shop. Why! I had been during two whole days suffering the awkwardness of a railway porter, who, in my transit from Southampton, after landing, had so clumsily handled my "box" (trunk is also inadmissible in England) as to break not only my supply of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, that I had brought from New York, but all of his Purgative Pellets (so advisable in indies in traveling) excepting a bottle I had in my reticule. The clerk appeared to notice my satisfaction as I looked around and saw a portrait of Dr. Pierce, whose acquaintance I had first made at a ball in the White House, when he was Congressman from the fine city of Buffalo, and saw pictures of its World's Dispensary building and of its Invalids' Hotel, in which I had been a guest patient (as well, let me add, as a patient guest) during a course of treatment with World's Dispensary medicines, which had changed me from a nervous, dyspeptic, fretful woman into the cheerful and healthful traveler I now found myself to be. The clerk was vastly polite as I told him what a surprise it was to me to find that the boons of my life time had found a home in London. "Why," he interrupted, with a smile, "the medicines at which this is the European entrepot have won thousands of grateful patients as enthusiastic as you seem to be." Of course, in a short time the mishap with the railway porter was forgotten, and, after giving an order for a new assortment of the "Golden Discovery" and "Pellets" sent to my lodgings in Bernal street, I was again threading my way through the London crowds. Fatigued with the day's exercise and enjoyment I retired early to bed, and with the pleasant incident of Oxford street well to the fore in my mind as I fell asleep. What wonder that I dreamed, or that my fancies traveled across the Atlantic to Buffalo and to the Invalids' Hotel, which had to me the same grateful memories as the church of her marriage has to the happy wife.

I seemed to be in a palace car between Albany and Buffalo, and the newsboy had brought me a copy of the marvelous book sold freely on all the trains, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by Dr. Pierce, ex-Senator and ex-Congressman. I was again reading its pages, expressed, as all medical books for the people should be expressed, in "plain English," and which is full of everything relating to the ills which flesh is heir to, so that the book may be well called the Invalids' Bible and the Testament for the already strong, who would keep themselves always strong. The book, which takes the child in the cradle through all the ills of nutrition and dentition; the mother in her agonies; the husband in his depressions; the father in his sufferings from overwork; and shows each and all (and even the practicing physician, who thinks he knows so much and yet has always new things to learn) how the brain is weakened in functions, the lung poisoned, the blood contaminated, the liver made torpid, the heart disarranged, the muscles made rigid, the nerves shattered, and the tissues and absorbents infected with the subtle poisons of excesses and malaria. And finally, the precious volume—the veriest gospel of health in this world—turns the reader's attention to the Golden Medical Discovery, that, whether it is used upon the pores of the body or sent into the channels of the body through the processes of assimilation and digestion, immediately "cools the brow and tempers the brain, and maketh the faint one strong again." In my dream I had arrived at Buffalo, given my book to an interesting invalid of a girl who sat near me, and whose modestly filled purse seemed to forbid her the boon of the book albeit it was so unusually cheap—six pages of the profusely illustrated book for each cent of its dollar and a half cost! And I had been repaid by her looks of gratitude. Then in my dream the once familiar sound of "Dr. Pierce's World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel" was heard from the healthy and attentive porters awaiting the arrival of patients. Then I was driven to the old place with its revivifications of architecture and comforts.

As I drove up I seemed to see the hotel in a blaze of light, and heard music and the sounds of happy voices and of lightly moving feet. More surprised than ever before I was taken in hand by a female attendant—as bright-looking as these ever are in dreamland, and in a moment, as it seemed, was clad in full evening costume, and soon, escorted by an usher, was entering the great dining-room, transformed into a salon of reception. At one end in huge electric letters I saw the words, "Welcome, restored old patients,"—at the other end, "Dr. Pierce, the Hotel Founder,"—in the center of one long side, "Golden Medical Discovery," and along the ceiling, also in electric letters, "Purgative Pellets."

As soon as this wonderful spectacle of dreamland had become sufficiently naturalized to my dazed senses I looked around and saw such happy congratulatory groups as made me think I was indeed in a phase of Paradise. With words of whispered assurance, the usher led me to the highest portion of the room, where sat a Cleopatra-like woman of rare beauty and condescending carriage. "Permit me, oh, Queen of Health, to present to you another of your subjects—she who only a year ago was, without her will, excluded from, but has now re-entered, your dominions." She rose from her cool hand in mine, the which as I kissed a thrill of new delight ran over my veins, and with a sceptre-headed with a charmingly cut bottle of silver bearing in monogram the letters "G. M. D.," she touched both my eyes which seemed to anew drink in the gorgeous sight around me. "And now," said the Queen of Health, "let me present you to my Prime Minister." Timed with her gesture to the right, I turned my eyes and there saw, in evening costume, a robust gentleman of medium stature, who was in physique the very ideal type of American manhood. He seemed the very embodiment of healthful vigorous vitality, and on his full lofty brow I saw great indications of comprehensive mental power, sweet benevolence, unvarying courtesy, tender sympathy, and business sagacity. He smiled and extended his hand. When I recognized him in the instant, and rushing impetuously towards him seemed in my dream to say, "Oh, Queen, this my preserver, my ever-to-be-remembered physician, Dr. Pierce." He greeted me as warmly as I greeted him. At this the music struck up congratulatory chords in unison with the beating of my heart, and he whispered in my ear, "My best delight (and to it I have given my life, even at the sacrifice of a public career and promised honors) is to benefit those whom illness and disease afflict."

A fresh procession of guests arriving at the foot of the throne of the Queen of Health, and demanding her attention, as it seemed to me in my exhilarating dream, as well as the attention of her Prime Minister Pierce, I receded with my escort, and was soon mingling with the happy groups, the members of which seemed bent upon enthusiastically exchanging with each other memories of their happy experience under the advice, whether here or at their homes, of Dr. Pierce, through his books and through his medicines, now controlled by a syndicate of capitalists, under the title of the "World's Dispensary Medical Association." "I was a sickly school girl," said one, "ignorant of the very rudiments of physiology, and a victim internally to my ignorance, but the 'Med cal Adviser' recommended the 'Favorite Prescription' and it soon restored me to bellehood, and here I am, full of health and gratitude." Her escort was a Harvard student, who told me that a short time previous he had been worn by indiscreet alternations of Boston pleasure-seeking and Cambridge study, a very martyr to poisoned blood and dyspepsia, but "Medical Discovery," he joyously added, "not only made me what I am, but, by its constant use, keeps me what I am." As he moved away with the young lady, his affianced wife, I could not but regret the small numbers in good society of as handsome healthy young fellows as he, "I" promised a pining maiden, whose wrist had diamonds, "had all the world could give me except health. We exhausted the baths of Europe and spent what to some would be a fortune on 'eminent' physicians of Paris, until I returned home to die. But chance—mere chance, I am now ashamed to say—threw Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' in my way, and all my worthlessness vanished as the dew before the rising mid-summer sun. In two months I was a well woman." The powerful voice of a bass-tone, pressed into the service of a cough—that is my dream—set one of the grand pianos of the Invalids' Hotel, aroused up windows, and even the passers-by of the voice was entering our magical by the narration of how he awoke, after a total destruction of voice by bronchitis, to an entire restoration of it as a result through "Golden Discovery," which was now his constant companion. Gratefully adhering to the opening quotation from Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, I saw a gentleman whom I was convinced had not long ago been crippled with rheumatism beyond even the palliation of the Hot Springs of Arkansas, yet who, under "Golden Discovery," had escaped to recover his strength, like the fevered of the Psalmist's song. As I myself shook from group to group, I heard but one strain told in many ways—and then how marvelously, in its one great mission of purifying the blood (which was the fountain of health or disease) the Golden Medical Discovery had come to their homes—in some instances after years of suffering and useless expenditures—to invigorate, and to imbue the names of Dr. Pierce and the World's Dispensary Medical Association household words of cheer. Some had been cured by the Discovery of great eating ulcers, that had gnawed away at their flesh for years despite all the usual remedies. Others had been restored to the full vigor of health after one lung had been wasted by consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs), and after night-sweats, spitting of blood, and kindred symptoms, had manifested themselves. Various forms of scrofulous diseases, as fever-sores, white swellings, and hip-joint disease, had been conquered with the world-trimed blood-purifier—Golden Medical Discovery.

Presently a bugle from the orchestra gave the summons to supper and all the guests began to pair. Little Nubian boys in scarlet uniforms (bright as everything bright is in dreamland) then glided in bearing little silken pennons, each expanding the words "Hope in G. M. D.," which they distributed in line of march, and which each guest joyfully bore aloft. Another bugle call for attention, and I saw two venerable, sweet faced men of Grecian features approaching the Queen of Health, holding in their hands two wreaths of evergreen—the veritable laurel from the Athenian groves. She stepped from her throne, as complaisant monarchs do, and raised them to her dais. Another bugle for silence and she spoke: "My guests, before we sup an interesting ceremony remains. He on my right is Hippocrates from the Spirit Land. He on my left is Æsculapius. They come to crown our Dr. Pierce with the great laurels of his noble profession—they the great Past Grand Masters of the Healing Art, who best know who is conqueror of disease." In a moment Dr. Pierce was about bending his knee in respectful obeisance to these ancient Professors when a gesture from both arrested him, as with dainty but dignified motions they placed upon his head the laurel leaves—each saying in a unison of musical monotone, "Thou art our legitimate successor," while a burst of orchestral acclaim and a chorus of thanks diving buzzas from the guests arose. I mused widely above this royal and supernaturally looking tableau I saw in pillars of rosy light these great words, the motto of the crowned Dr. Pierce, and which reveals the secret of his almost divine success, "THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

And with that I awoke, in my quaint little lodgings, to find (an unusual thing for London at early morning any day) cheery sunlight streaming into the room, as there upon my toilet table were my restored adjuncts to continued life and happiness—the Oxford street supply of Golden Medical Discovery, the guarantee of my continued health.

Dear reader, although the foregoing is only the narration of a dream, yet it but truthfully reflects the marvelous cures wrought by those world-famed medicines that have, from their intrinsic merits, become standard remedies in all civilized countries for the commonor ills of mankind.

The Secretary of the Lime-Kiln Club announced an official communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture setting forth the fact that he had succeeded in making sorghum at a cost of only $1.62 cents a pound, and asking the Club to assist him in circulating the glorious news among the laboring men of the country.

Nelson Slabs thereupon offered the following resolution:

HURRAH FOR THE MAN WHO PAYS!

There are men of brains who count their gains
By the million dollars or more;
They buy and sell, and really do well
On the money of the poor.
They manage to get quite deep in debt
By various crooked ways;
And so we say that the man to-day
Is the honest man who pays.

When in the town he never sneaks down
Some alley or way-back street;
With head erect he will never deflect,
But boldly each man meet.
He counts the cost before he is lost
In debt's mysterious maze,
And he never lays in manner unwise
But calls for his bill, and pays.

There's a certain air of debonair
In the man who buys for cash;
He is not afraid of being betrayed
By a jack-leg shyster's dash.
What he says to you he will certainly do,
If it's cash or thirty days;
And when he goes out the clerks will shout
Hurrah for the man who pays!

A Lucky Hit.

Hiram Veasie was a plain, good-hearted, honest farmer's boy, whose parents lived on the farm where his grandfather was born, not half a dozen miles from Augusta, Me. With a good common school education, and a natural aptitude, Hiram was considered at the age of twenty to be a very promising young man, and was certainly of great service to his father upon the farm. Old Mr. Veasie was comfortably situated as to pecuniary means; first, because his wants were few, and secondly, because his land very nearly supplied them all. But when Hiram asked his father to advance him some small amount with which to commence business, the good old man frankly acknowledged his inability, and rather wondered that his son could not content himself on the farm, as his father and grandfather had done before him.

The truth was, that Hiram had from boyhood, and during all his school hours, been the intimate friend and companion of pretty Lucy White, the squire's daughter, and this childish friendship had ripened with years into love. Lucy's father understood the position of affairs perfectly between the young people, but never interfered, until one day when Hiram took the old gentleman one side, and asked him for Lucy as his wife. Old Squire White, as he was universally called, replied kindly, but firmly, that Hiram must first acquire some trade, and means enough to support Lucy, before he could give his consent to such an arrangement. The future looked blank to Hiram, therefore, for he was but a poor farmer's boy.

Lucy was a gentle and lovely girl of 19, as intelligent as she was pretty; she loved Hiram sincerely, but she was too sensible to sit down with him and pine over the situation of affairs. She was a practical Yankee girl, and her advice to Hiram was sound and loving.

"Go," she said, "to Boston or New York. You are active, good-looking, intelligent and industrious—the very characteristics that command place, I should say, in a large city, and see if you do not find the means of earning such wages as shall help you to lay by something. I, too, will be industrious, in the meantime, and what little I can save shall go to make up the necessary sum for the purchase of a snug little home for us."

Hiram kissed his sweet little schoolmate, and promising her that she would never for one hour be out of his mind, soon gathered a small sum of money together, and with a kind farewell and the blessing of his old father and mother, he took the cars for Boston. It was his first visit to a large city, and at the outset he was almost bewildered; but, seeking economical lodgings, he began at once to look about himself for employment. This he found it hard to obtain, but he was daily growing more and more conversant with city life and ways, and he wrote every few days to Lucy a digest of his observations and fortunes. A fortnight or three weeks in Boston made fearful inroads into his slender purse, and at the suggestion of some new acquaintance he determined to go to New York.

Here he passed nearly two weeks with various adventures, but without finding an hour of paying occupation. He wandered everywhere, observing and searching real places, inquiring freely of all, until, at the end of the third week, he had but a single dollar left in his pocket, and it for the first time nearly disheartened. In this mood he strolled through one of the uptown cross streets above Union Park, and found his attention attracted by the operations of a [illegible] sawmill, which he entered and quietly watched the business of. He saw a small but efficient engine driving four saws fed by four men, while there stood at a desk hard by one, evidently the manager of the establishment.

Hiram felt a strong interest in what he saw there were large piles of assorted lumber in the building, in article he was familiar with from childhood, and he ventured to [illegible] to what purpose the wood was put, and saw a couple of hands for a further part of the shop engaged in dovetailing the pieces together, and fashioning the timber into boxes of various sizes. He examined so much time, and was so minute in his observations, that they were actually more valuable, as the thickness was ample for all purposes of strength, and the weight was reduced one-half. He was also the gent, and that was to part with Lucy, "who would now go away to live in York State."

But all this was so, and Lucy and Hiram were married, and their friends declared that Heaven made the match, and worked a miracle for Hiram Veasie, who was so good, and industrious and generous-spirited. But these are not the days of miracles, and the reader knows very well that it was all brought about by the most natural agencies.

Three years only have passed since Hiram was married, as we have related in this veritable story, and on the Bloomingdale road, not a long walk from the large factory of Hurd & Veazie live Hiram and his lovely companion. The large and pleasant house in which they reside, is his own, and a handsome surplus besides. Each annual Christmas they return to their childhood's home, and Lucy thinks the journey is healthy for little Hiram.

THE LEPER GIRL.

The Experience of a Honolulu Maiden Banished from Her Lover.

A Honolulu letter to the Chicago News says: "Among the last to come on shore was a half-white girl, whose history I promised in the first paper. She was the child of a native woman, whose father was a chief of Kauia, by the owner and master of a Yankee whaling barque. When the whaling skipper, becoming rich, retired from business and settled in the islands at Hilo, he brought his native wife to the home he had made, and set to work to make a Christian of her; you may readily fancy that his methods were crude, like his orthodoxy, and he indulged in rum and spiritual lessons in unequal proportions, punctuating his teachings in one and his indulgence in the other with wife-beatings to such an extent that the simple-minded woman thought it well to die. This she did, and a jury, who were considering the responsible share that the captain had in her demise, found themselves deprived of any painful duty by the suicide of the captain by the sailor-like method of a rope. The girl lived for a time under the charge of a Presbyterian missionary, and became a teacher in the school. She was, and is yet, a beautiful creature, and a young English engineer, engaged at one of the big sugar plantations, fell in love with her. He was a fine young fellow, and the match was approved by all who had the interests of the two at heart, when one day there appeared on the face of the girl a blazing red spot, which spread from the cheek to the ear, and then developed into tubercules over the neck—and they said she was a leper. This happened in June. The girl declared she was not, but the inexorable law forced her away to Honolulu. Meanwhile she declared she was not afflicted, and insisted on having her lover believe she was temporarily in Honolulu visiting and making some purchases, and so on, preparatory to the wedding set for October. But there came a time when she could no longer deceive herself and no one would undeceive him. One day he came to Honolulu on business. It was the day appointed for the sailing of the lepers, and her case rapidly advancing, she, with the rest, was being led to the steamer when her lover saw her. One wild scream from her, and he had dashed at the guards in a vain effort to rescue her. In a few minutes he is dragged away by the police, and she, in a fainting condition, is carried to the vessel. All night this girl lay upon her breast sobbing, and now, looking as wild as night, she springs ashore and casts a look around. Then she sees the priest standing there, and falling at his feet clasps his knees and cries for help.

"You are good," she says. "I love him so. He is in prison. I shan't see him again. Let him come to me. He will come. We love each other. I have given him everything, but he does not love me less because I am a leper."

But the priest strove only to raise her. Then she called out: "Oh, God! if this be indeed Thy priest, show me that Thou art kind and move his heart."

I turned away, but I saw the old priest's cheeks were wet with tears, and that he held in his arms the fainting girl, [illegible] grief was not alone in her leprosy.

A Fish Story.

The latest fish story comes from Louisiana. A gentleman traveling was overtaken by a storm and suddenly almost felled to the ground by a catfish that struck him on the head. In a moment he was literally pelted with fishes, so that his horse ran away, and he was in great danger. Several thousand of the fishes were ruined down in this way, and it was finally discovered that a whirlwind had scooped them up, carried them off and buried them again upon the ground.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM PARADISE HALL.

The President Gives Good Advice—Brother Gardner's Modesty.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

After the stove-pipe had been knocked down by the efforts of Giveadam Jones to rest both his feet on the hearth at once and Judge Cadaver, Pickles Smith and Blossom Johnson had heroically restored it to place Brother Gardner arose and said:

"One great cause of human misery am de fack that mankind expects too much of Providence. Take de case ob Elder Toots, fur instance. Fur de last sixty y'ars he has been waitin' fur Providence to stop the leaks in his cabin roof an' he am waitin' yit. He somehow expects dat Providence am going to furnish him pie an' cake an, oyster soup, an' when he sots down to cold 'taters an tuff meat he feels as if he had been wronged.

"Take de case of Bradawl Jalap. He has allus had de idea dat he would some day be rich, an' as a consekkence he sots on de fence an' plans new houses, an' drives fast hosses, an' w'ars good clothes while his wife goes ragged, and his children have cold toes. What he might airn by honest labor he won't airn, bekase he hopes to git a fortune widout work.

"I tell you, my frens, de man who waits fur to-morrer to sharpen his sx, am sartin to do poor choppin'. De man who sots on de fence to wait fur a legacy will h'ar his wife scrapin' de bottom ob de flour barrel ebery day in de week. De man who lets himself believe dat de world owes him a libin' am gwine to eat some mighty poo' fodder afore he dies. De world doan' owe nobody nuffin. We am put heah to sot an' starve or git up 'n' dust. Providence won't pay house rent, buy our 'taters or keep de cook-stove hot. Let us now purceed to bizness."

Sir Isaac Walpole desired to state before passing the bean-box that he started out in life with the feeling that he would find a lost wallet containing $20,000. The idea lasted him until he was obliged to wear a suit made of coffee-sacking, and until he was reduced in flesh from 167 to ninety-eight pounds. He then kicked himself all over the back yard nd went to work.

TOO KIND.

The reading of the following communication from Kalamazoo, Mich., created the utmost confusion:

"BROTHER GARDNER, Lime-Kiln Club:

"We, the undersigned, members of the Ebony Club, do most respectfully request that you will give your sanction to the erection of a statue of yourself, as a companion to the Bartholdi statue, the statue to be of carved hickory, resting on a pedestal of Portland cement, the statue to be lighted at the top with coon's oil, pumped up by a windmill. The height of the statue, including pedestal, to be 720 feet two and one-quarter inches, with an inscription carved in cast iron at the base large enough to be seen ten miles reading: 'Wisdom Giving Light to the World.' We suggest that the subscriptions to the statue be limited to a half cent for each person, thus giving colored people all a chance to aid this splendid work of art.

"Bildad Boodle, Purloin Fowl, Midnight Black, Inky Pitch, Vulcan Cane, Harrison Scraggs, Jordan Batts, Opaque Cole, Darkness Spades, Worldly Bales, Liberia Case, Ivory Wilks. And 279 others."

For two or three minutes the uproar was so great that pedestrians on the street below halted in terror, and one excited individual tore a letter-box off a lamp-post in his frantic efforts to sound a fire alarm. When the President had finally commanded silence it could be seen that he was considerably overcome, and there was a trembling in his voice as he said:

"Gem'len, to say dat I feel flattered an' proud an' dizzy am not saying half 'nuff, but I hope de ideah of sich a statue will go no furder. All I want am to lib quietly an' softly, an' to die widout stoppin' de City Hall clock or turnin' out de fish department. From de bottom of my heart I thank de Ebony Club, but at de same time request it to take no furder steps."

"What did that lady say?" asked Mr. Bryson of his confidential clerk. "I'd rather not repeat her words, sir," replied the clerk. "But I must know, Mr. Plume—must know, sir." "Oh! if you insist upon it, sir, I suppose I must tell you. She said you were all business, but you lacked culture." "So?" exclaimed Mr. Bryson in astonishment. "Lack culture, eh? Look here, Mr. Plume; d'ye know you'd oughter told me o' that long ago? Let's have some right away, before Scrimp & Blowhard can get ahead of us."—Boston Transcript.

The editor of the Rome, N. Y., Sentinel shouts: "Give us Free Lumber!" If there is a person in the world entitled to free lumber it is an editor. If there is a person who gets more of it, though in the shape of cord-wood for subscriptions, it is the editor. Yes, for heaven's sake, send him a load of lumber "free," and see what he will make of it.—Post's Item.

SOME STRANGE SNAKE STORIES.

The Professor in a Museum Exercises His Memory and His Imagination.

"So you want to know something about snake bites?" said Professor Worth, at the North Side Chicago Museum, in answer to a question of a reporter. "I was bitten by a snake," continued the collector of curiosities, "and had a most remarkable escape from death. A snake bit me on the thumb, you see, and it had to be amputated to save my life," and here he showed a very short stump of thumb on the left hand.

"How did it happen?"

"I was feeding the snakes with raw beef, as I had no birds or mice. There were sixty of them in the case from two to six feet long. I had no stick in my hand—an unusual oversight of mine—and had to push back any that tried to get out with my hand. Suddenly three of them made an attempt to escape in as many different directions. Thinking to frighten them back I stamped, shouted and struck at them with my hand. Two dropped back, but one of them stood his ground and raised his head toward me—he was a rattlesnake. I made a quick pass at him, but he was quicker, and buried his fangs in my thumb. I shook him back in the case, closed the lid, and sucking my injured finger, hurried for the door and sent a policeman after an ambulance and a friend for whisky. I drank a quart of whisky, and was unconscious in twenty minutes. The doctors took it for a case of alcoholism and pumped the whisky out of me, or I would never have lost my thumb. They had never had a rattlesnake bite to deal with and didn't know what to do; but the next time I got rattlesnake poison in me I treated myself."

"Have you been bitten since?"

"No, but I ran a fang that one of them had shed into my other thumb a few months ago. That was the first time I knew of rattlesnakes shedding their poison-fangs. I was cleaning out the case and something scratched my thumb through the sponge. I took it for a sliver at first, but when I came to look at it I found it was a fang. I knew I was poisoned again."

"What did you do then?"

"Why, I used rattlesnake violet, of which I made an infusion, and it quickly cured me. I was in the hospital three months the first time, and lost my thumb. The other is as good as ever, you see."

"Do you know of any other cases?" was asked.

"Yes. Mr. Wallack, an actor, was bitten on the leg by a rattlesnake in this State years ago. He buried the leg in earth for twenty-four hours, and the gravity of the earth drew the poison and cured him, but every year, within a day or two, or exactly upon the day on which he was bitten, his leg turns spotted like the snake. A farmer in Tennessee, another acquaintance of mine, was bitten by one of these cotton-mouth moccasins. The latter are nasty snakes; they throw out froth, and whenever this froth touches the skin it poisons. He made a tea of rattlesnake-root, imbibed freely of whisky, and was cured, but every year the foot that was bitten turns the same color as the cotton-mouthed moccasin.

"I know of another man who lives in the snake regions of New York who was bitten by a rattlesnake. He made a tea of rattlesnake violet, applied a salve made of iron root and cured himself. He was bitten in the ankle, and every year, same as the others, his leg became spotted like the snake. Another man whom I know was bitten on the leg by a rattlesnake while in the mountains, three miles away from any house. He made the best time he could to the nearest farm, but the limb was frightfully swollen by that time. The woman there seemed to be considerably versed in rattlesnake bites. She ran out in the yard, caught a chicken, split it in two and applied it to the wound. It absorbed the poison very fast, turning green. Then she threw it away and applied another in the same manner, until she had used twenty-one chickens and effected a complete cure. This man's leg, too, gets spotted yearly."

"Is this chicken cure common?"

"Yes, but generally a much smaller number is sufficient. The case I spoke of was a bad one."

"Are there any other cures?"

"Yes. A sandstone is a good thing. I have one in my collection. It cures rattlesnake and mad-dog bites, and is person like jasmine-stone. When you want to use it dip it in milk or tepid water, to open the pores. Then you scarify the wound, to make it bleed, and apply the stone. It sticks like a leech for perhaps an hour, absorbing the poison till every pore is full, and then drops off. You clean it by dipping it in the milk again, and keep on applying it until the poison is under control; but in case of a mad-dog bite it must be applied within the first five days, before the spasms set in, because after that the blood is so vitiated that the stone can't absorb the poison-gunk enough to save life. These medicines are not believed in up here, because people don't know anything about them. Down South, however, where they are known, they are greatly used."

TAMING A HORSE.

How a Professor took the Job in Hand and Settled the Matter.

During Dr. Dio Lewis's "Gypsying in the Sierras," he became much interested in Professor Tapp, of San Francisco, who tamed wild and vicious horses without violence or drugs. Showing the doctor a herd of wild horses from the mountains, the professor said:

"You may pick out any horse from this herd, and in two hours I will drive him before a buggy, and when going down hill will let the buggy loose on his heels, without the least risk."

The doctor selected the largest horse, the leader of the herd. It took an hour to separate him from his fellows and drive him into the professor's private corral, which was about the size of a circus-ring, with sand six inches deep, and surrounded by a close plank fence, twelve feet high. Dr. Lewis seated himself in the circle above, where he saw what he thus describes:

Professor Tapp entered the corral, holding in his right hand a whip with a short stock and a long, heavy lash.

In his left hand were a strong halter, minus the hitching-strap, two old potato-sacks, two straps, and a strong rope about thirty feet long.

Putting all these but the whip into a recess in the fence, the professor turned toward the horse.

The animal was making frantic efforts to get away. The professor watched his opportunity, and then the whip-cracker hit one of the horse's hind fetlocks.

The horse scampered from side to side, and the cracker again hit the fetlock. Within fifteen minutes this was repeated twenty to thirty times.

The horse learned the lesson this treatment was intended to convey—that there was only one safe place in the corral, and that was close by Professor Tapp. There, there was no hurt, but a gentle, soothing voice. In half an hour, when the professor ran across the corral, the horse would run after him. He had learned that it was dangerous to be more than ten feet away.

Professor Tapp at length succeeded in touching the horse's head with his hand. He started away, but before he had taken three steps came back.

Within three-quarters of an hour the headstall was on. The horse was frightened and used his feet to remove it.

It was now easy to rub his head and neck. The end of the whipstock then tickled his side. The horse switched the spot with his tail, and the professor caught the end of the long tail-hairs.

This frightened the animal; he forgot, and the whipcracker called him back. The professor then seized the tail, drew it toward him, tied into the end of the long hairs a strong cord the other end of which was fastened to the iron ring of the headstall.

This drew the head and tail toward each other. The horse began to turn in a circle, and soon was turning as fast as he could. In a minute he fell, drunk with dizziness.

The professor wound a potato-sack around each hind leg close to the hoof and fastened a short strap over it. There was an iron ring in each strap, and through both rings a rope was passed and tied upon itself, eighteen inches from the hind feet.

The long, loose end of the rope was passed between the horse's forelegs, through the ring of the headstall, and then tied to a heavy ring in the wall of the corral.

The cord connecting the head and tail was cut, and after a little time, the horse, still dizzy, rose slowly. When he found he was fastened he made a tremendous struggle. The professor stood by the ring where the horse was tied.

The animal could not turn his head from side to side, because of the rope which ran through the ring of the headstall.

He tried to back, and sat down in the sand. He sprang to his feet, again backed, and sat down in the sand.

"Pretty soon," said the professor, "he will switch his tail from side to side; that means he gives up."

Within eight minutes the horse moved his tail from side to side. "Now he's done," said the professor.

He knelt down by the horse's hind legs, untied the rope, unbuckled the straps, walked behind him, put his hands upon the horse's hind legs, stuck his head between them, patted his head, and lead him about the corral.

I was obliged to leave, but I learned that he harnessed the horse, and let the buggy strike his heels while going down hill.

HOW TO MAKE SHORTER.—Take a grain of falsehood, a handful of flimsiness about the same quantity of slimbie-tongue, a sprig of the herb backbite, a teaspoonful of don't-you-tell-it, six drops of sliddery, and a few handfuls of envy. Add a little discontent and jealousy, and strain through a bag of misrepresentation, work it up in a bowle of malevolence, and hang it up on a chain of street yarn; keep it in a hot atmosphere; shake it occasionally for a few days, and he shall see. Let a few [illegible] before walking out, [illegible] suit will follow.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO LAUGH OVER.

SO FAR.

Farmer Greenbeak, of Pinkham Flats, has had his little joke, and, what is more, he has paid for it. He thought that it would be an intensely amusing thing to send for the village doctor in great haste, and when he arrived to introduce a goose with a broken wing to the patient. He carried out the programme to the letter. The doctor seemed pleased, too; set the goose's wing, left minute instructions as to the care and diet of the fowl, and called every day for a fortnight, and—sent in his bill accordingly. Farmer Greenbeak grumbled, protested, refused and—paid.

SOMETHING ABOVE A DOG.

Gilhooly strolled into a fashionable Austin church last Sunday just before the service began. The sexton followed him up, and tapping him on the shoulder and pointing to a small cur that had followed him into the sacred edifice, said:

"Dogs are not admitted."

"That's not my dog," responded Gilhooly.

"But he follows you."

"Well, so do you."

The sexton growled, and removed the animal without unnecessary violence.—Texas Siftings.

A GOOD REASON.

"You appear to be gay and happy," said Gilhooly to Kosciusko Murphy, whom he met at a ball at the residence of Colonel Yerger, on Austin Avenue. "You look well fed, are well dressed, and all that. Must have a good income, I presume."

"Oh, yes," replied Kosciusko, "I can't complain. I have my salary, fifteen hundred dollars; then I make five hundred a year by my literary labors, that makes two thousand; then I run in debt a thousand dollars, that makes three thousand dollars. A single man who couldn't subsist on that ought to be ashamed of himself."—Alex. Sweet.

SOUNDS FAMILIAR.

New Servant—"I like it here, mum. It seems just like my old home."

Mistress—"Indeed! Did you ever live in a house as large as this?"

New Servant—"Oh, no, I was not speaking of the house, I was thinkin' how nice that noise up there in the attic reminds me of home all the time."

Mistress—"Oh, you mean that hammering. That is my daughter. She is devoted to repousse work in brass. It is very fashionable now and she has quite a talent that way. But how can that remind you of your home? Where did you live?"

New Servant—"Next door to a boiler factory, mum."

CHILTON VIEW.

CLANTON, ALA., FEB. 28, 1884.

The floods in the Ohio river are subsiding. Congress appropriated $300,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers, in the overflowed country districts. The cities proposed to take care of their own destitute.

The girl who, at New Lisbon, Ohio, announced herself as the prize in a raffle—a hundred chances at a dollar apiece—was taken at first as a joker, but she affirms her sincere willingness to marry the winner, provided he is under forty years of age, and bears a good reputation. She is described as pretty, intelligent, and heretofore unassailed by adverse criticism.

The Republican State Executive Committee has sent out a circular calling a State Convention to meet at Montgomery on the 15th of April, to transact such business as may be brought before "the convention." The circular gives Chilton two delegates. The committee was probably cautious about letting the number run too high for fear that delegates could not be obtained.

In a recent lecture at Birmingham, Prof. Max Muller, of Oxford, referring to the Veda, the sacred book of the Brahmins, which may be termed the Bible of India, said: "It is older than any other book in the Aryan tongue, and surely the knowledge of what the world was before 1,500 years before the beginning of our era, and of what our Aryan ancestors thought and believed nearly 4,000 years ago, is worth having and looking at. It had been, and still was, the foundation of the religion of 163 millions of human beings—who were mostly the subjects of the Empress of India, the Queen of England."

A man had met a girl in a lonely place and forcibly kissed her. She was terribly indignant, and had him arrested. She gave an account on the witness stand of how he gazed at her intently, and then, suddenly throwing his arms around her, imprinted a kiss upon her face. The prisoner made no defense, and the jury was expected to promptly convict him of assault. They returned to the court-room. "The ju-ju-jury w-w-would like to ask the young lady two questions," the foreman said. The judge consented, and she went on the stand. "D-did you wear the j-j-jersey that you've g-got on now?" "Yes, sir." "And w-was your ha-ha-hair b-b-banged like that?" "Yes, sir." Then, your honor, we acquit the p-p-prisoner on the ground of emo-mo-mo-mental insanity."

Tennyson can take a worthless sheet of paper, and, by writing a poem on it, make it worth $5,000. That's genius. Jay Gould can write fewer words on a similar sheet and make it worth $50,000,000. That's capital. And the United States government can take an ounce and a quarter of gold and stamp upon it an "eagle bird" and "Twenty Dollars." That's money. The mechanic can take the material worth $50 and make it into a watch worth $100. That's skill. The merchant can take an article worth 25 cents and sell it to you for $1.00. That's business. A lady will purchase a comfortable bonnet for $10, but prefers to pay $100 for one because it is more stylish. That's foolishness. The ditcher works ten hours a day and excavels out three or four tons of earth for $1. That's labor.

I have been gathering up instances of funny verdicts for several years. In my memorandum book I find the following: A Kansas jury gave the following verdict in a case where a man died in a state of intoxication: "Death by hanging around a rum shop." An Indiana jury recently returned a written verdict of "Blode to pieces by the car bustin." "Jury," said a Western judge, "you kin go out and find a verdict. If you cant find one in your own get the one the last jury used." The jury returned with a verdict of "suicide in the fourth degree." A Rhode Island jury was five days deliberating on a hog case involving a hog worth $5, and then came in, found the hog not guilty, and recommended both plaintiff and defendant to the mercy of the court. A Pekin, Illinois, jury rendered a very singular verdict, that a man whose body was found in the river came to his death by a blow on the head, which was given before or after drowning."—Eli Perkins.

Chilton County.

The VIEW is indebted to Dr. E. A. Smith, State Geologist, for a copy of his report on the progress of the geological survey of Alabama. The work is handsomely bound, and shows that much care has been taken in its publication. It is a valuable work, to the State, and a most desirable addition to a newspaper library. We find the following in its pages in regard to our own county. It is not complete as to our mineral deposits, and it is to be hoped that another Legislature will appropriate a sufficient sum to make a thorough geological survey of the entire State.

CHILTON.

Population: 10,703.—White, 8,651; colored, 2,142.

Area: 700 square miles.—Woodland, all. Four hundred square miles of Gravelly Hills with Long-leaf Pine; 220 square miles Metamorphic slate region; 80 square miles Valley lands, Silurian, etc. (Part of the last two divisions are also covered with Drift and partake of the characters of the Gravelly Pine-Hills.)

Tilled lands: 40,076 acres.—Area planted in cotton, 11,558 acres; in corn, 18,185 acres; in oats, 2,255 acres; in wheat, 4,507; in rye, 60 acres; in sweet potatoes, 356 acres.

Cotton production: 3,534 bales; average cotton product per acre, 0.31 bale, 441 pounds seed cotton, or 147 pounds cotton lint.

The eastern part of Chilton county is formed by the crystalline rocks, the western part by the strata of Drift formation, and at the line of separation of the two, which is approximately along the lines of the North and South Alabama railroad, there is a high ridge of the Drift which forms the water-shed between the Coosa and the Alabama rivers. In many places this water-shed is 300 feet above the immediately adjacent streams. The course of the Coosa river, which forms the eastern boundary of Chilton, is nearly parallel with this ridge.

In addition to the above-named formations, there appear in the upper part of the county certain Silurian strata, which, however, are, as a rule, more or less covered with the beds of Drift, and therefore not solely concerned in the formation of the soil. Near Verbena, in the belt of crystalline rocks, there is an occurrence of hornblendic rocks which yield red and brown soils, and south of these are chiefly mica slates, yielding sandy gray soils, with much long-leaf pine associated with the oak growth. Northward from Verbena the gray soils prevail, and the long-leaf pine is nearly always present among the trees. Immediately north of the belt of red-colored soils mentioned as occuring near Verbena there is an area formed by a much-decayed mica slate of purplish tinge which yields an extremely sterile soil, upon which the chief growth is stunted long-leaf pines and black-jack oaks. In this region the surface is much broken. These slates are traversed by veins holding large masses of mica, which may some day be profitably worked. Northward from this the rocks are mostly siliceous and clay slates, with gray soils; long-leaf pine timber prevails, and the surface in places is exceedingly broken. The highest land in the county is probably to be found in this region. Of the specific characters of the red and gray soils here occuring little need be said, since similar soils have been mentioned under all the counties in which the chrystalline rocks are more widely distributed.

The western part of the county formed of the strata of the Drift presents the usual variety which characterizes that formation everywhere. These soils vary from the rich red and brown loams of the oak and hickory uplands to the gray sandy soils of the pine woods.

The water-shed mentioned as lying on the eastern border of the Drift area is in general a high table-land with gray sandy soil and a splendid growth of long-leaf pine timber, supplying some of the largest saw-mills in the State, located along the line of the North and South Alabama railroad. This pine region extends southward into Autauga and Elmore counties.

Westward in the drainage area of Mulberry creek and of the other small streams of the county brown-loam soils of very good character are found and are in cultivation. This part of the county also is much more densely populated and is of much more importance, agriculturally, than the eastern, where the pine timber and the mineral resources are the chief interests.

The agricultural capabilities of Chilton county are quite similar to those of Autauga on the one hand, and of Coosa on the other.

Cotton is hauled to the stations on the North and South Alabama and Selma, Rome, and Dalton railroads, and there sold to merchants, who ship it thence to the various markets.

The Winds.

Terible cyclones have swept over portions of the southern States during the last week. Alabama seems to have been the principal sufferer. At Leeds, a station on the Georgia Pacific railroad, near Birmingham, the destruction to life and property was distressing. The force of the storm is illustrated in the fact that a bale of cotton at that point was blown in two pieces, one half going with the winds and the other remaining in the gin house. At Wilmington, N. C. the wind was so fierce according to the press telegrams that the chickens were stripped of feathers. The Birmingham Chronicle contains the following on the storm along the Georgia Pacific road:

A fearful cyclone swept over Cahaba valley in which Leeds, a station on the Georgia Pacific, fifteen miles from Birmingham, in this (Jefferson) county, is situated, this afternoon about 3 o'clock. Houses were blown down and trees are across the track of the Georgia Pacific railway, for five miles. Seven persons were killed and about fifteen wounded. Mrs. Dr. Wright, Sr., and Mrs. Dr. Wright, Jr., James Poole and wife, and two children of Mr. Cooper were killed. The house of Mr. Glass was among those blown down.

Dan Luckie, Rosser and others, went to the scene of sorrow on a special at five o'clock this afternoon.

The following is a list of the killed: Dave Casper, Becky Cooper, Alice Pool, Jim Pool, Mrs. J. W. Wright, sr., Mrs. J. W. Wright, jr. All the members of the Poole family were seriously injured.

The cyclone was a half mile wide, and blew down houses and everything else in its track.

Physicians at Leeds sent the following full list of victims of the cyclone February 19th, and were left entirely destitute of food or raiment: Bud Nichols, three in family; John Glass, eight in family; Tempy Glass, four in family; Jesse Poe, ten in family; Mrs. White, four in family; Joe McDaniel, three in family; Mrs. Davis, six in family, one killed and all wounded; John C. Pool, eight in family, three killed and the balance wounded; Thomas Little, four in family, all slightly wounded and things burned.

The Negroes and the Juries.

Tuskaloosa Times.

On last Saturday, a committee of negroes, headed by Lawrence Weaver, Hortentius Williams and Thornton McGuire, entered the office of the Probate Judge, of this county, and represented to Judge Browne that they came from a county meeting of the colored people, and that they were sent as a committee, to inform him that the negroes worked the roads, paid their taxes, etc., and to know why they were not put upon the juries. They said to Judge Browne that they had many men in their race, as good and as competent to serve upon juries, as many of the white men from the hills who were put upon the juries; and they couldn't see why they were not allowed their rights in this matter. The Judge explained the law and told them that he supposed they were not considered competent, and for that reason they had not been put upon the juries. They then visited the Sheriff and Clerk, made about the same statements and received substantially the same answer. The answer to this inquiry is found in Section 4733 of the Code of Alabama, which says that the Probate Judge, Sheriff and Clerk of the Circuit Court "shall select the names of such persons for jurors "as in their opinion are competent to discharge the duties of grand and petit jurors with honesty, impartiality and intelligence, and are esteemed in the community for their intelligence, fair character and sound judgment." (Italics ours.)

This paper has had no special preference in the gubernatorial race, but the friends of McKleroy have made so many silly and unworthy criticisms on the present administration, intended to kill off O'Neal as a probable candidate, that a sense of justice compels us to declare for his renomination in order that the critics may receive a proper and merited rebuke.—Fort Payne Journal.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promtitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

The Birmingham Chronicle, of Sunday, says:

"We were pleased to meet on the streets yesterday, Mr. Rudolph Ehrman, who is making necessary arrangements to start a large wholesale cracker manufactory in this city. Mr. Ehrman is in the mercantile business in Clanton, and is a man of means and indomitable energy."

Chilton has plenty of good material for a State Senator. The name of A. J. Brooks, of Verbena, would be a strong one in the convention, as well as before the people, not only of Chilton, but of the other counties of the district. And then there are others, such as William A. Smith, or M. J. Baldwin. Chilton must present some good Senatorial timber to the convention, and either of the above names would give the county an advantage not easily overcome in a convention. The question is, which of the three could be prevailed upon to allow his name to go before the convention?

John Wesley Captured.

The mistletoe "John Wesley" was captured last Thursday morning at Stump's Hill, the fugitive's old haunt, by officers from Birmingham, assisted by Sheriff Garner and Mr. W. H. Foshee, of this place. The Birmingham officers brought blood-hounds from the convict quarters at Pratt Mines, where DuBose had been serving a life sentence for the murder of a Mr. Arledge, in this county, years ago. The dogs led the party directly upon DuBose after reaching Stump's Hill. The fugitive was camping in the woods with his wife, who had come down from Pratt Mines to join him in further flight. After a short chase DuBose was brought to bay behind a large tree. With his body protected by the tree, and a Smith & Wesson pistol in each hand, he made a prutence of a desperate resistance. He was ordered to drop his weapons and not heeding, he was fired upon and a rifle ball was sent through his left arm. He then dropped his pistols and surrendered. He was carried to Jemison, and the same day was sent to Birmingham, and is again at work in Pratt Mines. The wound in his arm was not serious.

Benson Views.

Weather more favorable. Yet not enough so to disperse the gloomy faces of the planters.

Sickness prevails to an alarming extent.

Last Tuesday, 19th inst., the most terrible storm passed over our neighborhood, that has for many years. Much damage was done to the farms, trees torn up, fencing blown down and a number of stock killed.

The enterprising and zealous worker, Tom Rasberry, passed through our settlement last week. He was engaging cotton fertilizers to the farmers.

J. H. Gibbons, Esq., has removed to Jemison. He is engaged in the hotel business there. All who want good board, will find it at the "Gibbons House." Mrs. Gibbons is a nice lady and a splendid cook.

Mrs. Jane Mastin died at her residence, on the night of 23d inst. She leaves three children and a host of friends and relatives to mourn her loss.

W. L. Campbell, Esq., and others are preparing to erect a steam saw mill near Mr. Jessie Martin's. Success to the enterprise.

BENSON.

Callierville Dots.

Last week our woods were again ringing with the sound of the hunter's horns, hounds and guns—much game has been killed. Chilton being exempt from the game as well as the stock law, hunting parties often come in from a distance. By the way, our venerable pastor, Rev. Mills, bears the reputation of being as good a marksman, as a preacher. He is much loved by his people.

Last Sunday evening, we were treated to a visit and sermon, from the Methodist circuit preacher, Rev. Mr. Green, quite a young man, who seems to be a zealous christian.

Mrs. Callier returned in time to help nurse little Alice King, who has been quite low, but is now able to walk about.

There were two deaths near here last month, Mrs. Ramsey and Mrs. Terrill.

Dr. Callier, having sold his residence to Messrs Adams & Callier, is improving his lot adjoining Mrs. Crum's. The violent gale of Friday night, the 22d, blew down a new half-covered building—the workmen are pushing ahead, and soon will have a finished job.

The new bridge across Mulberry creek near People Station, was washed partly away recently.

Mr. Parnell's mill pond is now attractive for boat rides and fishing.

Rev. W. N. Huckabee took charge of our school a week ago, as Spring is coming with more pleasant weather, we hope he may soon have a full school. M. A. H.

Dr. T. E. Callier, of Dixie, was in Clanton on Tuesday last, on legal business. It might not be amiss to say here that in looking around for a man to represent them in the lower house of the Legislature, the people could hardly find a more suitable one than Dr. Callier. A man of sound political views, and solid practical sense, is what is needed, and is what can be found in Dr. C., who is also a man of means and can afford to give his services to the people. There are no doubt other citizens who might fill the place as well, but as only one can be elected, let Dr. Callier be called upon by his friends to run. Dr. C. is not a candidate for the position, but he would serve if elected.

The following communication is published as a matter of mere justice in allowing each side to be heard. Our correspondent was no doubt led into an error by depending upon "hearsay," and by his zeal in the work for which he is fitting himself:

VERBENA, Feb. 25, 1884.

EDITOR VIEW:—We wish to thank you for your appropriate and pretty editorial endeavoring to soften the harsh and unchristian remarks of your correspondent, "Bijou," assailing the moral character of the young men of Verbena. We were much surprised to see such an unjust and uncalled for charge in your last issue against us. As would be supposed, we investigated the matter. We find that "Bijou" is a young fanatic who is at this place studying for the ministry. He does not reside here, and is unacquainted with any of the young men. He admitted that he was backed by some one, and that what he wrote was from hearsay, but he refuses to give any names and only says that he is upheld by influential citizens of the place. We have interviewed all of the influential men, and they not only condemn his assertion, but uphold us in dancing. We are therefore, sorry for "Bijou," that he should allow himself to be made the mouth-piece of some envious, uncharitable person or persons.

His remarks did not bear so much on the harm of the dance as the way it is here conducted—"by the immoral young men." If "Bijou" will take a dictionary and look out the word "immoral" he will find that it means "contrary to divine law, wicked, unjust and dishonest." He certainly did not know the meaning of the word, for the young men who conduct the dancing are all steady and are honestly employed every day.

As for dancing, it is a most favored and popular amusement among the educated and refined classes of society, and as long as we can have the presence of the charming young ladies, the approval of the most prominent and influential citizens, and the services of our very moral and upright musician, we intend to dance whenever we choose.

With all due respect, we are

THE SO-CALLED "IMMORAL YOUNG MEN."

Squire J. L. Williams brought to our office on Monday last several pieces of charred wood found while digging a well on his place near Randolph. The wood was found at a depth of 49 feet below the surface of the earth. How did it become charred at that depth? or how did it get into the earth after being burnt?

Mr. J. F. Maull at Lomax, has his mill running again. Success to him.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Pain in the head, fullness after eating, rheumatism of the shoulder, dizziness, sour stomach, loss of food, irritability of temper, low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and dozens of other symptoms, all arising from a disordered state of the stomach and liver. At such times Tutt's PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt, causing all impurities to be thrown off by these three avengers of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. Thousands suffer and die daily from these causes who might be saved by the timely use of this medicine. Tutt's PILLS are a POSITIVE ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Have had Dyspepsia, with Constipation, for years. Tutt's Pills have cured me. Best, cheapest, and only pill that I have ever used that did me permanent good. Have recommended one to nearly all my patients. Tutt's Pills are worth their weight in gold. Have used them in my family for years. Would not be without them. W. H. HARRIS, M. D., Lebanon, Ky.

TYPE-SETTING MACHINES.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE TO TAKE THE PLACE OF HAND LABOR.

Some Types are Set and Distributed Mechanically—Vast Sums Said to Have Been Invested—The Results of Years of Experiments.

[From the New York Sun.]

In 1841, a Frenchman, named Delcambre, patented in this country a type-setting machine, which in some respects may be regarded as the parent of at least some of the three important principles of mechanism since involved in the construction of the Burr and several other hundred inventions. In it the types were arranged in upright channels above the key board, and, as successively liberated by the action of keys, traveled singly down inclined planes by serpentine channels, and were ranged into a long line which had to be subsequently broken up and justified. A distributor was associated with the machine, but in the judgment of practical printers was less effective than the setting apparatus.

The next machine to claim public attention in this line was the Alden, a very large and complicated thing, full of delicate mechanism, which concentrated the types to a common center from reflecting channels. It is said by those interested in it that more than $300,000 in cash has been put into the development of this machine, and still it has not yet been able to demonstrate itself a practical success, owing to its intricacy, delicacy and liability to get out of order. Accompanying it was a distributor, in which the principle now in use on the Burr, Thorne and other machines, of automatic selection of the types by the various nicks on their edges, was employed. About 1874 the Page machine was patented, and later a distributor was associated with it, but after expending somewhere near a million dollars on it, the stockholders are said to have allowed their interests to lapse back into the hands of the inventor, who is still hopefully at work on it. The Kastenbein machine, made in Brussels, is about twelve years old, and is understood to be acceptable in Germany, but has not been found profitable here.

Mr. George Munro bought three of these machines about two years ago to set up the German versions of his "Seaside Library" stories, but found it cheaper to employ hand labor, and the machines now stand unused in his establishment. They are big, clumsy affairs, in which there seems to be a good deal of waste motion, unnecessary friction and uncalled-for complication. No distributor goes with them. Girls or boys have to distribute the "dead matter" by hand, poking the types separately in little holes, where they drop into metal channels for transfer to the setting apparatus. Another foreign machine that has been shown, but never introduced here, was the Fraser of Edinburgh. It set up matter in a manner considerably like the Burr, or the parent Delcambre machines, but had a distributor that at least presented the interest of novelty, as it worked by a sort of reversal of the setting principle, the types being picked up and carried to their respective places by the operation of keys. Although not successful here, it is said that this machine is employed profitably in John Black's great printing establishment in Edinburgh.

Ten Burr machines are used by Mr. George Munro, there are three more working in the Tribune office, and several are kept constantly employed by the manufacturers. They have been tested about two years. The machine is cumbrous and its distributor is very noisy, but both work effectively, and with two hands to each apparatus turns out about as much solid matter a day as would be expected from seven or eight ordinarily good compositors. Very expert and industrious operators can exceed this proportion, but the relative yield of work averages about that much. The weekly work—60 hours—of each "team" is expected to be about 270,000 ems. That is frequently exceeded, and one team here of exceptional ability has turned out 60,000 ems in a day and 342,000 ems in the week. The cost of composition is divided up into several small parts, but aggregates a little less than twenty-five cents a thousand ems, as against the forty cents a thousand paid for composition by hand. The "setter" who manipulates the keys, gets 6½ cents a thousand, the "justifiers," 6½ cents; the "distributor" 4 cents; the "corrector" 3 cents, the "overrunners," who pick out quads, finales, and odd sorts from the dead matter before it goes to the distributing machine, get $18 a week each, and there are two of them employed on the ten machines; the "pi setters" get $6 or $8 a week, and there are other petty fractions of expense on minor labor, fairly chargeable to the machines, that bring up the total to the amount stated.

That does not include interest on investment, which is considerable, as ten machines, with their distributing apparatus, represented $40,000. The types in the Burr setter are arranged in long vertical channels above and in front of the operator at the key board, and travel down their several ways to a carrier that brings them out in a long line to the justifier. All odd sorts must be added by hand. The working of that apparatus is not difficult for anybody to understand, but the distributing machine is complicated. In the latter the successive page lines of type are lifted into other automatically and pushed along continuously on an endless carrier composed of separate little blocks of steel. The slots on the types are the guides by which they are, as they pass along, thrust down into their respective appropriate channels. Those which are missed in their progression, or odd sorts overlooked by the "overrunner," drop into a pi box to be set up by girls and distributed by hand. Each set of channels constitutes a "case," which when filled is ready to be put into place on the setting apparatus. The aforesaid weight of font to each machine here is 1,000 pounds. Each machine must be constructed for one particular size of type, and can be adapted to no other. Those used by Mr. Munro are all built for brevier. The distributor does not do its share of the work so rapidly as an expert setter can use the type in composition, but the manufacturers have refused to sell more than one distributor with one setting machine.

Cheese versus Meat.

At a recent lecture on the "Scientific Basis of Cookery," by Mr. W. Mathieu Williams, the properties of casein when separated from the cream were described, and its high nutritive value as it exists in the form of cheese was explained, it being shown that twenty pounds of cheese contains as much nutriment as a whole sheep weighing sixty pounds. The lecturer maintained that in this country the cookery of cheese was practically an unknown art, the only form commonly known being the Welsh rarebit. He described his own experiments in the cookery of cheese by dissolving it in milk or water, to which a little bicarbonate of potash had been added to neutralise the acid by which it had been precipitated from the milk, thus restoring it to its original soluble and digestible form. Some original modes of thus cooking and using cheese were thus described—such as cheese porridge, made by adding grated cheese to oatmeal porridge, to boiled rice, mashed potatoes, hasty pudding, etc A cheap, savory, and highly nutritious food could thus be prepared, equal in nutritive value to beef and mutton, and far less costly. Milk, butter, and "bosch" were described, the lecturer maintaining that the latter when carefully prepared from good beef and mutton fat, and honestly sold as "butterine," or "oleomargarine," or by any other name indicating its true nature, was an excellent substitute for cream butter, and obtainable for half the cost. The proximate elements of vegetables were described, and the conversion of starch into dextrine and sugar by cookery was explained. It was shown that the fibrous framework of plants, cellulose, has the same ultimate chemical composition as starch and sugar, and is convertible into them. A chemist, the lecturer said, could make sugar from old cotton rags or other vegetable fibre. This change occurred in the ripening of fruits, when by the agency of the acid of the unripe fruit, its cellulose, or woody fibre, became converted into sugar even after it was removed from the tree. Vegetable fibre was but little used as food for man, but the lecturer was of the opinion that this was simply for the want of more scientific cookery. At present we used the digestive organs of sheep, oxen, etc., to prepare our food. These animals merely did more completely what we did when we converted raw wheat into bread or oatmeal into porridge. They selected the required constituents from the coarser kinds of vegetables, such as grass, etc., and rearranged their elements in the laboratory of their bodies, and thus presented us with these elements in a form more easily assimilated by ourselves. When we should know enough of the science of cookery, we should do this for ourselves better, more cheaply, and less repulsively than now.

One of California's Nabobs.

A man with a leg that hung as loose from his hip as if it had been a piece of hay rope buttoned a ragged old overcoat over his humped shoulders and pigeon breast. Then he looked up and down Main street with earnest vacuity, and hopped on his good leg to his wagon and drew himself painfully up to his seat. The top of the wagon was made chiefly of gunny sacks, and canted to one side as if it had about made up its mind to give up further effort to be a wagon top. Three spokes were gone from the hind wheels. The hind spring was broken and was tied to the axle with half-unravelled ropes. Attached to this ruin of a vehicle a mule was hitched. The wagon by comparison with this beast was a new and gaudy thing. The mule was tied to the broken and spliced shafts with odds and ends of straps. His whole harness was a mass of knots and twists and tangles. The mule stood with his nose within six inches of the ground and gave a hollow cough at intervals. From a strap close to his ear a long tassel depended. It had once been red, but was now a dirty pink. "Get up," said the man with the boneless leg, tugging at the rope and leather lines. The mule groaned deeply, and painfully started up at a walk so slow that it would have angered the chief mourners at a funeral. As he walked it was seen that one of his hind legs had been broken at the knee joint, and healed so that it bent inward and rubbed against the other at every step. "Who is he?" "Oh, it's old Gripp that lives out on the sands," answered a farmer. "He must have a wretched life of it." "There you're off, young feller. Grip is one of our oldest and best citizens—one of the pioneers. I reckon he's worth half a million."—Stockton Mail.

A Prosperous Association.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Association of New York was held in Syracuse. Reports show a total membership of 3,191, a net gain of 104; deaths 34; paid beneficiaries $170,000, of which $40,000 was paid from the reserve fund. The Treasurer's report shows a balance on hand last year of $51,679.65; receipts above assessments $45,272.60; total income $96,995.26; disbursements, including $40,000 to beneficiaries from the reserve fund, $42,567.68; balance on hand $54,328.61, of which $51,774.97 is invested in registered Government bonds. President Eaton estimates the number of commercial travelers in the State of New York at 16,000, and in the United States at 100,000.

BONES OF A BATTLE-FIELD.

A Visit to the Place Where the Peruvians Made Their Last Stand for Liberty.

A Callao letter to the Washington Republican says: A few days ago, being at Miraflores with a party of friends, it was proposed that we take a ride on horseback and visit the battle-field, which lies quite near the town. No sooner said than done, and shortly seven jolly people mounted on seven Peruvian horses were rambling through the streets. The battle-field looked like a smooth plain with the usual adobe walls dividing it into fields, and you did not see the four forts, which are between the town and foothills, until you were almost upon them; then they looked formidable, to say the least. They were square forts, quite a distance from one another; the front and sides were formed by piling up earth, forming a low embankment and digging a broad ditch about fourteen feet deep; this ditch was filled with water. On top of the embankment they placed sacks filled with earth. The rear and between the forts was protected by adobe walls, which extended along the whole line and were pierced with holes for riflemen. These adobe walls are from four to five feet in height and two in thickness. They are solid and difficult to break down, and in this instance the forts were so placed that riflemen behind these walls could enfilade an attacking party.

Here the last stand was made by the Peruvians in defense of Lima and this was the battle where 7,000 of their men never received an order or fired a shot all day long, but stood and watched 4,000 Chilians, who had penetrated the line about the centre, march on to Lima. How many Peruvians fell will never be known. About 3,000 Chilians were killed, but their wounded were saved and after the battle the dead soldiers of their army were laid in rows and earth thrown over them. The officers were coffined and sent home. The Peruvians were left with the dead horses to feed the vultures. Their whitening bones now lie in bunches or scattered about all over the plains. Skulls, spines, ribs, bits of uniforms and shoes, with socks and foot bones in them were numberless. In one place some one had amused himself arranging a ghastly pile and here and there was a charred heap, where some friend had found the remains and pouring petroleum over them, set fire to it.

He Knew How to Fight.

While the wind from Harlem river was making an æolean harp of the columns of the elevated railway recently, a Chinaman stood in the One hundred-and-twenty-ninth-street station of the Third avenue road, clad in the airy profusion of his national costume. Time passed and so did the trains; and the diminutive nose of the guileless Chinese became successively red, blue and purple in color. A train from City Hall at last rolled into the station. A smile that was glowing in its brightness illuminated the face of the Chinaman. With that nonchalance, in matters where time is involved, which characterizes the Orientals, he sauntered toward the gates of the train. But the signal for starting had rung, and the brakeman, a burly Irishman, slammed the gate on the Chinaman's feet

An expression of placid surprise passed over the Chinaman's features. He made no sound but with a pas seu, worthy of a Fourth Ward heeler, he placed his right hand in its most compact shape, upon the nose of the brakeman, with sufficient emphasis to make that worthy observe:

"Ye mutherin haythen! I'll kill ye—ye long clawed rat ayter!"

The misery and disgrace of being struck by a Chinaman without its being in his power to return the blow with interest seemed to overwhelm the Irishman. Although the train was moving rapidly away from the station, he opened the gate, jumped off the train and made a dash at his assailant. But the "haythen" had been trained in the right school, for he caught the Irishman about the waist, turned him completely upside down and then bumped his head on the station floor with a grin of malicious pleasure. There was a groan from the brakeman, a rush by the spectators for the Chinaman, but he, with a wisdom beyond his country, boarded a train that was leaving the station and was borne away.

A Tribune reporter suggested as the victorious Chinaman entered the car, that he had evidently satisfied the Irishman's desire to fight. A placid and contented smile stole over his face as he answered:

"Ess, belly much. Me gotee Ilish wife. She show me how to fightee."—New York Tribune.

Statistics in Massachusetts.

The annual report of the Railroad Commissioners was submitted to the Legislature recently. During the year ending Sept. 30, 1883, there were 3,796 additional miles of railroad constructed in this State. The aggregate capital stock was $122,367,572. The net debt of the companies amounts to $72,933,290. The total gross income for the year was $42,380,337; total expenses, $32,479,907. The local passenger earnings were $13,052,320; through passenger earnings, $6,245,265. The total number of passengers carried was 61,530,747. The whole number of tons of freight carried was 20,209,681. The number of persons injured during the year was 634 and the number killed was 191, 35 being passengers. Upon the Sunday train question the Commissioners say that to authorize a Sunday train on an abstract argument against Sabbath observance without proof of any demand for the train would show disregard of the spirit of the law passed in 1881, and would be a breach of trust. There is no doubt that the law should be construed as authorizing permission for the operation of a road when it is called for by mixed considerations of convenience and necessity.

Used As a Lay Figure.

On one of the leading thoroughfares of this city is a gentleman's fashionable furnishing goods store which does a large business, and the proprietors of which are not only well-known but very popular. One of them had an experience a few days before Christmas which has temporarily so changed his genial nature that he now looks upon every smiling greeting of his friends with the fiercest suspicion, while any direct allusion to the subject itself is certain to result in the uncorking of the vials of his wrath. A passing friend, seeing him standing in the door of his store on the afternoon referred to, accosted him with, "Well, ——, how goes it?"

"Oh, don't ask me. I'm mad; madder than I have been before since I came to the State. I'm all broke up. Come with me and I'll tell you all about it. You know," he said, after the glasses were empty, "we've got a lot of dressing gowns in the store, elegant ones that we imported from the East just to catch this holiday trade. Well, this afternoon two ladies sailed in, dressed fit to kill. The store was full of customers and the boys were all busy, so I stepped up to them and asked what I could do for 'em. They said they wanted to look at some dressing sacks—something fine—and you may be sure I didn't lose any time in getting out the best we had. Well, they liked the first one I showed 'em, only one of 'em said she would like first rate to see how it would look on and asked me if there wasn't some way she could see it on a man and then she could tell better how it would look. I wa'n't going to miss a trick, so I took off my coat and put it on. They turned me round and round and got off a little way and looked at me from top to toe as though I was a piece of statuary. Then they wanted to see another one. So I off with the one I had on and put on the other. That didn't suit 'em, and I tried on another and that didn't suit 'em. I began to get weary of it, especially as there was lots of customers in the store, and I thought I saw a smile here and there, and I finally did ketch one of my own boys in a broad grin, though he ducked his head under the counter when he saw me lookin' at him. I was getting pretty hot about the way they were using me for a lay figure, and I finally brought out the best I had—a sack worth $75—put it on and buttoned it up. They looked me all over again, liked it first rate, and I thought I had a sale sure, but may I be hanged if they didn't say, 'Well, we'll look around and if we don't find anything that suits us any better we'll come back;' and the same minute I heard 'haw, haw, haw,' all over the store. Mad? I was just fighting mad, and you can guess I was none the sweeter tempered when I found that those creatures had been looking for a smoking jacket for one of my own clerks."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Little Carrier Pigeons.

"I have often watched my birds coming home," said Dr. Clegg, recently "They are up in the air until they look about as big as sparrows. About a mile off they set their wings, and with a rush they come to the window, never going a foot past it or evincing the slightest uncertainty as to the locality of their home. I have one hundred pair or so now. All around this neighborhood people are breeding and flying home pigeons. I use mine often to send messages home to my family. I write the message upon tissue paper and roll it up until I can stick it in a quill. This I tie to the leg of the bird between the foot and the knee with yarn. Thread would cut in and stop the circulation. They never seem to mind the load, and never pick it off. If you are going to fly a match, a female bird that wants only two days of hatching out her eggs is the quickest. Fly her before two o'clock, and she tries to get back before half-past three to relieve the male, which has been on duty since nine o'clock. A male bird flies best when the female is laying her eggs, over which operation he usually exercises the most lofty superintendence. They are loving, jealous birds, and the attachment to the spot of their birth and breeding-place is so great that they will rather starve than leave it."

"How can you tell when your pigeon arrives in a match?" was asked.

"By this electric bell," replied Dr. Clegg, stepping to the mantel and touching a tiny striking apparatus. "I have a board on the entrance to the window set on a spring. The weight of a pigeon that alights on it presses it down, so that it completes the circuit and rings this bell. The judges and timers then score, while I go and catch my pigeons. Sometimes I take a whole basketful of young pigeons up to Havre de Grace for an afternoon airing. They come back, thirty-five miles, under the hour easily."

"What colors are the best?"

"Well, the white, silver and checkered are about the best-colored birds."

"Why will not a common blue-rock pigeon do just as well to train in this way?" was the query.

"They lack the intelligence and instinct," was the reply.—Baltimore Sun.

A human interrogation point went to an oculist to get a glass fitted to his eye. "This is the weakest glass you have?" he asked. "Yes." "Well, what shall I do when I can't see with this?" "Why, you will probably be compelled to purchase a stronger one." "And, when I cannot see with that?" "Well, then you will have to use a still stronger one." "And after that?" "Oh, then you will have to get the very strongest." The victim of defective eyesight thought a moment, and then asked: "And when'd can't see with the strongest?" The oculist didn't care to say what would happen after his own skill had proved ineffectual, and was rather indignant at the inquisitiveness of the customer, so remained silent. "But tell me," persisted the knowledge-seeker, "what shall I do when the strongest glass fails me?" "Oh, ahem, well," was the answer, "I should say that the next thing to do would be to buy a small dog with a strong round bite and let him lead you."

A DANGEROUS AMBUSCADE.

Mysterious Hermit Ready to Pounce—The Most Dangerous Point Lurking of Modern Health-Compels Battle Accepted.

Succumbing of a physician who caused to-day city yesterday by a rumor that one of our best known citizens was about to publish a statement concerning some unusual experiences during his residence in Syracuse. How the rumor originated it is impossible to say, but a reporter immediately sought Doctor S. G. Martin, the gentleman in question, and secured the following interview:

"What about this rumor, Doctor, that you are going to make a public statement of some important matters?"

"Just about the same as you will find in all rumors—some truth; some fiction. I had contemplated making a publication of some remarkable episodes that have occurred in my life, but have not completed it as yet."

"What is the nature of it, may I inquire?"

"Why, the fact that I am a human being instead of a spirit. I have passed through one of the most wonderful ordeals that perhaps ever occurred to any man. The first intimation I had of it was several years ago, when I began to feel chilly at night and restless after retiring. Occasionally this would be varied by a soreness of the muscles and cramps in my arms and legs. I thought, as most people would think, that it was only a cold and so paid as little attention to it as possible. Shortly after this I noticed a peculiar catarrhal trouble and my throat also became inflamed. As if this were not variety enough I felt sharp pains in my chest, and a constant tendency to headache."

"Why didn't you take the matter in hand and check it right where it was?"

"Why doesn't everybody do so? Simply because they think it is only some trifling and passing disorder. These troubles did not come all at once and I thought it unmanly to heed them. I have found, though, that every physical neglect must be paid for and with large interest. Men cannot draw drafts on their constitution without honoring them sometime. These minor symptoms I have described, grew until they were giants of agony. I became more nervous; had a strange fluttering of the heart, an inability to draw a long breath and an occasional numbness that was terribly suggestive of paralysis. How I could have been so blind as not to understand what this meant I cannot imagine."

"And did you do nothing?"

"Yes, I traveled. In the spring of 1879 I went to Kansas and Colorado, and while in Denver, I was attacked with a mysterious hemorrhage of the urinary organs and lost twenty pounds of flesh in three weeks. One day after my return I was taken with a terrible chill and at once advanced to a very severe attack of pneumonia. My left lung soon entirely filled with water, and my legs and body became twice their natural size. I was obliged to sit upright in bed for several weeks in the midst of the severest agony, with my arms over my head, and in constant fear of suffocation."

"And did you still make no attempt to save yourself?"

"Yes, I made frantic efforts. I tried everything that seemed to offer the least prospect of relief. I called a council of doctors and had them make an exhaustive chemical and microscopical examination of my condition. Five of the best physicians of Syracuse and several from another city said I must die!

It seemed as though their assertion was true, for my feet became cold, my mouth parched, my eyes wore a fixed glassy stare, my body was covered with a cold, clammy death sweat, and I read my fate in the anxious expressions of my family and friends."

"But the finale?"

"Came at last. My wife, aroused to desperation, began to administer a remedy upon her own responsibility, and while I grew better very slowly, I gained ground surely until, in brief, I have no trace of the terrible Bright's disease from which I was dying, and am a perfectly well man. This may sound like a romance, but it is true, and my life, health and what I am are due to Warner's Safe Cure, which I wish was known to and used by the thousands who, I believe, are suffering this minute as I was originally. Does not such an experience as this justify me in making a public statement?"

"It certainly does. But then Bright's disease is not a common complaint, doctor."

"Not common! On the contrary, it is one of the most common. The trouble is, few people know they have it. It has so few marked symptoms until its final stage that a person may have it for years, each year getting more and more in its power and not suspect it. It is quite natural I should feel enthusiastic over this remedy while my wife is even more so than I am. She knows of its being used with surprising results by many ladies for their own peculiar ailments, over which it has singular power.

The statement drawn out by the above interview is amply confirmed by very many of our most prominent citizens, among them being Judge Reigel, and Colonel James S. Goodrich, of the Times, while General Dwight H. Bruce and Rev. Professor W. P. Coddington, D. D., give the remedy their heartiest endorsement. In this age of wonders, surprising things are quite common, but an experience so unusual as that of Dr. Martin's and occurring here in our midst, may well cause comment and teach a lesson. It shows the necessity of guarding the slightest approach of physical disorder and by the means which has been proven the most reliable and efficient. It shows the depth to which one can sink and yet be rescued, and it proves that few people need suffer if these truths are observed.—Syracuse Journal.

Domestic Recipes.

Two small tart apples are a toothsome addition to the stuffing of a roast duck or goose.

Apple fritters make a nice entree to be served with roast duck.

One of the wisest precautions to take when you are taking in to have the oven perfectly clean, and yet it is one that is often neglected, and many an otherwise faultless dish has been spoiled by the sifting of ashes from the upper grate in the oven.

Nice rolls are made of two teacups of sweet milk, two eggs, three and a half scant cups of flour, sifted, of course, a good pinch of salt. Bake in very hot gem pans, in a quick oven.

This is a good dish: fry one pound of veal in hot lard, having first cut it in strips about two inches wide, and three or four long; when nearly done, add a little butter and half a pint of oysters chopped or cut in small pieces; season with pepper and salt; serve hot with or without toast.

If a goose that is to be roasted is allowed to lie in a deep pan with cold water over it, in which a tablespoonful of soda is dissolved, all the oil can be scraped out of the skin, and the coarse flavor which is greatly objected to may be entirely removed. The goose must first be perfectly cleaned by rinsing with clear cold water.

Cut cold meat as for hash; fill a deep dish with boiled macaroni, pour over any gravy you may have, on the top of that place the meat, cover it with tomatoes, over which sprinkle breadcrumbs, with a little butter; bake until nicely browned.

JAPAN.—On New Year's Day, in Japan, there is great emulation among the merchants of sound credit to make the first sale of goods. According to law, all Japanese merchants are required to settle their accounts and pay their debts by December 31st, and are not allowed to buy or sell goods until they have closed so.

Dearse the thick fog the other evening, Gem Gom took a poor blind man by the hand and led him to his door. Telling the story to a friend on the following day, he cried: "It so terribly to be blind in such a fog!"—Boston Courier.

Lecturers' Anecdotes.

"Did you ever hear of a 'quaver?'" asked a well-known lecturer in the course of a chat. The visitor had not.

"Well, when one of those persons whom I pick out to represent the rest of the audience happens to have any very noticeable peculiarity about his face or his clothing, I call him a 'quaver,' because he 'quavers,' as they say in slang—that is, he distracts my attention from my lecture. Once I hit on a man whose necktie had hitched up over his collar and was rubbing against the back of his neck every time he moved his head. If there is anything that makes me feel like flying it is to feel anything of this sort against the back of my neck, and so I got up a lively sympathy for that man, though he was one of those nerveless creatures who wouldn't be fidgety even if the back of his collar should be unbuttoned. I could fairly feel that hot necktie rubbing against the back of my perspiring neck, and it kept nearly all of my attention. A dozen times I pushed my own necktie down before and behind, but the relief was only momentary; the feeling that it was bobbing up and down and was about to chafe me came back as soon as I removed my hand. I struggled on, and am not sure whether I talked to my subject or switched off to a dissertation on misplaced neckties. Finally, when it seemed as if I should jump out of my coat if that necktie was not pushed down, I stopped short and said in a loud voice: 'Will that gentleman in the third row—right there (I pointed dead at him)—will he push down his necktie?' This provoked a storm of laughter, and I went on just as if I frequently threw a joke like that into my lecture."

Remarkable Escape.

John Kuhn, of Lafayette, Ind., had a very narrow escape from death. This is his own story: "One year ago I was in the last stages of consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could not live twenty-four hours. My friends then purchased a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, which benefited me. I continued until I took nine bottles. I am now in perfect health, having used no other medicine."

"A PSALM OF LIFE."

Tell me not in mournful numbers,
"Life is but an empty dream!"
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal;
"Dust thou art, to dust returnest,"
Was not spoken of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way,
But to act that each to-morrow
Finds us further than to-day.

Art is long, and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife.

Trust no fortune, howe'er pleasant;
Let the dead past bury its dead;
Act—act in the living present—
Heart within and God o'erhead!

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime;
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time—

Footprints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Poor Jack.

"Life is worth nothing to me if I cannot dress well!"

She said it, and she meant it, from her heart. And she looked down scornfully and angrily upon her coarse dress and common shoes. Many and many a time the thought had been in her mind; and now it formed itself in words which she uttered aloud; and, as they fell upon the evening air, a hand came down upon her shoulder, and, turning, she saw her husband.

"Is it really so, Bell?" he asked, and drew her to him.

A baby thing, though she had a woman's years and stature—a beautiful creature, with a creamy skin and eyes blue as sapphires are. Not a common woman; one in whose veins blue blood ran. You could see that at a glance, though the man whose wife she was was a common sailor.

They told a romantic story about her in that sea-side palace. How, on a voyage across the ocean with her father, the sailor had won her heart. How there were, afterward, secret meetings and troth-plightings; and how, in the end, the discovery of the love affair and her parent's anger had only driven Bell Raymond to elope with her sailor lover, and marry him despite all opposition.

She had been disowned and disinherited; and now, were they to meet in the street her own father would have passed her as he would a stranger; for, to his mind, she had disgraced herself and her family irretrievably.

That Jack Marble was good and handsome, and love-worthy, was no excuse for his daughter in Mr. Raymond's eyes. He was a common sailor, that blotted out all merit at once and forever.

Other people marvelled at Bell Raymond's choice, and blamed her too. But she was very happy. Her young husband idolized her, and at the first money she plenty. Certain sums, which Jack's hard-working father had scraped together for a rainy day, and so bequeathed to his son, were withdrawn from the bank in which they had been deposited; and Bell had a tasteful wardrobe, for this her father had sent her, with a cold message to the effect that her own personal property was all she need ever expect at his hands.

Then soon Jack hoped to be a mate; after that, a captain; some day, captain and owner—the grand climax of a seafaring man's ambition. And to Bell, the fact that her husband was a sailor, threw a romance about him which a landsman could not have had. Their life passed on in a pleasant sort of waltz music, and neither dreamed of any change.

Yet change came. Jack left his young wife for a voyage, understanding, as she could not, how the little hoard had melted away, and would continue to melt like snow under a sunbeam, and the voyage was a disastrous one, ending in shipwreck. Many were lost, and Jack was only rescued of death's door with a broken limb, and a miserable experience of starvation and consequent cannibalism. Indeed, Jack himself owed near nothing manful for two maddened mess-mates, who afterward wept like babies at the remembrance of their horrible thoughts.

Jack had a good constitution, and recovered. His ruse came back, and his limb, long and lank, when they took him from the floating raft, curled close to his hardened head again. But he came back to Bell with a wooden leg and a knowledge that his sailor life was over, and that he should never now aspire to the title of mate, and master, and owner.

Bell loved him all the more, and pitied him, and cherished him; and had they been rich, their life might have glided on in the old [illegible]. As [illegible] they were not rich, but growing very poor.

So, as the money grew less, the necessity grew less. They left the pretty retreat in which he had taken her for a very humble place; and poor Jack, unfit to the very soul and unfit for any landsman's work as a fish for a parlor cage, humbled himself and said nothing of that aching place where his dreams of sea and of advancement lay covered up, and sunk into the vacant place left by an old boatman who had plied his trade at the wharf and along the shore of the town where Jack had been born and had lived all his life.

He had strong arms yet, and was a wonderful caresman, and they did not starve. But their life was the pinching life of the poor, and it came soon to the coarsest fare and the coarsest dress, and Bell, who had been used to dainty food and elegant attire, suffered more than the sailor who knew what hard luck was and was used to roughing it.

He never knew how bitterly she repined until coming upon her in a day-dream he heard those words:

"Life is worth nothing to me if I must go shabby."

She wept on his shoulder, as he held her to him and sobbed out at heart.

"It was more than she could bear. It was terrible. Their housemaid at home had better clothes. It was horrible to look out of the window and hear the sailors' wives quarreling with their husbands, or scolding their children, or beating down the fishmongers, the blast from whose tin horns filled the street from dawn until sunset. Was such a life worth anything? and she could not rid herself of it for an hour, for her clothes were not fit to wear where people were well dressed; and she would not be seen by her old friends now."

So she sobbed. And Jack's hand smoothed her fair hair, and his lips touched her cheek, and by-and-bye he whispered:

"I wish I had never met you, lass; or I wish I'd drifted by without a signal; for, d'ye see this is all my fault; and you'd be safe in harbor now if you hadn't sailed out of it with me. Only I couldn't foresee the future, lass; and I thought to make you a captain's wife; by-and-bye an owner's lady. It would have been better for you if Jem and Bill had made a meal of me, I've come to think. Rid of me, your father would take you home; well—it may happen yet."

And then Bell put her arms about his neck and whispered that she did not regret her love for him.

But struggle as she might with it, the words that had been said of her folly would recur to her mind, and she knew that she did regret something. It was hard to help it.

Jack knew it also. He ate his humble supper sadly, and went out again. His day's work was over, but he wanted to be alone.

He limped down to the shore where it was lonely, and washed the highest by the sobbing waves, and stood looking out.

"I meant to make her a captain's lady," he muttered.

"I meant to show the old hunks ashore that she should have everything he could have given her.

"There's a house with a sea-view, and a lookout top, that I meant to buy; and for rigging, why no lady in the land should have been sprucer. No wonder she frets, soiling her white hands with dirty work, and going shabby, too. What right had I to turn pirate, and tow her away from her moorings, and then make shipwreck of her? Yes, it would be better to be down below, among the wrecks—a great deal better. She must think me an enemy; I've only done her harm; I who love her better than my life."

Then he looked seawards again moodily.

A terrible storm was coming; his sailor eye saw that without a doubt. He felt it in the air, heard it in all sounds; and the leaden foaming of the distant waves, the black meeting of the sea and sky, made it manifest to anyone.

A ship had been wrecked the day before, and her wreck was lying beyond the harbor bar. Jack fell to thinking of her.

"She'll go to [illegible]," he said. The storm will [illegible] end of her. Still the [illegible] as of a [illegible] sailor feeling [illegible] troubles were nearly ended, with a kind of envy, too. It has [illegible] Bell hated him how could he [illegible] his earthly hopes had gone. The ideal that to be named the Bell Marble, would never be his, and he must limp painfully through the world to his life's end now. But he could bear that if he could only keep Bell's heart. Could he retrieve money?

He put his curly head down on his [illegible] and [illegible] strange, innocent, simple prayer:

"Please to give me money, though to keep my wife's love, and I'll [illegible] me if I am wrong, for I'm only a poor sailor adrift without a [illegible] and not a [illegible] and don't know it."

Perhaps his theology was at fault; but he had heard that it was right to pray for what he needed, and he acted on the advice practically.

After that he [illegible] looking about the beach for [illegible] excited groups, and went to [illegible].

Sailor, landsman, a square captain in his unborn clothes, an idle woman or two, and [illegible] were [illegible] whose [illegible] and [illegible] gone, and many his arm in a sling. This [illegible] looking.

"A thousand dollars for the man who brings them. Is [illegible] men venture to make money so easily? Two hours' work. I'd do it myself if I had not sprained my foot. I saw the wreck from the light-house. There will be no difficulty, and she will go to pieces before morning. A thousand dollars! There's an offer for these men, Captain Taylor."

"Only men are fond of their lives," said the captain. "Look at the sea and the sky. I should like to help you to your casket, but I can't advise these men to go. It would be murder."

"Pshaw! The fellows at our college would have done it for fun."

"A sailor would not," said the captain. "If the ship lives through the night, there's a chance."

"But can she?" asked the stranger.

"I think not," said the captain.

"Good heavens! think of it!" cried the man. "The fruits of five years' labor in Europe are in that casket. I've toiled with brain and body. I'm ruined if it is lost. There are men who would do it for a trifle. You hear my offer, all of you. Bring that casket before sunset, and I'll give you more."

Then a brown hand touched his arm, and a voice husky with emotion said:

"I'm your man, on one condition."

The gentleman turned.

"One who is not a coward," he said.

"There ain't a coward here," said Jack. "I know the danger as well as they, but promise me one thing. Promise me before these people, so that you must hold to it. The money you will give me if I get ashore again?"

"The money I have promised will be paid at once," said the gentleman.

"Hear me out, please," said Jack. "That money, if I die out there, you'll pay to my wife. Swear that, and I'm ready."

"Jack," cried the captain, "it is sheer madness."

Jack smiled; a strange, heart-broken smile enough.

"I'll try it," he said, "on that condition."

The gentleman had torn a leaf from his pocket-book, and wrote upon it hastily.

"This secures a thousand dollars to your wife," he said. "Your name?"

"Jack Marble," said the sailor.

"To Jack Marble's wife," said the man. "No danger, though; as I said before, our college boys would have made sport of it. Hurry, my man; hurry."

Jack glanced over the papers.

"Keep it for me, Captain Taylor," he said. "I'm ready now, sir."

Then he went to unmoor his boat and make her ready.

Afterward, as he dropped the oars in the water, and pulled from shore, he looked back and said in a whisper, blown from his lips as it passed them by the furious gale:

"Good-by, Bell. Good-by, darling. Good-by."

They watched him out of sight. The little bark was a mere eggshell for the storm to play with one such a night.

"He'll never come back no more, master," said a woman who stood near the gentleman, and the faces of all about them said the same.

An hour thence the tempest had burst over them, such as only one old woman in all that sea-side place could remember having known before. And then (it was fifty years or more since the day) twenty dead bodies had been cast upon the beach in the morning; bodies of fishermen caught outside the harbor bar by the storm.

There were sad hearts in the town—a town filled with sea-going folk, nearly every household of which had some dear one afloat on the ocean. But every woman there had a thought to spare from her own sorrows for poor Jack Marble and the young wife who went for him.

She had been proud and held herself above them; but they forgot that when they saw her cast down upon the sand in the gray dawn, all her golden hair about her face. She had heard the story of her husband's compact with the strangers, and knew why he had been so ready to barter his life for gold.

Knew as none there knew that he had no hope of ever coming back.

Touch that money,—not she—never, though she starved. Nor would she go back to her luxurious home, where, doubtless, now she would be welcomed. There she would die, and they should bury her in the sea, to float away and find Jack. All the world was nothing without him; nothing, she knew that. Life was worthless without Jack. And no one knew her day-hole. No one cared.

The wreck had vanished. Bits of her came in with the tide. Soon it might bring that which had been Jack to her feet. All day she watched for it, with maddening eyes, with a horrible soul-rending hope and fear mingling in her souls. But the sea brought only in the dead's little boat. Only old man in red flannel, with a turpentine upon his head, at the oars. A stranger who came up to the men on the beach, and said something to them—something that set them all a shouting, screaming, cheering, hearing Jack Marble's name with odd groups and curses; and before they told her Bell knew that her husband had been saved.

He lay in the fisherman's hut, bathed by warm and wind to all infant's weakness, and his hand over him, his lips to his, and words were spoken there that bound their hearts more firmly than they ever had been bound before.

Jack had not brought the casket, and would receive nothing from the man who had sent him forth. Bell urged him with tears in her eyes to this.

"I would not have it, Jack," she said. "It is as though I could have taken money for your life."

So with Jack's resolution the two returned to their old humble life. They were never happier, Jack said, than in these days, though afterward wealth came to them; for Bell's father relented at death, and made her his heiress. And Jack's great hope of being owner of a splendid steamer came to pass, although he made but one or two voyages in her, after all, and those with Bell.

And people who knew how rich they were wondered [illegible] that Captain Marble's wife would not be finer. Always people were dressed [illegible] as many women did. She [illegible] and so did Jack, who tried to move her often, but no one else, unless my reader guesses how those words which she had spoken [illegible] her in the night through which she wept for Jack as one dead.

How it Feels.

Those of our readers who have been scalped may like to compare their experience in this matter with that of a New York man who has recently returned from the remote West, and lost his hair in a fight with the Indians, while those who have not enjoyed the privilege may wish to know how the operation feels. He says: "Imagine some one who hates you with the utmost intensity grabbing a handful of your hair while you are lying prostrate and helpless, and giving it a sudden jerk upward with force enough almost to loosen the scalp; then, while this painful tension is not relaxed, imagine the not particularly sharp blade of a knife being run quickly around your scalp with a saw-like motion. Then let your imagination grasp if it can the effect that a strong, quick jerk on the tuft of hair to release the scalp from clinging particles that may still hold it in place would have on your nervous and physical systems, and you will have some idea how it feels to be scalped. When the Indian sawed his knife around the top of my head first a sense of cold numbness pervaded my whole body. This was quickly followed by a flash of pain that started at my feet and ran like an electric shock to my brain. That was but momentary, but it was terrible. When the Indian tore the scalp from my head it seemed, as if it must have been connected with cords to every part of my body. The pain that followed the cutting around the scalp had been frightful, but it was ecstacy compared with the torture that followed the tearing of it from my head. Streaks of pain shot to every nerve. My knees were drawn up almost to my chin, and my fingers closed convulsively together in the snow, and that was all that I remembered."

"The Air Pudding."

He was mate of a vessel commanded by a Nantucket skipper, returning from a long cruise. They had got as far as the "south shoal," when the mate went aft and reported that the provisions were entirely out. "It can't be," answered the skipper. "How can that be?" "I do no, but it's a fact." "Have you examined all the casks?" "Yes, sir." "Can't the cook scrape something out of the bread barge?" (a box the sailors' hard bread is kept in). "He's scraped it all out long ago." The crew grew clamorous, and the "old man" called them aft to take "pot luck" with him on the quarter deck. In wonder they went to see what was coming. "Now, boys," said the skipper, pointing to where Nantucket lay, and from which quarter a fresh breeze was blowing, "now, lads, I will treat you to something delicious! Open your mouths wide!" They did so. "Now, men, all your mouths and stomachs with this beautiful air pudding!" The scene was so ludicrous that it kept their spirits up until they obtained succor and a fair wind carried them into port.

Agriculture in Great Britain.

The agricultural changes in Great Britain continued to be of a marked character. The area devoted to grain crops the past year was 8,618,875 acres, which is 214,705 acres less than in 1882. Potatoes were planted on 548,000 acres, and turnips and swedes on 2,029,000 acres—all showing a slight increase; but mangolds, vetches and other green crops have declined by 21,000 acres on the figures for the previous year. Clover and other grasses show an increase of 96,500 acres. The change from tilth to permanent pasturage is again conspicuous, there being 15,062,300 acres as compared with 14,831,600 last year. Ten years ago grass covered 13,000,000 acres, while arable land has fallen during that period from 18,178,000 to 17,319,000 acres. Orchards are on the increase, and also market gardening. In the matter of live stock there is an improvement, which leads to the hope that the heavy losses of recent years will be made up.

JOHNNY JONES.

HOW HE ESCAPED IMPRISONMENT BY HIS RHYME.

An Eccentric Maine Man Who Made Words Jingle in a Funny Way.

The Bath Times tells the following story:—There used to be considerable lumber business done on Merrymeeting Bay, and there lived a noted character on the bay shore, named—say Johnny Jones, who was noted for the handy way in which he could make a rhyme. He used to steal logs from a certain man, who was Justice of the Peace, and cut them up into shingles. His arrest was caused and he was convicted, and bail was wanted for his appearance at a higher court, but he couldn't get it, so he appealed to the Justice to go his bail. "If you will make me a rhyme I will," said the Justice. He agreed to, but said he must make it from his boat. So he got into the boat and took up his paddle.

"Now, Johnny, for the rhyme," said the Justice, who was afraid he might deceive him. But Johnny was true to his promise and gave him this one: "As true as I am in this boat, and you are on the shore, I have stole forty logs from you and I'll steal forty more," and away he went. They used to elect Hogreeves at a town meeting, officers whose business it was to impound stray hogs; they also acted as fence viewers. Well, they elected a fellow named Doughty, whom old Johnny didn't like. As soon as they voted Johnny got up and got off the following: "It appears very strange to my weak brains, that men should be possessed, to pass a vote to choose a hoast to govern all the rest." A professor at Bowdoin, it is said, gave him a suit of clothes for that rhyme.

Johnny picked up a canoe one day on the bay and put it in his boom. A man named Hunter, of Topsham, heard of the find and declared he was going down to get the canoe, although it was not his. Johnny heard of it and was on the look-out for the enemy's approach. It was on a bright moonlight night that Hunter started to fulfill his oath. He unlocked the boom and proceeded to the canoe and stepped into it. Just at that moment Johnny stepped out from some bushes that grew by the shore, gun in hand, and spoke as follows: "If you put that I'll pawn my hat. I'll stand not to dispute you. I have got both powder and good shot, and I swear by gad I'll shoot you." The canoe was not taken.

An Old Story Revived.

The Broad Arrow, an English paper, reviews the following story which has been told of many soldiers and nationalities. It says: "Who is the hero of the following true story? A mild but zealous disciplinarian was briskly passing a sentinel on his way to his official residence, when he turned upon the stalwart gaurdian and demanded the reason why he did not challenge him. In vain the sentry declared that he knew him to be the——; he was emphatically told his duty was to challenge every one who approached him, and, warming with excitement, the gallant officer exclaimed, 'Challenge all, challenge me, sir! Well, then,' said the sturdy pupil, low'ering his rifle and bringing it to the charge, 'I do challenge you. Give the countersign, sir!' and the hasty superior, having in the course of his practical instruction allowed the word to slip his memory, was forthwith made a prisoner and driven into the sentry-box. So situated, the worthy preceptor was soon granted another opportunity of estimating the effects of his teaching. A policeman, passing, demanded why the sentinel had imprisoned the gentleman. 'You foolish fellow,' said he, 'why, it is the——!' But the only reply from the sentry, was the vociferous demand, 'Give the countersign!' The policeman, deeming his uniform to be a sufficient authority for passing the sentry had also forgotten to learn the word, and he too was ordered into the sentry-box, from which he and his distinguished fellow prisoner were rescued only when the sentry was relieved."

He Corrected Himself.

"I notice in a paper that it is no longer fashionable for the minister to kiss the bride at the wedding ceremony," said a wife to her husband, who was a clergyman.

"Yes," sadly responded the good man with a long-drawn sigh; "many of the pleasant features connected with the old-fashioned wedding ceremony have been discarded, and——"

"What's that?" demanded his wife ominously.

"I mean," he stammered, "that the senseless custom of kissing the bride should have been abolished long ago."

"Oh!" replied the mollified lady, resuming her paper.—Philadelphia Evening Call.

REPORTORIAL ENTERPRISE.

The Anxiety a London Journalist Caused the Police.

The London Echo newspaper was in a London police court as an interested party to one of the most ludicrous cases which ever convulsed a court. The defendant was arranged upon two charges. The first accused him of being a "vagrant, without visible means of support," and the second alleged that there was good cause to suspect that he was also a "suspicious character," perhaps a Fenian or dynamite conspirator. He had absolutely refused to give the police who arrested him any information concerning himself and had declined to give his name. When the Court demanded to know the latter the prisoner said it was "Hugh MacLaughlin," and insisted upon being addressed as "Mister, because he was a real gentleman." The grave sincerity with which this claim was put forth by the ragged and begrimed unfortunate made the court roar, and the police significantly alluded to the "Irishness of the name."

The testimony against the prisoner was that he had been detected prowling about Hanover square and placed under "shadow." When he first attracted police attention he was disguised as a match peddler, in which character he had secured entrance to many of the aristocratic residences of that neighborhood. He was subsequently tracked in movements under several other disguises and was finally arrested while tramping around collecting tribute as a troubadour with a good voice and a very bad banjo.

A SECRET MISSION.

The prisoner listened to the testimony with mingled consternation and despair, but made no defence. He, however, pleaded, with choice and eloquent rhetoric, against being committed, but the contrast between his accomplishments and the rags prejudiced his case. Finally, in desperation, the tramp admitted that he had been engaged in a secret mission, but claimed that he could prove his respectability by persons in the office of the Evening Echo. Sure of their game now, the detectives lost no time in procuring the attendance of the chief editor of the Echo. He failed at first to recognise the prisoner, but after a more careful scrutiny exclaimed, "Why, Mac! is that you?" and satisfied the Judge that the prisoner was no other than Mr. MacLaughlin, of the Echo staff, one of the best known of London journalists. He had been absent from the office for several days engaged in the task of gathering data concerning the profits of London beggars, and, unknown to his superiors, had chosen to secure a standard by playing the beggar himself. After a hearty laugh around "Mac" was liberated.

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE.

"So you have been fighting again on your way home from school!"

"Y-yes, sir."

"Didn't I tell you that this sort of business had got to stop?"

"Yes, pa, but—"

"No excuses, sir! You probably provoked the quarrel!"

"Oh, no! no! He called me names!"

"Names? What of it? When a boy calls you names walk along about your business. Take off that coat!"

"But he didn't call me names!"

"Oh, he didn't? Take off that vest!"

"When he called me names I never looked at him, but when he pitched into you I—I had to fight!"

"What! Did he call me names?"

"Lots of 'em, father! He said you lied to your constituents, and went back on the caucus and had—!"

"William, put on your coat and vest, and here's a pickel to buy peanuts! I don't want you to come up a slugger, and I wish you to stand well with your teacher, but if you can lick that boy who says I ever bolted a regular nomination or went back on my end of the ward, don't be afraid to sail in!"—Detroit Free Press.

Struck Oil.

It was a Woodward avenue car. A lady richly dressed sat in a corner of the car and said to some one with her:

"I smell kerosene oil."

"So do I," answered her friend.

One after another got into the car, and the lady in the corner sniffed suspiciously, and at last fixed her eyes upon a quiet looking little man near the door.

"I believe he's got the oil," she said in a stage whisper to her friend.

"I know it," replied the friend.

"There ought to be a law against carrying kerosene oil in the street cars. Such an odor!" and she glared at the little man.

"I shall inform the superintendent," said the first lady, aloud.

"I shall inform the president of the road," said her friend, with a fixed and glassy stare.

"Ladies," said the little man, cheerfully, "hadn't you better move? The kerosene from that lamp in the corner of the car has been dripping down on ye ever since we started, but seein' ye both knew so much I thought I wouldn't say anything."—Detroit Free Press.

OPPOSED TO PROHIBITION.

"Yes," said the Widow Flapjack, who is chief executive officer of an Austin boarding house, "yes, I must say I am very much opposed to prohibition and closing up the saloons, and all that sort of thing. It's all a base scheme against the best interests of the hotel keepers and landladys!"

"Why, I am surprised to hear you express such unchristian sentiments, and you a church member, too. How do you make out that prohibition is against the interests of the landladies?"

"If prohibition goes into effect the saloons will be closed up and take all the free lunches will stop. Now, I've noticed that among my young men boarders the dissipated ones are the most profitable. Before they come to dinner they always step into the saloon and get a sour beer or a schooner of toddy, or something of that kind, and they fill up on the free lunch, and when they come to the dinner table they don't eat hardly anything, while the steady young men who never drink just stuff themselves. Oh, my, you ought to see 'em eat! They just take the grease off, and if it was'nt for the free lunches and the 'next morning' feeling that some of the boarders suffer from occasionally, I don't know what we poor landladies would do. There'd be no grease in the business. No, I am opposed to prohibition for purely economical reasons."

And the Widow Flapjack sighed, and went out and gave orders to cut the [illegible] into [illegible] slices.—Texas Siftings.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., MAR. 6 1884.

The poll tax collected in this state in 1882-3 amounted to $136,733. It is estimated that this sum will be increased this year to 2140,000.

Thos. J. Scott, Register in the U. S. Land Office at Montgomery, has several indictments pending against him, charging him with rendering false accounts while deputy marshal. Were it not for the fact that Scott is now an office holder these indictments would never have been found. The "outs" are overhauling the "ins."

We notice in Dr. Smith's report of the geological survey of Alabama that Chilton county is embraced in the area having a rain precipitation of over fifty-six inches, which is the heaviest rain precipitation given for the State. The lightest rain fall given is for a strip of east Alabama, embracing Lee and a portion of Chambers counties, where the annual precipitation is from 32 to 44 inches.

Roscoe Conkling in reply to a reporter's question as to the future political prospects of the country said: "I pretend to no knowledge in the matter. But you may mark this, sir: of one thing I am certain in my own mind. The Democratic party will elect the next President. Remember, I do not say he will be a Democrat, but I do say that that party will be the determining factor in the result."

Carlyle once asked an Edinburgh student what he was studying for. The youth replied that he had not quite made up his mind. There was a sudden lightning flash of the old Scotchman's eye, a sudden pulling down of the shaggy eyebrows, and the stern face grew sterner as he said: "The man without a purpose is like a ship without a rudder; a waif, a nothing, a no man. Have a purpose in life, if it is only to kill and divide and sell oxen well, but have a purpose; and having it, throw such strength of mind and muscle into your work as God has given you."

People who know nothing of the newspaper business often express astonishment that papers published in the South should charge so much more for subscription than those published in the North. But the reason is plain enough to the newspaper man. It is, that owing to a variety of causes, the Southern newspaper has, usually, a comparatively small subscription list. The cost of setting up matter for a paper having 500 subscribers, is as great as that for setting up the same matter for 10,000—while the press work costs but little—leaving the white paper as the chief additional element in the cost of an edition of 500 and one of 10,000.

Jefferson first wrote the safe and conservative doctrine that Washington embodied in his farewell address: 'Peace with all nations, and entangling alliances with none.' We read to-day of United States Senators voting themselves clerks and secretaries with liberal salaries, and then appointing their sons, daughters, and wives to perform those duties. What a contrast to this was the reply of Jefferson when asked to appoint one of his own flesh and blood:

"I can find better men for every place than my own connections."

"Jefferson's standard for candidates for office were different from the civil service catechism of to-day. His requirements were three. First, is he honest? Second, is he capable? Third, will he be faithful to the Constitution?

It is a remarkable characteristic of the waiters in Paris restaurants that no matter what you may ask for, even if it be a fried piece of the moon, they will invariably reply "Yes," and either bring it to you, or, on returning, assert with sorrow that unfortunately there is no more left." It is told of Mery, the author, that by way of trying this as a joke, he peremptorily ordered of the waiter a Sphinx, a la Mayonnaise. "I am sorry to say we have no more," replied the waiter, "What, no more Sphinx?" exclaimed Mery, feigning astonishment. The waiter lowered his voice and murmured in confidential whisper: "We have some more, monsieur, but the truth is, we did not care to give them to you, as they are not quite fresh."

Educational.

State Superintendent of Education Armstrong has sent us his report for the scholastic year ending September 30th, 1883. From it we obtain some information that may prove interesting to the general public. The amount of the public school fund paid to teachers in Chilton county, during the year was for white schools $2,883.42; for colored schools $670.52. This was an average monthly pay to white teachers of $23.82 and to colored teachers $36.08 per month, on an average of 39 white and 58 colored pupils enrolled to a teacher. Amount paid the county superintendent as salary was $146.06.

The number of school districts in Chilton is 25, and the number of white schools taught during the year was 36, and the colored schools numbered 6. The total school population of the county is given as 2,654 white and 632 colored. The number enrolled in the schools 1,424 white and 354 colored. Average daily attendance in schools 741 white and 174 colored. The average length of schools for the entire year was eighty days. The statistics for the two last scholastic years compare as follows: Amount expended for our schools in 1881-2, $3,296; in 1882-3, $3,552; the number of schools taught in 1881-2 was 40 white and 8 colored; in 1882-3 the number was 36 white and 6 colored. These are some of the more interesting points of the State Superintendent's report so far as relates to Chilton county.

The Gubernatorial Question.

The following extract from the Troy Inquirer expresses our views so precisely that we republish it as it relieves us of the unnecessary task of expressing the same in an editorial of our own:

"The war on Gov. O'Neal has opened in earnest and is pushed with the zeal worthy of a better cause. We are among the opponents of his renomination, but we cannot endorse some of the violent and ungenerous thrusts that have been made against him. The demand for a change of leadership is very important and would no doubt be to the advantage of the party; but if Gov. O'Neal should be renominated he would be elected and the interests of the State would not suffer to the extent some seem to think.

The declaration of the candidacy of Hon. John M. McKleroy for Governor will be received with gladness throughout this section, and his numerous friends will be enthused by the announcement. Col. McKleroy possesses the requisite ability, the earnestness of purpose, the sincerity of nature and the progressive spirit necessary to conduct an administration of the State government in accordance with the demands and requirements of the people. He possesses pre-eminently the nerve that is so much needed at this era in the history of the State, and the determination that will have and pursue a decided and fixed policy. His familiarity with State affairs and his knowledge of the needs of the people eminently befit him for the position, while his extensive acquaintance in every county will render him a formidable competitor. He is bound to succeed."

A Tramp's Views.

A tramp, who was at one time a good and respected citizen in a certain Tennessee town, voted and worked for "no prohibition." His downfall as a respectable man dated from that hour. Whiskey was licensed, sold in his town, and he became a confirmed drunkard as the ultimate consequence. His wife and child died in a poor house, and he closed his own life in a convict's cell. His last words in telling the story of his life were written out in the shape of a poem by a newspaper reporter, and here they are:

The license was paid, two hundred good dollars,
But to it I've added my dead baby and wife.
To it I've added the manhood I've lost,
To it I've added this much of my life.
Christians may pray and preachers may preach;
But the kingdom of Christ will never prevail,
So long as for dollars we license foul murders
And legislate citizens into the jail.
There are thousands like me who still want to be saved,
Who long for the manhood they lost at the bar.
But I see no hope for us this side of the grave
So long as the Christians our life-chances mar
By working for wrong, while they pray for the right;
By talking for good, while they work for the evil;
By frowning on sin while they license its grasp,
By praying to God, while they vote for the devil.

It is reported that the Pratt saw Mill Co. ran their log train last Sunday. This is something new.

Last Friday night, about half past seven o'clock, the dwelling of Mr. Phil Mitchell was discovered to be on fire. A few neighbors arrived in time to save some bedding and a few pieces of furniture; the flames, fanned by a strong breeze, making such rapid headway that but little could be done. The property, we understand, is insured but not sufficiently to cover the loss. Mr. Mitchell has removed to the house recently vacated by Mr. Ansley.

We consider it unnecessary to reply to the strictures, in last week's paper, upon an item of ours. What the young men have said cannot injure us as we are too well known to the readers of the VIEW. In justice to our friends we deem it proper to say that the "hearsay reports" were authentic enough for us to assume all responsibility in saying what we did; and we so informed the young men.

BIJOU.

The Gubernatorial Contest.

The general comment yesterday on the appearance of Hon. John M. McKleroy's call for a special meeting of the State Executive Committee, was that he would resign and enter the contest for gubernatorial honors. While we are not authorized to say that public belief in this instance is correct, yet we are fully satisfied that it is so. Capt. McKleroy has friends in every portion of the State, and a very strong pressure has been made by them to induce him to go before the convention this year for nomination. That he will make a very formidable competitor does not admit of a doubt, and from now on the contest will be lively and interesting. His following is an enthusiastic one and they will work with a will to secure victory for their friend and choice. As stated yesterday the Advertiser will not become the partisan of any one seeking nomination at the hands of the State Convention, but will cheerfully abide by the result of its labors, satisfied that its members will be guided by what they believe to be for the best interests of the party and the State.—Advertiser.

Representative Belford has prepared a bill, which he will introduce in the House for the establishment at West Point of a preparatory school for candidates for admission to the Millitary Academy. It provides that nominations for appointment to this school shall be made in the same manner as nominations for appointment to the Millitary Academy, and that the examination of candidates for admission may be made in the Congress districts from which they are selected. It provides that persons admitted to the proposed school shall be known as provisional cadets, and that they shall have such instructions and millitary training in the preparatory school as will qualify them to fill vacancies in the corps of cadets.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promptitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all three. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, in one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and renew all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venered Diseases.

Prohibition was carried in beat 2, on Tuesday, by a majority of 46, as our Jemison correspondent informs us. The majority for prohibition at Jemison box was 43, and at Providence it was 3.

An election has been called by the prohibitionists of beat No. 3 (Benson) for April 8th. It is hoped and believed that whiskey will be voted from the beat by a large majority. In case that it is, there will be only two beats in the county where whiskey is licensed.

Died, in this county, on the 3d inst., Mr. William Mullins, aged 80 years. The deceased was probably the oldest citizen of the county, and he leaves a numerous posterity to mourn his departure. He was the father of Rev. James A. and Mr. Oliver Mullins.

Mr. Walter G. Parish, a young man afflicted with blindness, and a musician of considerable proficiency, visited this place Saturday and Sunday. He delivered an interesting lecture on Sunday afternoon at the Methodist Church. He talks well, his delivery is forcible and distinct and his illustrations clear and striking. He is from Macon, Ga. He is supporting himself by his lectures.

We regret to hear of a serious accident to Mr. Moses Robinson. He was making his way towards his home after dark, and walked into a very deep hole, where a large tree had been uprooted, leaving a sharp stump projecting from the hole. Mr. Robinson fell on the stump and had several ribs broken. The sharper portion of the stump entered the stomach for some distance, and the patient is considered in a critical condition.

Died, at Jemison, in this county, on Dec. 23d, 1883, Vivian Bertelle, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Smith. The bereaved parents were yet mourning the loss of little Vivian, when the dread messenger again appeared, and carried from the loving embrace of fond parents their only remaining child, Lillian Estelle, who died January 17th, 1884. They were born June 23d, 1883. Vivian Bertelle was six months old, and Lillian Estelle six months, three weeks and four days. They have gone where trouble is unknown; and their little lives will be added to the host that sings around the throne of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Our correspondent "Citizen" puts a query to us as to the county Democratic organization. Our information is that there has been no regular party organization in the county in some years. The old Democratic Executive Committee has acted repeatedly, and has repeatedly asked that another committee be selected. We understand that the old committee will act again in calling a mass meeting of the Democracy of Chilton to be held at Clanton during court week. The call for the mass meeting was to have been published this week, but has not yet been handed in, owing perhaps to a pressure of other duties upon the members of the old committee. It will no doubt be published next week. It is hardly necessary to add that one of the important duties of the mass meeting to be called will be the selection of a county executive committee.

It is not often that we see a real love letter published. Here is one picked up on the streets the other day by a gentleman, who left it at this office to be reclaimed by the owner, if he can be found:

Mess. Charles and Josh Hooker and two other parties were arrested Monday by Sheriff Garner, charged with breaking open and removing goods from a car on Duke's side track near Clear Creek. They were given a hearing before Squire Hawborn and Arledge, Tuesday, and were discharged.

The election for prohibition or no prohibition for this beat passed off very quietly, and the vote stood 69 for prohibition and 26 for no prohibition at this box, and at the other box the majority for prohibition was 3. Enough for us.

The Medical Society of Chilton Co. met at this place on Monday last.

Our Next Senator, Organization, &c.

VERBENA, March 4, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Dear Sir—Numerous inquiries are being made, as to who will be the next Senator, from this district, composed of the counties of Coosa, Elmore and Chilton. I am reliably informed that many of the prominent citizens of Coosa and Elmore, have already intimated their willingness to concede to Chilton county the right to select a suitable man for that position, subject to the endorsement of the next Senatorial Convention.

This is only fair play, as these counties have been honored with a Senator and the good Democratic county of Chilton never has. I think, Mr. Editor, we can show some good material in our county, for State Senator, if the proper men can be induced to allow his name to be placed before the convention; such men, for instance, as J. Carr Gibson, A. J. Brooks, Dr. Callier, W. A. Smith, Joseph Green, and no doubt many others, whose names we could place before the convention, with becoming pride; being conscious of the fact that if elected, they will prove true to the trust committed to them, and represent our district in the next legislature, faithfully, judiciously, and with dignity worthy of the position.

Let us endeavor to select such a man from our county, and if we fail, then let us unite on the best man we can find in the district, who is willing to make the sacrifice, without regard to locality. The next legislature will be a very important one, and the next political campaign, probably the most important one we have had for many years. With these facts before us, every county in the State should endeavor to bring the best men to the front.

In view of all this, I will inquire of you the status of our county organization. I am informed we have no county executive committee, the members of the old committee having resigned some time ago. If that be true should we not call a mass meeting for the county, preparatory to a reorganization. As you are well aware, an organization of the Democratic party of the county will be necessary in in order to appoint delegates to the next Democratic State Convention, and also to the Senatorial Convention of this district. Let us hear from you on the subject, in your next issue. Set the ball in motion.

As entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by their only true way, viz., Direct Application to the principal seat of the Disease. The use of this remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life. This mode of treatment does away at once with the use of nauseous and injurious drugs, and in a few days restores the patient to perfect manhood. We do not wish to say anything about this pet specialty, further than to say to you that we will give perfect satisfaction, or positively guarantee that it will give perfect satisfaction. It is endorsed by the Medical Profession as the most rational means yet discovered of reaching that seat of the very worst forms of sexual diseases. The remedy is put up in neat vials, of three sizes. No. 1 (lasting a month), $2. No. 2 (sufficient to effect a permanent cure in ordinary cases), $5. No. 3 (thought by many to be sufficient to cure the most inveterate case), $10. No. 1 is sent by mail, postage paid, to any address in the United States, Canada or Europe, on receipt of price. Full directions how to use the remedy accompany each box. Send for a Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations, which will be sent free to any address. TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. Their symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Averse to exertion of body or mind, Sometimes of Food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION. TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt, expelling all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE FEELS LIKE A NEW MAN.

"I have had Dyspepsia, with its usual symptoms, and have tried various kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the first that have done me any good. They have relieved me entirely. My appetite is splendid, food digests readily, and I feel like a natural person. I will recommend them." W. D. COWLING, Dodson, Ky.

Sold everywhere. Price 25c.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

GRAY HAIR OR WHISKERS changed in a moment to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. It imparts a natural color, acts instantaneously, does not stain the skin, and produces Whiskers in a few weeks on a smooth face. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1. Office, 44 Murray St., New York.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., MAR. 6, 1884.

The poll tax collected in this state in 1882-3 amounted to $136,-752. It is estimated that this sum will be increased this year to $140,-000.

Thos. J. Scott, Register in the U. S. Land Office at Montgomery, has several indictments pending against him, charging him with rendering false accounts while deputy marshal. Were it not for the fact that Scott is now an office holder these indictments would never have been found. The "outs" are overhauling the "ins."

We notice in Dr. Smith's report of the geological survey of Alabama that Chilton county is embraced in the area having a rain precipitation of over fifty-six inches, which is the heaviest rain precipitation given for the State. The lightest rain fall given is for a strip of east Alabama, embracing Lee and a portion of Chambers counties, where the annual precipitation is from 32 to 44 inches.

Roscoe Conkling in reply to a reporter's question as to the future political prospects of the country said: "I pretend to no knowledge in the matter. But you may mark this, sir: of one thing I am certain in my own mind. The Democratic party will elect the next President. Remember, I do not say he will be a Democrat, but I do say that that party will be the determining factor in the result."

Carlyle once asked an Edinburgh student what he was studying for. The youth replied that he had not quite made up his mind. There was a sudden lightning flash of the old Scotchman's eye, a sudden pulling down of the shaggy eyebrows, and the stern face grew sterner as he said: "The man without a purpose is like a ship without a rudder; a waif, a nothing, a no man. Have a purpose in life, if it is only to kill and divide and sell oxen well, but have a purpose; and having it, throw such strength of mind and muscle into your work as God has given you."

People who know nothing of the newspaper business often express astonishment that papers published in the South should charge so much more for subscription than those published in the North. But the reason is plain enough to the newspaper man. It is, that owing to a variety of causes, the Southern newspaper has, usually, a comparatively small subscription list. The cost of setting up matter for a paper having 500 subscribers, is as great as that for setting up the same matter for 10,000—while the press work costs but little—leaving the white paper as the chief additional element in the cost of an edition of 500 and one of 10,000.

Jefferson first wrote the safe and conservative doctrine that Washington embodied in his farewell address: 'Peace with all nations, and entangling alliances with none.' We read to-day of United States Senators voting themselves clerks and secretaries with liberal salaries, and then appointing their sons, daughters, and wives to perform these duties. What a contrast to this was the reply of Jefferson when asked to appoint one of his own flesh and blood:

"I can find better men for every place than my own connections."

"Jefferson's standard for candidates for office were different from the civil service catechism of to-day. His requirements were three. First, is he honest? Second, is he capable? Third, will he be faithful to the Constitution?

It is a remarkable characteristic of the waiters in Paris restaurants that no matter what you may ask for, even if it be a fried piece of the moon, they will invariably reply "Yes," and either bring it to you, or, on returning, assert with sorrow that unfortunately there is no more left." It is told of Mery, the author, that by way of trying this as a joke he peremptorily ordered of the waiter a Sphinx, a la Mayonnaise. "I am sorry to say we have no more," replied the waiter, "What, no more Sphinx?" exclaimed Mery, feigning astonishment. The waiter lowered his voice and murmured in a confidential whisper: "We have some more, monsieur, but the truth is, I would not care to give them to you, as they are not quite fresh."

Educational.

State Superintendent of Education Armstrong has sent us his report for the scholastic year ending September 30th, 1883. From it we obtain some information that may prove interesting to the general public. The amount of the public school fund paid to teachers in Chilton county, during the year was for white schools $2,883.42; for colored schools $670.52. This was an average monthly pay to white teachers of $23.82 and to colored teachers $36.68 per month, on an average of 39 white and 58 colored pupils enrolled to a teacher. Amount paid the county superintendent as salary was $146.06.

The number of school districts in Chilton is 25, and the number of white schools taught during the year was 36, and the colored schools numbered 6. The total school population of the county is given as 2,654 white and 632 colored. The number enrolled in the schools 1,424 white and 354 colored. Average daily attendance in schools 741 white and 174 colored. The average length of schools for the entire year was eighty days. The statistics for the two last scholastic years compare as follows: Amount expended for our schools in 1881-2, $3,296; in 1882-3, $3,552; the number of schools taught in 1881-2 was 40 white and 8 colored; in 1882-3 the number was 36 white and 6 colored. These are some of the more interesting points of the State Superintendent's report so far as relates to Chilton county.

The Gubernatorial Question.

The following extract from the Troy Inquirer expresses our views so precisely that we republish it as it relieves us of the unnecessary task of expressing the same in an editorial of our own:

"The war on Gov. O'Neal has opened in earnest and is pushed with the zeal worthy of a better cause. We are among the opponents of his renomination, but we cannot endorse some of the violent and ungenerous thrusts that have been made against him. The demand for a change of leadership is very important and would no doubt be to the advantage of the party; but if Gov. O'Neal should be renominated he would be elected and the interests of the State would not suffer to the extent some seem to think.

The declaration of the candidacy of Hon. John M. McKleroy for Governor will be received with gladness throughout this section, and his numerous friends will be enthused by the announcement. Col. McKleroy possesses the requisite ability, the earnestness of purpose, the sincerity of nature and the progressive spirit necessary to conduct an administration of the State government in accordance with the demands and requirements of the people. He possesses pre-eminently the nerve that is so much needed at this era in the history of the State, and the determination that will have and pursue a decided and fixed policy. His familiarity with State affairs and his knowledge of the needs of the people eminently befit him for the position, while his extensive acquaintance in every county will render him a formidable competitor. He is bound to succeed."

A Tramp's Views.

A tramp, who was at one time a good and respected citizen in a certain Tennessee town, voted and worked for "no prohibition." His downfall as a respectable man dated from that hour. Whiskey was licensed, sold in his town, and he became a confirmed drunkard as the ultimate consequence. His wife and child died in a poor house, and he closed his own life in a convict's cell. His last words in telling the story of his life were written out in the shape of a poem by a newspaper reporter, and here they are:

The license was paid, two hundred good dollars,
But to it I've added my dead baby and wife.
To it I've added the manhood I've lost,
To it I've added this much of my life.
Christians may pray and preachers may preach;
But the kingdom of Christ will never prevail,
So long as for dollars we license foul murders
And legislate citizens into the jail.
There are thousands like me who still want to be saved,
Who long for the manhood they lost at the bar.
But I see no hope for us this side of the grave
So long as the Christians our life-chances mar
By working for wrong, while they pray for the right;
By talking for good, while they work for the evil;
By frowning on sin while they license its grasp,
By praying to God, while they vote for the devil.

Chicago has been selected as the place for holding the meeting of the National Democratic Convention in June next.

Vernon Views.

March came in furiously, sweeping every thing before him.

The unpleasant windy weather is productive of severe colds.

A family of wandering gypsies passed through last week.

A dance on docket last Friday night. Fire interfered.

Miss Mamie Sanders, of Virginia, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. M. A. Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Brittle and Miss Procter took in Mardi Gras at Mobile.

Our school boys have the base ball fever pretty strong. They will try a game with the Clanton club Saturday.

Mrs. W. J. Mullins, of Kincheon, spent some days with her relatives here.

The patent churn man seems to be doing a good business among our people.

Misses Laura and Bettie Davis paid a visit to Autauga, last week, to attend the marriage of their sister, Miss Mary Davis to Mr. Edward Pierce.

Our guano dealers will do a thriving busines this season. Guano and cotton go together.

Mr. W. G. Parish, a blind lecturer, gave us a lecture on Morality last Friday night. He was interrupted by the alarm of fire near the church.

No services at the Baptist church last Sunday, in consequence of the pastor, Rev. J. L. Thompson, being called to Marion by the illness of his wife.

It is reported that the Pratt saw Mill Co. ran their log train last Sunday. This is something new.

Last Friday night, about half past seven o'clock, the dwelling of Mr. Phil Mitchell was discovered to be on fire. A few neighbors arrived in time to save some bedding and a few pieces of furniture; the flames, fanned by a strong breeze, making such rapid headway that but little could be done. The property, we understand, is insured but not sufficiently to cover the loss. Mr. Mitchell has removed to the house recently vacated by Mr. Ansley.

We consider it unnecessary to reply to the strictures, in last week's paper, upon an item of ours. What the young men have said cannot injure us as we are too well known to the readers of the VIEW. In justice to our friends we deem it proper to say that the "hearsay reports" were authentic enough for us to assume all responsibility in saying what we did; and we so informed the young men.

BIJOU.

The Gubernatorial Contest.

The general comment yesterday on the appearance of Hon. John M. McKleroy's call for a special meeting of the State Executive Committee, was that he would resign and enter the contest for gubernatorial honors. While we are not authorized to say that public belief in this instance is correct, yet we are fully satisfied that it is so. Capt. McKleroy has friends in every portion of the State, and a very strong pressure has been made by them to induce him to go before the convention this year for nomination. That he will make a very formidable competitor does not admit of a doubt, and from now on the contest will be lively and interesting. His following is an enthusiastic one and they will work with a will to secure victory for their friend and choice. As stated yesterday the Advertiser will not become the partisan of any one seeking nomination at the hands of the State Convention, but will cheerfully abide by the result of its labors, satisfied that its members will be guided by what they believe to be for the best interests of the party and the State.—Advertiser.

Representative Belford has prepared a bill, which he will introduce in the House for the establishment at West Point of a preparatory school for candidates for admission to the Military Academy. It provides that nominations for appointment to this school shall be made in the same manner as nominations for appointment to the Military Academy, and that the examination of candidates for admission may be made in the Congress districts from which they are selected. It provides that persons admitted to the proposed school shall be known as provisional cadets, and that they shall have such instructions and military training in the preparatory school as will qualify them to fill vacancies in the corps of cadets.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promptitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all three. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy.

Numerous testimonials poor in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

Prohibition was carried in beat 2, on Tuesday, by a majority of 46, as our Jemison correspondent informs us. The majority for prohibition at Jemison box was 43, and at Providence it was 3.

Mr. A. F. Whitkaer has employed a first-class assistant in his shoe shop at this place, and is prepared to make shoes of the best quality and the latest style at low figures. His work is durable. Try him.

An election has been called by the prohibitionists of beat No. 3 (Benson) for April 8th. It is hoped and believed that whiskey will be voted from the beat by a large majority. In case that it is, there will be only two beats in the county where whiskey is licensed.

Died, in this county, on the 3d inst., Mr. William Mullins, aged 80 years. The deceased was probably the oldest citizen of the county, and he leaves a numerous posterity to mourn his departure. He was the father of Rev. James A. and Mr. Oliver Mullins.

Mr. Walter G. Parish, a young man afflicted with blindness, and a musician of considerable proficiency, visited this place Saturday and Sunday. He delivered an interesting lecture on Sunday afternoon at the Methodist Church. He talks well, his delivery is forcible and distinct and his illustrations clear and striking. He is from Macon, Ga. He is supporting himself by his lectures.

We regret to hear of a serious accident to Mr. Moses Robinson. He was making his way towards his home after dark, and walked into a very deep hole, where a large tree had been uprooted, leaving a sharp stump projecting from the hole. Mr. Robinson fell on the stump and had several ribs broken. The sharper portion of the stump entered the stomach for some distance, and the patient is considered in a critical condition.

Died, at Jemison, in this county, on Dec. 23d, 1883, Vivian Bertelle, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Smith. The bereaved parents were yet mourning the loss of little Vivian, when the dread messenger again appeared, and carried from the loving embrace of fond parents their only remaining child, Lillian Estelle, who died January 17th, 1884. They were born June 23d, 1883. Vivian Bertelle was six months old, and Lillian Estelle six months, three weeks and four days. They have gone where trouble is unknown; and their little lives will be added to the host that sings around the throne of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Our correspondent "Citizen" puts a query to us as to the county Democratic organization. Our information is that there has been no regular party organization in the county in some years. The old Democratic Executive Committee has acted repeatedly, and has repeatedly asked that another committee be selected. We understand that the old committee will act again in calling a mass meeting of the Democracy of Chilton to be held at Clanton during court week. The call for the mass meeting was to have been published this week, but has not yet been handed in, owing perhaps to a pressure of other duties upon the members of the old committee. It will no doubt be published next week. It is hardly necessary to add that one of the important duties of the mass meeting to be called will be the selection of a county executive committee.

It is not often that we see a real love letter published. Here is one picked up on the streets the other day by a gentleman, who left it at this office to be reclaimed by the owner, if he can be found:

Messrs. Charles and Josh Hooker and two other parties were arrested Monday by Sheriff Garner, charged with breaking open and removing goods from a car on Duke's side track near Clear Creek. They were given a hearing before Squires Lawhorn and Ariedge, Tuesday, and were discharged.

The election for prohibition or no prohibition for this beat passed off very quietly, and the vote stood 60 for prohibition and 26 for no prohibition at this box, and at the other box the majority for prohibition was 3. Hurrah for us again.

The Medical Society of Chilton Co. met at this place on Monday last.

Our Next Senator, Organization, &c.

VERBENA, March 4, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Dear Sir—Numerous inquiries are being made, as to who will be the next Senator, from this district, composed of the counties of Coosa, Elmore and Chilton. I am reliably informed that many of the prominent citizens of Coosa and Elmore, have already intimated their willingness to concede to Chilton county the right to select a suitable man for that position, subject to the endorsement of the next Senatorial Convention.

This is only fair play, as those counties have been honored with a Senator and the good Democratic county of Chilton never has. I think, Mr. Editor, we can show some good material in our county, for State Senator, if the proper men can be induced to allow his name to be placed before the convention; such men, for instance, as J. Carr Gibson, A. J. Brooks, Dr. Callier, W. A. Smith, Joseph Green, and no doubt many others, whose names we could place before the convention, with becoming pride; being conscious of the fact that if elected, they will prove true to the trust committed to them, and represent our district in the next legislature, faithfully, judiciously, and with dignity worthy of the position.

Let us endeavor to select such a man from our county, and if we fail, then let us unite on the best man we can find in the district, who is willing to make the sacrifice, without regard to locality. The next legislature will be a very important one, and the next political campaign, probably the most important one we have had for many years. With these facts before us, every county in the State should endeavor to bring the best men to the front.

In view of all this, I will inquire of you the status of our county organization. I am informed we have no county executive committee, the members of the old committee having resigned some time ago. If that be true should we not call a mass meeting for the county, preparatory to a reorganization. As you are well aware, an organization of the Democratic party of the county will be necessary in in order to appoint delegates to the next Democratic State Convention, and also to the Senatorial Convention of this district. Let us hear from you on the subject, in your next issue. Set the ball in motion.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. Their symptoms indicate these complaints: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Pain in the Head, Sickness after eating, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION. TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action upon the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three great avenues of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE WHILE LIKE A NEW MAN. I have had Dyspepsia, with Liver Complaint, for years, and have tried almost all kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the first that have done me any good. In fact, they relieved me at once. By one month's use (one box) I was entirely cured. I have since had no return of the disease. TUTT'S PILLS have my unqualified praise. I recommend them to my friends. EDWARD SMITH, Fairview, Ky.

COASTING IN COLORADO.

AN EXCURSION WHICH REPEATS A FAMILIAR INCIDENT OF THE EARLY DAYS OF THE SETTLEMENT OF THAT STATE.

Rushing Down a Mile Long Mountain Road at Lightning Speed—A Frightful Accident—A Score Killed Outright.

The coasting accidents recorded this winter recall one that occurred in the early days of the settlement of Colorado, and which probably has no equal, at least in this country.

In 1865 there had developed a considerable population in Central, Black Hawk, and Nevada, three mining centres in Colorado, some 30 or 40 miles from Denver, about the Clear Creek Forks, in Gelpin County. From Nevada to Black Hawk, via Central City, there was but one main roadway, up and down which every day in the year there were two unending processions of quartz wagons. It was something like four miles from Nevada to the lower part of Black Hawk by this road. It was nearly a straight line from Nevada to Central along the road, but at one point the thoroughfare deflected to the right suddenly, and passing on down and over Clear Creek entered Black Hawk on the right hand of that stream. The grade descends in this downward journey perhaps 250 feet to the mile, and at some points is perilously steep for vehicles, while at others for a short distance there may be a comparatively level stretch, only to be broken again by a sudden falling away of the rocks. Of course, the necessities of the time had developed a very fair road-bed so far as its surface was concerned. Constant teaming had worn away the rough, uneven places, and the gullies and ragged parts had been filled in, so that ore wagons, with their strings of mules steadily pulling at the heavy loads, could be hauled with comparative ease or by strong brakes kept steady in descending the heavy grade.

It was just after New Year's, in 1865, that a party was made up to take a sleigh ride over this coarse. The night chosen for the great coasting party was very cold, the thermometer showing a registry of about zero, but this gave a crispiness to the snow, and lent an exhilaration to the light air that sent the blood dancing through the veins. The managers of the coasting party—the event had been looked forward to with a great deal of interest—had arranged by conference with teamsters and others to have the road clear about 12 o'clock that night, which was easily accomplished, there being but little traffic at that hour. An immense "pung" had been secured—a rough sleigh, or runners, rather, about twelve feet long, which was calculated would hold fully twenty-five people.

For the purpose of directing the course of this sleigh a steering contrivance was placed in the rear, and this, it was believed, would enable the occupants to turn the angle in the road, in Central, where the stretch to Black Hawk began. It was not found difficult to secure enough to make up the party, and five ladies even bravely, if not foolhardy, insisted on being counted in. At the time agreed upon all had congregated at Nevada and were soon crowded upon the pung, and, a stout fellow at the tiller, the send-off was given. The first half-mile was a comparatively light grade, the sleigh sped along at a splendid rate, and all on board were joyous in the prospect of a successful run to the bottom of the long hill. The sleigh soon showed signs of increasing speed as the grade increased, and those who were at all inclined to manifest timidity earnestly grasped the side of the pung or clung closely to one another. There being danger of too great speed, a peculiar lever-like brake had been provided. It reached under the pung and was easily worked. With this to check the mad career of the sleigh it was believed no danger could arise that could not be promptly met.

Down the hill they flew. Once, as Central was neared, a collision with a belated miner's team seemed imminent, but vociferous warnings enabled them to pass in safety. Down, down, down they flew, and Central's main street was entered. This thoroughfare, hardly wide enough for two teams to pass each other, and which, in day-time, presented a busy and noisy scene, was now deserted by vehicles; but the sidewalks were thronged with people who had congregated to witness the great coasting event of the season. As the sleigh rushed down in its wild course a loud, hoarse shout went up, in which the pleasure party joined. By this time the sleigh was sweeping on at most terrific speed, which fairly took away the breath of those who stood by gazing at the strange spectacle. It seemed as though the sleigh had no sooner appeared upon the scene than it had shot out of sight and into space; it was one sudden dash and then gone.

As the bend in the road was reached, those who had the management of the sleigh put all their energies to the evolution that was to carry them past all obstacles. The slightest miscalculation might prove fatal; a moment's delay might jeopardize their lives; a failure of their brake or steering apparatus might send them all to heaven.

One of the participants in that awful ride said afterward, that none appeared to realize the danger that beset them until the turn in the road was approached. The sled had gathered such momentum that it seemed impossible to stop it, and the steadiest hand and the strongest hand appeared to be of little avail. The shouts of merriment instantly died out. All was still as death. Men clutched each other in frantic grasp, and the ladies, as brave before, looked despairingly for help. As the turn on the lower right-hand side was reached the sleigh, or runners, rather, about twelve feet long, which was calculated would hold fully twenty-five people. Like nearly all the buildings of those days, it was constructed of logs material. It stood close to the sidewalk, which was slightly higher than its floor. The rear of the store was, perhaps, twenty-five feet from the ground or rocks, and was supported there by large timbers. The pung did every way imaginable from that road on the right-hand side on the way to Black Hawk.

As the sled approached this corner an effort was made to check and turn it, but the same power the brake refused to perform its work, and, the "rudder" defeating the front end, caused it to turn with a suddenness that threw four of the occupants far out to the opposite side of the road. Like a flash of lightning the sled bounded across the sidewalk, and struck the drug store with such force that it cleaved its way through like an ax through a muslin sheet. There was a sudden crash, a loud cry, a fall, and the next instant all was quiet, save the groans of the injured ones. The people who had been standing on the street at this point to witness the flashing by of the party hurried over. The pung had passed through the store, demolishing its contents, and had fallen upon the rocks and snow where it lay wrecked. Here and there, far and wide, were the pleasure party who had made the fearful plunge. Six of them—two ladies—were found dead, their skulls crushed and their bodies crushed almost out of human shape. The living were terribly maimed, and such as were sensible cried piteously for aid. They were cared for tenderly, but before daybreak four more had paid the penalty for their rashness in death. Those who witnessed the flight of that sleigh through the store, like an arrow through an apple, declare that it was the most awful sight they ever beheld. Such was the outcome of this great coasting excursion up among the Colorado mountains away back in the early days of that country's settlement. It served as a permanent cure for such foolhardy enterprises.

Trichinosis in Germany.

A letter from Berlin says: The recent outbreak of trichinosis in several villages of the Prussian province of Saxony has not failed to attract general attention, a special commission having even been deputed by the French Government to study the epidemic on the spot. Dr. Stammer, a physician residing at the village of Emersleben, in the centre of the infected region, has just published the first detailed accounts in a scientific journal, from which I take the most interesting passages. Emersleben is situated about four miles from the district capital, Halberstadt, and numbers about 760 inhabitants. For many years it has been the custom in this neighborhood to use minced but uncooked pork as food in great quantities, the field laborers especially being accustomed to eat this meat spread on bread for their lunch. This was again the case during the past summer. On the 14th and 15th of September last, a large quantity of minced, uncooked pork had been consumed, the entire supply coming from the same butcher, at Emersleben. The first symptoms of the epidemic already appeared among some persons on the same day.

The first patients were treated on September 20, and the last on October 15. The total number was 257, of whom 50, or about 20 per cent. died. The greatest number of deaths took place during the fifth and sixth weeks, when 10 and 11 succumbed respectively. The ages of the patients whose cases resulted fatally ranged from 12 to 76. The sufferers also included many children, the youngest of whom had not yet completed its second year, but they all escaped with their lives, except one boy of 12. Those persons who had eaten the pork after cooking or frying, suffered for from two to three weeks from stiffness of the limbs and some swelling under the eyes, but none were obliged to keep their beds. All persons, however, who had consumed more than a quarter of a pound of the meat have died. Not one of the remedies employed by the physicians had the slightest effect.

An Hour at the Old Play-Ground.

I sat an hour to-day, John, beside the old brook stream where we were schoolboys in old time, when manhood was a dream; the brook is choked with fallen leaves, the pond is dried away, I scarce believe that you would know the dear old place to-day. The schoolhouse is no more, John, beneath our locust trees; the wild rose by the window side no more waves in the breeze; the scattered stones look desolate; the sod they rested on has been plowed up by stranger hands since you and I were gone. The chestnut tree is dead, John, and what is sadder now—the broken grape vine of our swing hangs on the withered bough; I read our names upon the bark and found the pebbles rare laid up beneath the hollow side as we piled them there. Beneath the grass-grown bank, John, I looked for our old spring, that bubbled down the alder path three paces from the spring; the rushes grow upon the brink, the pool is black and bare, and not a foot this many a day it seems has trodden there. I sat me on the fence, John, that lies as in old time—the same half panel in the path we used so oft to climb—and thought how o,er the barn of life our playmates had passed on, and left me counting on this spot the faces that are gone!—The Index.

CHOPPING WOOD.—You must know something of your business, even if it is wood chopping. An old Ken Claire logger says that if you are cutting small lumber, which may be severed at from one to a half dozen blows, an ax with a long, thin blade, and as little bevel as is compatible with strength, is chosen, and at every stroke the blade is buried to the helve. If the purpose is to fell large trees or cut heavy timber, and thin cuts are necessary to its formation; therefore, for this purpose, an ax having a thick, heavy bevel, and cutting not so deep is selected. The bevel, now cutting as a wedge, forces out the chip at the same stroke by which the incision is made.

A RAPIDLY INQUISITIVE.

A Stranger Gets Out a Term Only to Experience Disappointment.

"Tell Southtown among the hills to that delightfully unassuming portion of our glorious commonwealth known as "Down East," a small, but ambitious little city, which we will call, for purposes of convenience and discrimination, Southtown.

There is no railroad to Southtown, and the stage routes are of tedious length. Consequently few travelers visit the city, save those who have business of some importance.

One evening, however, there climbed out of the daily stage at the door of the principal hotel a neatly attired person, who carried a small hand-bag. He entered the office, wrote a very commonplace name in the register, and desired to be shown to his room.

Who was he?

That was what every loafer in the office asked, and before the new-comer had sat down in the quiet of his room above, twenty-five persons in the room below knew his name—if it was his name.

What was his business?

The stranger had not registered that; Southtown must wait and see.

But, strangely enough, he did not seem to have any business. He came down to tea, and then went back to his room. He walked down to the post-office next morning, smoking a very fragrant cigar, obtained two or three letters, and then came back to his room. After dinner he sat down in the office for a short time, and some of the bolder spirits engaged him in conversation. He seemed social enough, but somehow his talk was all general; he would say nothing personal.

Thus matters went on for several days, and all the city became curious. Vague rumors were afloat that his name, for the best of reasons, was an alias, and it began to be considered a patriotic duty to catechise him.

Several essayed to do it, and although the stranger answered every direct inquiry with courtesy, yet there was such an evident coolness on his part when the topics began to concern himself that no one dared to ask the question nearest the beating heart of the city.

At length the Mayor, a man of great suavity and boldness, engaged to brave the Douglas in his hall, and ask him a few questions in smooth but pointed Anglo-Saxon.

He had not yet met the mysterious stranger, and so he dropped in accidentally, and was introduced. He opened fire at once:

"Ever in Southtown before?"

"No."

"Going farther, I presume?"

But whether he presumed correctly or not the stranger apparently did not feel bound to say, so he was silent.

"How much longer shall we have you with us?" queried the Mayor, leaving presumptions and returning to interrogations.

"About two weeks."

The crowd leaned forward as one man.

"Ah, indeed! Are you traveling for pleasure?"

"No."

"Pardon me, but may I ask, not from idle curiosity, but for certain reasons, what business you represent?"

A visible thrill ran through the small assembly. That was a point-blank shot. Would he dodge?

"You are the Mayor, I believe?" said the stranger.

"Yes."

"Then I don't mind telling you; in fact, I suppose you ought to know."

"Yes?"

"Well, I stole a saw-mill" (sensation) "and got away with it all right; but, like a fool, I went back after the dam, and they caught me. I was tried and found guilty, and the judge gave me my choice; six months in jail or three weeks in Southtown; and, like another condemned idiot, I took Southtown."

A solemn hush followed this frank disclosure, and the stranger, lighting one of his odoriferous cigars, strolled away to the post-office, and was soon afterward seen intently reading an official-looking document that he received through the mail. As he left town the next morning, it was supposed that his sentence had been unexpectedly remitted and that the official document was a pardon.—Harper's Drawer.

Whitewash for Buildings.

The best whitewash for out-door work is made of lime fixed by some preparation which fixes it and makes it adhere better. A common mixture is as follows: Half a bushel of lime is slacked in a clean barrel, with as much boiling water as will cover it five inches deep, and stirred well until it is smooth. Water is then added to reduce it to a proper thickness, and two pounds sulphate of zinc and one pound of salt are dissolved in it. It is then ready for use. Three pounds of yellow ochre added will make a cream color; lampblack makes a gray or pearl color; four pounds of brown amber, one pound of Indian red, and one pound of lampblack gives a fawn or light brown, and the amber with more black makes a brown-stone color.

A Brave General.

At the storming of Warsaw, the principal battery was only defended by two battalions, but with such bravery as history can hardly parallel. When it was evident that it could no longer hold out, several privates of the artillery seated themselves on powder barrels and blew themselves up. But the greatest of General Skrzinski was truly heroic; having lost one foot, he was, at his earnest request, placed on a stool, and placed on the altar of the desperately-defended chapel, where he continued to give orders until the last of his comrades was cut down, when, drawing forth two pistols, he with one shot a Russian who was rushing upon him, and with the second, "To the Polish general!" fired the other into his own heart.

A NEW TRIAL SERMON.

WHAT AN OLD PRISONER HEARD IN ADDITION.

How He Contributed to His Own Conversion by Overhearing the Prayer of Another Prisoner in Behalf of Sinful Humanity.

The chair of the —— Street Church gave a service of song on New Year's eve.

They began it with that beautiful and comfortable prayer of the ages, whose brief and simple petitions embody the needs of all souls, "Our Father, who art in Heaven."

They chanted it in a tender minor key, each word distinctly articulated, and falling like the dew of Heaven into the hearts bowed there. At a certain place in the melodious recitative, they repeated:

"For—give—us—our—trespasses—as we forgive those who trespass—against us."

A man sat in a prominent place there, on whose silvered head the soft-blended light from the stained glass of the chancel windows fell like rays of glory. As the choir, in that sweet, soft monotone of harmony, repeated the petition of the prayer this man's proud head sank lower and lower, until it touched his breast in an abasement of anguish or humiliation, for to him each simple word was an arrow of conviction.

"Forgive—us—our—trespasses—as we forgive those who trespass against us." He called himself a Christian, yet at that very moment his own flesh and blood was perishing for want of help, which he could give. He called himself a Christian, and gave liberally to the cause of Christ, but here he failed to do one of His first commands. He had spurned from his door in this time of peace and reconciliation his only child, who a few years ago had left him to marry the man of her choice. He had closed his door and his heart against her, and when she humbled a pride as strong and rebellious as his own, which indeed she had inherited from him, with her hair and eye, and begged for help for her dying child, he had spurned her from him with these cruel words:

"Go! you have made your bed—now lie in it!"

He had said to himself that he was right; he had recalled high-sounding examples to aid him—had written on the fly-leaves of the books she had left:

"How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is To have a thankless child!"

Poor Nellie! as if she had not suffered, too!

And now all other thoughts—all vindictive resolves—were overwhelmed in that softly-surging sea of melody.

"Forgive—us—our—trespasses—as we—forgive—those—who—trespass—against—us!"

* * * * * * *

It was New Year's eve. In a squalid part of a great city, in the most miserable room of a most miserable tenement house, lay a little dying child. Its white and wasted face shone among the few dark rags of poverty, like the evening stars, and the dark eyes, soon to close on earthly trouble, were feverbright in the rays of the flickering candle. A woman, young, pallid, dishevelled, with a sort of reckless recklessness dawning in her set face, knelt by the baby sufferer, and now and then wet the parched lips with all the nourishment they had tasted for many hours, a drop of cold water.

"Mamma! Mamma!" rang out the little voice strong and shrill with pain, "I can't see 'ou."

"I'm right here, darling; no one shall separate us." With a fierce shiver the woman added: "Not even in death!"

A peal of bells rang out, it was midnight. All the good church people were getting up from their knees, shaking hands and wishing each other a happy New Year!

"Ring out the want, the care, the sin, Ring out the grief that saps the mind."

"Mamma!" cried the little quivering voice of the child, "I 'ant to say my p'ayers befo' I die."

The mother took the waxen hand in hers, and knelt by the miserable bed, and soon the two voices blended in their nightly recital of the fevered petition. They neither of them noticed when the door opened, and they had reached the clause, "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," when a loud firm voice responded,

"Amen!" and Nellie rose and was clasped in her father's arms.

I hope the —— Street Church choir will chant that prayer this New Year's eve. Indeed, I have good reason for knowing that they have been privately advised that it will be expected of them. For Nellie and her father and that sweet child will be there, the happiest trio in the city, and when the wild bells "ring out the old, ring in the new," they will be on their knees, hand clasped in hand, to welcome in their new year of peace, forgiveness and prosperity, but above all to join with thankful hearts in a silent response to that pathetic and remembered petition to both:

"For—give—us—our trespasses—as we—forgive those who trespass—against us."

M. QUAD.

Not Wanted.

Half an hour after the west-bound train over the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee Railroad had steamed out, a young man who was engaged to be married and was behind time arrived.

"Hire a locomotive!" a policeman said. The youth, on ascertaining that the Superintendent would supply him with a locomotive for $40, said he would telegraph to the girl's father about it, and let the Superintendent know. Half an hour later the youth said he should not want the locomotive, as the girl's father had telegraphed, "Susan changed her mind yesterday, and was married to Frank."

The skeleton of a man holding in his hand a lunarn has been exhumed in Chicago, and the people assert that it is the remains of old Diogenes, who went around looking for an honest man.

CITY OF THE SPHINX.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Weekly Call.

WASHINGTON, December 29, 1884.

Editor Weekly Call: The upper portion of Vermont is one of the picturesque regions of America, during the autumnal months of the blustery days of winter. It affords every opportunity for the tourist, provided he chooses the proper season, but the present time is not that season. Still there are men and women here who not only endure this climate, but praise it unstintingly, and that, too, in the face of physical hardships the most intense. The writer heard of a striking illustration of this a few days since which is given herewith:

Mr. Joseph Jacques is connected with the Vermont Central railroad in the capacity of master mason. He is well advanced in years, with a ruddy complexion and hale appearance, while his general bearing is such as to instantly impress one with its strict honor and integrity. Several years ago he became afflicted with most distressing troubles, which prevented the prosecution of his duties. He was anguid, and yet restless, while at times a dizziness would come over him which seemed almost blinding. His will power was strong, and he determined not to give way to the mysterious influence which seemed undermining his life. But the pain and annoying symptoms were stronger than his will, and he kept growing gradually worse. About this time he began to notice a difficulty in drawing on his boots, and it was by the greatest effort that he was able to force his feet into them. In this manner several weeks passed by, until finally one night, while in great agony, he discovered that his feet had, in a short while, swollen to enormous proportions. The balance of the narrative can best be described in his own words. He said:

"When my wife discovered the fact that I was so bloated, she sent for the doctor immediately. He made a most careful examination and pronounced me in a very serious condition. Notwithstanding his care, I grew worse, and the swelling of my feet gradually extended upward in my body. The top of my head pained me terribly; indeed, so badly that at times it seemed almost as if it would burst. My feet were painfully cold, and even when surrounded with hot flannels and irons felt as if a strong wind were blowing on them. Next my right leg became paralyzed. This gave me no pain, but it was exceedingly annoying. About this time I began to spit blood most freely, although my lungs were in perfect condition, and I knew it did not come from them. My physicians were careful and untiring in their attentions, but unable to relieve my sufferings. My neighbors and friends thought I was dying and many called to see me, fully twenty-five on a single Sunday that I now recall. At last my agony seemed to culminate in the most intense, sharp pains I have ever known or heard of. If red hot knives sharpened to the highest degree had been run through my body constantly they could not have hurt me worse. I would spring up in bed, sometimes as much as three feet, cry out in my agony and long for death. One night the misery was so intense that I arose and attempted to go into the next room, but was unable to lift my swollen feet above the little threshold that obstructed them. I fell back upon the bed and gasped in my agony, but felt unable even to breathe. It seemed like death.

"Several years ago Rev. Dr. J. E. Rankin, now of Washington, was stationed here as pastor of the Congregational church. We all admired and respected him, and my wife remembered seeing somewhere that he had spoken in the highest terms of a preparation which had cured some of his intimate friends. We determined to try this remedy, accordingly sent for it, and, to make a long story short, it completely restored my health, brought me back from the grave, and I owe all I have in the way of health and strength to Warner's Safe Cure, better known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am positive that if I had taken this medicine when I felt the first symptoms above described, I might have avoided all the agony I afterward endured, to say nothing of the narrow escape I had from death."

In order that all possible facts bearing upon the subject might be known, I called on Dr. Oscar F. Fassett, who was for nineteen years United States examining surgeon, and who attended Mr. Jacques during his sickness. He stated that Mr. Jacques had a most pronounced case of Albuminuria or Bright's disease of the kidneys. That an analysis showed the presence of albumen and casts in great abundance and that he was in a condition where few if any ever recover. His recovery was due to Warner's Safe Cure.

Mr. John W. Hobart, general manager of the Vermont Central railroad, stated that Mr. Jacques was one of the best and most faithful of his employes, that his sickness had been an exceedingly severe one and the company were not only glad to again have his services, but grateful to the remedy that had cured so valuable a man.

Mr. James M. Foss, assistant superintendent and master mechanic of the Vermont Central railroad, is also able to confirm this.

I do not claim to be a great discoverer, but I do think I have found in the above a most remarkable case, and knowing the unusual nature of Bright's disease feel that the public should have the benefit of it. It seems to me a remedy that can accomplish so much in the last stages ought to do even more for the first approach of this deceptive yet terrible trouble. F. B.

Making Ice Cream With Snow.

At Miss Parlos's school for cooking in New York, the articles cooked and served before the class were ice cream, quince iced pudding, jellies in baskets and other ways, and Swiss pudding with creamy sauce. Miss Parlos opened the lesson with cesago jelly. While the jelly was cooking the lecturer prepared Swiss pudding, which she stated was a most delicate kind of batter pudding.

The preparation of a gallon of excellent ice cream in half an hour's time was a noteworthy feature of the lesson. Miss Parlos took three pints of cream and a cup and a half of sugar, which she beat to a cream with a churn, adding for flavoring a tablespoonful of vanilla. When the whole was stiff the cream was put in the can of the freezer. Miss Parlos here explained that cream may be too rich as well as too poor to beat well. Fine Alderney cream, must be diluted one half with water and strained through a fine wire sieve to remove heavy clots before it is used. Large pans of snow were now brought in to freeze the cream. If the snow was dry a small portion of water must be added to it. Three pints of coarse salt were used in freezing the gallon of cream made. Five inches of snow was first put in the tub around the tin can of cream, then a layer of salt was sprinkled over it, and the whole was packed down firmly with a small wooden spade. Snow and salt were then added alternately and packed down until the snow reached the edge of the tub. The crank of the freezer was then turned steadily for twenty minutes, when the ice cream was declared ready and was turned out and served.

SUICIDES.—It is claimed that $10,000 has been spent at Ticonderoga, N. Y., in arranging for melting iron by a new process devised by a French inventor. The iron, instead of being melted and run off into pigs, is heated to what is called a sponge heat, and all impurities are then extracted, leaving the refined product so cold that it may be cut with a knife. It is said that by this new process a saving of $20 a ton is effected.

"THEIR NUMBERS REMAIN."

A Washington letter says: Miss Douglass's marriage was a surprise even to its own family. In the morning he went into the Register's office, and, after a few moments' whispered conversation, the Register took down his big book and filled out a blank. Mr. Douglass paid his fee and went away, after urging the registrar to make no announcement of what had transpired. The news did not keep, however, and in a short time it became known about the City Hall that a marriage license had been issued for Frederick Douglass, aged 68, to wed Miss P. Hill, aged 35. Mr. Douglass's age is mere guesswork. He does not know whether he is 60 or 70 years old, but surmises that he is about 65. His hair, which is abundant, is gray, and his beard is white. Miss Hill, who is from Avon, N. Y., is a very pretty brunette, a white woman, who has been employed in Mr. Douglass's office for a year or more as a copyist. Mr. Douglass is the Register of Columbia. While those in his employ have been aware that he was very kind to this woman, nobody dreamed that he had any idea of marrying her. When the news was taken to his daughter she was overcome.

About 6 o'clock in the evening Mr. Douglass, with the bride and a friend, drove to the residence of a Methodist clergyman, and were married. Then Mr. Douglass took his bride to his home, which is a fine house situated on the eastern branch of the Potomac, just opposite the navy yard. There was a wedding supper, and the bride and groom left for a wedding tour.

The colored people of the District express great regret that Mr. Douglass has seen fit to take a white woman for a wife. Mr. Douglass associates more with the white than with the colored population.

How the Chinese Scoop Coins.

There is a $5 bogus coin, says the New Orleans States, that has for some time been passing current outside of the banks in the Pacific States, which has recently appeared in Chicago and other Western cities, to the surprise of the Government detectives. This coin, it is said, is manipulated by the "Heathen Chinee, and so skillfully is the work done that it requires an expert to detect its spurious character. They put the coin on a small lathe and with a hard tool like a fine graver's tool they hollow the middle as deftly as it is possible to do it. They fill the cavity with a mixture of platinum and lead, remill the coin, gild its edge, and the work is done. The coin is equal in weight to the genuine, and by some deft process the original ring is preserved. They take from a $5 piece gold to the value of $1.50, from a $10 piece $2.50, and from a $20 piece about $7.50. Their work is almost perfect, but they are closely watched, and their natural timidity keeps the number of "artists" small indeed.

A Case Not Beyond Help.

Dr. M. H. Hinsdale, Kenawee, Ill., advises us of a remarkable case of consumption. He says: "A neighbor's wife was attacked with violent lung disease, and pronounced beyond help from quick consumption. As a last resort the family was persuaded to try Dr. Wm. Dealers in Commercial Fertilizers, and sole and only dealers in

"PLANTER'S BEST" GUANO.

Also for Sale a full line of English Acid Phosphates, and genuine German Kainit.

Fertilization the Only Remedy.

The fertilization of our soil is the only solution of the agricultural problem of our section of country. A bounteous and lavish nature gave us a country that would compare favorably with any under the sun in point of fertility of the soil, but a constant and unvaried cultivation of sixty years or more has well-nigh impoverished it and made it unprofitable to cultivate.

The use of fertilizers accomplishes the double purpose of reinvigorating our wasted soil and making it possible to realize as much from one acre as we have heretofore realized from three to four acres, and it requires no mathematical demonstration to show that the saving in labor is in the same ratio. The farmer who intelligently and systematically uses fertilizers, whether of acid phosphate, ground bone, German kainit or what not, is but carrying into effect the old saying, that "he who causes two blades of grass to grow where but one grew before is a benefactor of mankind." More than that, he not only benefits his kind but wisely benefits himself by a yield of from two to four hundred per cent. greater than he would have gotten by pursuing the time honored but losing system of his forefathers.

No sane man, or any man who has mind enough to recognize the patent fact that two and two make four, can doubt for an instant that the intelligent use of fertilizers will pay largely in excess of the amount invested in them. Instances are numerous to support the assertion. Countries whose soils have been wasted and worked for centuries have in the past fifty years advanced wonderfully in agricultural growth. But for the use of fertilizers it would be impossible for the teeming millions of France and Germany to exist a year—they have exhausted the gifts of nature and by the use of artificial means have supplied her place so that the soils of those two countries produce as well as in their virginity centuries ago.

The State of Georgia is to-day the wealthiest in the South by several millions of dollars. Naturally its soil is not one-half so good as in the State of Alabama, but her people, wisely recognizing the fact that it was the extreme of folly to try to make crops on a barren soil, resorted to the use of fertilizers with results that have astonished the world and made Georgia the first cotton producing State in the South and added materially to her wealth. With all our great mineral wealth and vast extent of farming lands the taxable property of Georgia is $300,000,000, while ours is only half that sum. The figures speak for themselves. Both being agricultural States, what wealth there is in either must have been accumulated from agricultural pursuits; yet with the advantage of soil and large investments in mining industries in our favor Georgia has double our wealth. The secret is in this: her people for several years past have used fertilizers and the differences is attributable to this fact. The same may be said of North Carolina; whose soil is notoriously the poorest in the Union, yet cotton raising pays in North Carolina as shown by the increased product of cotton in that State each year, with the climate against her in addition. Before the war and for several years afterwards very little cotton was raised in North Carolina, her soil was so poor it would not pay, but by the use of fertilizers they have gradually increased the product until that State threatens to rival some of its more Southern neighbors.

With all the facts staring us in the face and with an exhausted soil yearly crying for sustenance, let us canvass the subject in a liberal spirit and give fertilization a full, fair, and honest trial. That it is well worth the effort can not for an instant be doubted. The results in our sister States of Georgia and North Carolina are too striking in a paying way to admit of doubt.

The year of 1883 was notoriously a bad crop year, but the experience of those farmers who used commercial fertilizers was gratifying in the extreme, in spite of the popular fallacy that the use of fertilizers during a year when the seasons are unfavorable is a detriment rather than an advantage, and to support our position that it will ALWAYS pay to use fertilizers, we have but to refer to the testimonials of some of the leading farmers of this section, published in this sheet, men whose integrity and intelligence no one can question.

It is within but comparatively a few years that the attention of farmers and planters has been turned to the use of what are termed special or commercial manures. When the country was first settled, the soil was new, and capable, in almost any section, of successive croppings without exhaustion; and land being plenty and cheap, it was thought to be almost useless to labor hard to renew old, worn out fields; the settlers preferred to emigrate and push into new lands, where the soil would yield abundant returns without resort to fertilizers, traveling, perhaps, hundreds of miles through a trackless forest and clearing the land at great cost and inconvenience. This was particularly the case in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and latterly in Alabama and Tennessee. But as the best lands throughout the South have about been taken up, and when by the use of fertilizers better results can be more cheaply attained by building up the old soil in preference to searching for new lands, it is worse than folly for our people to be emigrating to great distance at much expense and inconvenience in quest of new lands.

The Northern farmers early learned to husband and use the manures made on the farm, and have never felt the necessity of roaming over the face of the earth in search of fresh land, preferring to remain at home and draw the comforts and conveniences of life about them. Within a few years, as knowledge of all kinds has been more diffused, and the great advantages to be derived from nearness to the large markets of the East, West and South have been considered, agriculturists have taken into serious consideration the more extended use of all kinds of manures; fast becoming satisfied by experiment and trial, that to add to the fertility of the soil without too much outlay is infinitely better than to leave home in search of new and apparently more productive fields. In fact, this question is pretty well settled in the minds of all our foremost farmers and planters. It therefore becomes simply a matter of how much a man can afford to pay for outside material to raise any certain crop or crops; and when he becomes satisfied it will pay, he owes it to himself and country to use it.

"Planter's Best" Guano.

The year just closed witnessed our first trial in the Commercial Fertilizer line. At the beginning we informed our friends that we had tried to select for their use only the finest goods, and the season has been one to put them to their test. The "Planter's Best" guano that so well stood the test, we again offer for sale. We are satisfied beyond a doubt that it will pay any year, how much, if season and all attending circumstances are most favorable, no one can say, for if it doubled and quadrupled the crop last year as many of our customers say it did, only the experiment itself can tell what it will do under different circumstances. We still continue to buy the "Planter's Best" outright for cash and paying what it ought to be worth assures the fact that we get only the best.

We feel highly gratified at the favorable expression of opinion we have received from some of the most successful planters in reference to results obtained from the use of the "Planter's Best" guano the past season under most unfavorable circumstances, and it is with great pride and pleasure that we refer to their testimonials published in another part of this paper.

We conceive it to be our duty to our customers to refrain from the publication of testimonials as to the amounts realized from the extravagant use of our "Planter's Best" on small patches of land, as it is a well-known fact that the liberal use of any vegetable and mineral matter containing fertilizing properties in the right propotion will produce wonderful yields; and thinking as we do that the best criterion by which to establish the excellence that we claim for "Planter's Best" guano is its use on large bodies of land, we only publish such testionials as refer to its practicable use although we have numerous testimonials as to wonderful yield of cotton and other products from small bodies of land. Our readers will observe that the planters whose testimonials we publish live in this immediate section and are practical and intelligent men, and we will be glad to have any one desiring to use our fertilizers write to them on the subject.

Prof. W. C. Stubbs now the chemist of the Agricultural Department in furnishing us his analysis last year said: "I regard the "Planter's Best" as fully equal to any now on our market, and sincerely hope the day not far distant when all fertilizers sold in this State will be up to this one in its valuable ingredients."

This gives a commercial value, $23.26

Formula for Composting with Cotton Seed and Stable Manure.

Stable Manure	700 pounds
Cotton Seed (green)	700 pounds
English Acid Phosphate	700 pounds
	2,100 pounds

Spread under a shelter a layer of Stable Manure four inches thick; on this sprinkle a portion of our English Acid Phosphate; next spread a layer of Cotton Seed three inches thick; wet these thoroughly with water, and then apply more of our English Acid Phosphate; next spread another layer of Stable Manure three inches thick, and continue to repeat these layers in the above order, and in proportion to the quantity of each used to the ton, until the material is consumed. Cover the whole mass with Stable Manure, or scrapings from the lot of one or two inches thick. Allow the heap to stand in this condition until a thorough fermentation takes place, which will require from three to six weeks, according to circumstances, dependent upon a proper degree of moisture and the strength of the materials used. When the cotton seed are thoroughly killed, cut down through the layer with a sharp hoe or mattock; pulverise and shovel into a heap, where the fermentation will be renewed, and the compost still further improved. Let it lie two weeks after cutting down; it will then be ready to use.

Formula for Composting with Stable Manure, Cotton Seed, and our Genuine German Kainit.

Stable Manure	900 pounds
Our English Acid Phosphate	200 pounds
Our Genuine German Kainit	100 pounds
Cotton Seed	900 pounds
Our English Acid Phosphate	200 pounds
Our Genuine German Kainit	100 pounds
	2,400 pounds

Take thirty bushels of well rotted stable manure or well rotted organic matter, as leaves, muck, &c., and scatter it about three inches thick upon a piece of ground so situated that water will not stand on it, but shed off in every direction.

The thirty bushels will weigh about nine hundred pounds; then take about two hundred pounds of our English Acid Phosphate and one hundred pounds of our Genuine German Kainit and mix thoroughly; then scatter evenly on the manure. Take next thirty bushels of green cotton seed and distribute evenly over this pile, and wet them thoroughly; they will weigh about nine hundred pounds. Take again two hundred pounds of our English Acid Phosphate and one hundred pounds of our Genuine German Kainit, mix, and spread over the seed. Begin again on the manure and keep on that way, building up your heap layer by layer until you get it as high as convenient; then cover with six inches of rich earth from fence corners and leave at least six weeks; when ready to haul to the field, cut with a spade or pickaxe square down and mix as thoroughly as possible.

Still Another Plan.

The following plan gives equally satisfactory results:

Mix the Stable Manure and Cotton Seed in proper proportions; moisten them with water; apply the English Acid Phosphate; mix thoroughly, shoveling into a mass as prepared.

Application.

For Cotton, apply in the opening furrow 200 pounds, and with the planting of seed 75 to 100 pounds, making 275 to 300 pounds per acre. If it is desired to apply a larger quantity, open furrows the desired distance, and over them sow broadcast 400 pounds or more per acre. Bed the land, and then apply 100 pounds or more per acre with the seed.

For Corn, apply in the hill by the side of the seed, one gill to the hill. An additional application around the stalk before the first plowing, will largely increase the yield.

The Favorite.

Cotton Seed Meal	600 pounds
Our English Acid Phosphate	1000 pounds
Our Genuine German Kainit	400 pounds

Apply in the drill just before planting, 200 pounds to the acre.

We can furnish the above and will send it to any railroad station or steamboat landing.

To ascertain the number of tons of hay in a stack: Take half of the diameter of the stack in feet; square it, and multiply the square by 8-17. Multiply this product by the height of the stack in feet. Take one-third off, and the remainder will be the cubic contents of the stack in feet; divide this by 512, and you will have the number of tons.

Five hundred and fifty feet of new meadow hay, and 440 and 500 from large or old stacks, will weigh a ton. Five hundred and seventy-seven to six hundred and four cubic feet of dry clover will weigh a ton.

Rules for measuring unshucked corn in a crib: Measure the length, width and depth of the crib or bed in inches; multiply these three dimensions together. Take one-third of the product and divide by 2150, and the result will be the number of bushels.

English Acid Phosphate.

The use of Acid Phosphate has become so general that to advise it would be unnecessary. "Progressive farmers, and that means nearly all now adays, have tried it in some form or other, and having once tried they always buy it again. Where the labor is not too scarce and the material is at hand the majority prefer composting, with stable manure and cotton seed together with kainit and acid phosphate, or the stable manure and cotton seed can be singly used with acid phosphate and kainit, put up in the proper proportions, as shown elsewhere, taking pains to thoroughly mix it, and then protect it by a covering of earth or boards, it makes an excellent fertiliser. In the absence of stable manure or green cotton seed, the cotton seed meal can be mixed with the English Acid Phosphate and Kainit and drilled down at planting time. As we have said before Messrs. Marks & Gayle will supply the cotton seed meal to their customers when wanted for mixing with their goods.

The English Acid Phosphate that we offer was analized by Dr. Aug. Voelcker at our expense from samples taken after purchase to assure ourselves that we had gotten what we bought, and his report is as follows:

Per centage of Phosphoric Acid, soluble in water	11.97
Equal to tribasic phosphate of lime	26.13

These goods are ground exceptionally fine and being thoroughly treated with the best Sulphuric Acid, show a large per cent. of soluble, a quality most to be desired and frequently wanting in some phosphates. Sacked in the heavy "Dundee" they will reach the consumer without loss in wastage and the bags themselves be of value after the English Acid Phosphate has been taken therefrom.

German Kainit.

The centre of the kainit mining industry is in and near the town of Stassfort, a place of some 12000 inhabitants, situated 25 miles south-west of the city and fortress of Magdeburg in Prussia. It lies in a plain and the river Bode which has its rise in the Hartz mountains flows through it. The history of the salt mining industry in Stassfort is a very old one and dates back to the year 806. Previous to the year 1839 the salt was produced from brine pumped from wells sunk about 200 feet into the rock. In the course of time the brine grew so weak that the manufacture could not be carried on from this source without loss. In 1839 the Prussian government who were the owners of these Saline Springs commenced boring with the object of finding the whereabouts of the bed of rock-salt from which the brine had been obtained, and in the year 1852, 13 years after the commencement of the borings the bed of mineral kainite, that is kainit, was unexpectedly reached at a depth of about 1,000 feet. Its valuable constituents is the sulphate of potash of which it contains 23-25 per cent. The mining is carried on similiar to that of rock-salt and is brought to the surface in cars holding about a ton each, thence it is crushed and ground and usually shipped by the river Elbe to Hamburg for exportation to all parts of the world. Nearly one-third of the product of these mines finds its way to England and is there largely used for manurial purposes. The distinguished chemist Dr. Aug. Voelcker, of London, says: "Kainit is used in England on a variety of crops and found to be particularly beneficial to potatoes, clover and grass, and on all crops grown on light lands, and all soils deficient in potash."

The use of kainit by farmers themselves in this country is of recent date, but the rapid and enormous growth of demand shows that they too have found it an indispensable article, for the prevention of rust in cotton, and retaining the valuable ammonia put down until needed by the growing plants Its good effects during long continued droughths like the season just past, was very marked. It is used in connection with English Acid Phosphate and green cotton seed or stable manure in composting, or in putting down in the centre furrow in proper propotions and listing on same. Where neither stable manure or cotton seed is at hand Messrs. Marks & Gayle will furnish their customers with the cotton seed meal when desired for use with their English Acid Phosphate, and genuine German kainit.

Save Money.

The basis of all the formulas and composting chemicals are Acid Phosphate and Kainit. Why then pay double the price for such when you can buy the materials from us for half the sum and mix them yourself.

Plain Chemistry for Farmers and Planters.

Nitrogen is, commercially, the most valuable fertilizing element. It occurs in various forms and states. Organic Nitrogen is the nitrogen of animal and vegetable matters generally, existing in the albumen and fibrine of meat and blood, in the uric acid of bird dung, in the urea and hippuric acid of urine, and in a number of other substances. Some forms of organic nitrogen, as that of blood and meat, are highly active as fertilizers; others, that of hair and leather, are comparatively slow in their effect on vegetation, unless these matters are reduced to a fine powder or chemically disintegrated. Ammonia and nitric acid are the results of decay of organic nitrogen in the soil and manure heaps, and are the most active forms of nitrogen. They occur in commerce—the former in sulphate of ammonia, the latter in nitrate of soda. Seventeen parts of ammonia contain fourteen parts of nitrogen.

Soluble phosphoric acid implies phosphoric acid that is freely soluble in water. It is the characteristic ingredient of superphosphates, in which it is produced by acting on "insoluble" or "reverted" phosphates with oil of vitriol. It is not only readily taken up by plants, but it is distributed through the soil by rains.

Reverted (reduced or precipitated) phosphoric acid means strictly phosphoric acid that was once freely soluble in water, but from chemical changes has become insoluble in the liquid. It is freely taken up by a strong solution of ammonium citrate, which is therefore used in analysis to determine the quantity. "Reverted phosphoric acid" implies phosphates that are readily assimilated by crops, but have less value than soluble phosphoric acid, because they do not distribute freely by rain.

Available phosphoric acid consists of the soluble and reverted.

Insoluble phosphoric acid implies various phosphates not freely soluble in water or ammonium citrate. In some cases the phosphoric acid is too insoluble be to readily available as plant food. This is true of the South Carolina rock phosphate of Navassa phosphate, and especially of Canada apatite. The phosphates of raw bones are nearly insoluble in this sense, because of the animal matter of the bone which envelops it, but when the latter decays in the soil the phosphate remains essentially the "reverted" form. 155 parts of bone phosphate contain 71 parts of phosphoric acid.

Potash signifies the substance known in chemistry as potassium oxide, which is the valuable fertilizing ingredients of "potashes," and in "potash salts." It is the most costly in the form of sulphate, and less so in the shape of muriate or chloride.

On What Do Plants Feed?

The French Government some years ago established an experimental farm at Vincennes, France, under the superintendency of the eminent chemist, M. George Ville. Every convenience, such as greenhouses, hot beds, fields, implements, etc., necessary to carry out his experiments, were at his disposal.

Among the many experiments made by him was that of causing wheat to grow in pure sand, and in order to destroy any substance that would act as a fertilizer in the sand or water used in the experiment, the sand was burned and the water distilled. Four large flower pots filled with the burned sand were used in making the experiment. In the first he put twenty-two grains of good wheat, and watered them with the distilled water; the seed grew, looking yellow and sickly, but came to maturity, and produced 108 grains of poor, shrivelled wheat.

In the second pot the ten minerals that all plants require for food were mixed with the burned sand, and 22 grains of good wheat planted as in the first case. The result still showed sickly plants, but better developed than the first, and at maturity yielded 144 grains.

In the third pot ammonia was mixed with the burnt and instead of the ten minerals as in the second experiment. In this case the plants came up a beautiful dark green, giving every indication that a large crop of seed would be produced. But not so; the result, although better than the other two pots, was only a yield of 162 grains.

In the fourth experiment the ten minerals required as food for all plants, united with ammonia, were mixed with the sand, and 22 grains of wheat, planted as before, this experiment being a union, as it were, of the second and third experiments. The result of this union was almost magical; the plants sprang up with great vigor, strong and healthy, producing from the 22 seeds 423 grains of full, good wheat. As the sands in which the seeds were planted and the water with which they were watered contained no fertilising property, this grand result must have been caused by the minerals and ammonia alone. Yet great as this result was, 5 per cent. only of the plants were produced by the minerals, and 94 per cent by the ammonia, thereby showing 99.60 per cent. of the plants were produced by the air.

Order What You Want.

If you want only a ton of fertilizers and that to consist of several kind, such as English Acid Phosphate or Dissolved Bone, Cotton Seed Meal, or Kainit or "Planter's Best" guano, just so the amount ordered is sufficient to make up a ton, why order it and we will send it.

Business Law.

The following compilation is worth a careful preservation, as it contains the essence of a large amount of business law:

A contract made with a minor is not void, but voidable only.

A contract made with a lunatic is void.

Each individual in a partnership is responsible for the whole amount of the debts of the firm, except in cases of special partnership.

Ignorance of the law excuses no one.

Signatures made with a lead pencil are good in law.

The acts of one partner bind all the others.

"Value received" is usually written in a note, and should be, but is not necessary. If not written it is presumed by the law or may be supplied by proof.

A note indorsed in blank (the name of the indorser only written) is transferable by delivery, the same as if made payable to bearer.

If the time of payment of a note is not inserted, it is held payable on demand.

The time of payment of a note must not depend upon a contingency. The promise must be absolute.

A bill may be written upon any paper or substitute for it, either with ink or pencil.

The payee should be distinctly named in the note, unless it is payable to bearer.

An indorsee has a right of action against all whose names were on the bill when he received it.

No consideration is sufficient in law if it be illegal in its nature.

Checks or drafts should be presented during business hours; but in this country, except in the case of banks, the time extends through the day and evening.

If two or more persons are jointly liable on a note or bill, due notice to one of them is sufficient.

If a note is transferred as security, or even as payment of a pre-existing debt, the debt revives if the note is dishonored.

Good Advice To Planters.

1. Practice economy, but avoid parsimony.
2. Keep accurate accounts of all farm operations.
3. Leave no implements scattered over the farm, exposed to the sun and rain.
4. Repair tools and buildings at a proper time, thereby saving money for the future.
5. Buy everything you need for cash; the credit system will make and keep you poor.
6. Strive always to keep your lands in a high state of cultivation.
7. One acre properly manured and cultivated, will produce as much as five acres under ordinary culture.
8. Make your own provisions, fruit, etc.; they are better than any you can buy.
9. Have a place for everything, and keep everything in its place.
10. Be tidy in all things. A good farmer keeps things neat around him.
11. Encourage your family to take an interest in gardening; flowers around your homestead will add much to its beauty.
12. Buy none but first-class high grade fertilizers; they are the cheapest in the end.
13. Use money judiciously, and purchase nothing that is not actually needed, simply because it is cheap.
14. Keep on good terms with your neighbors.
15. Be always cheerful; a sour disposition injures your health and renders others unhappy.
16. Compost your cotton seed with high grade of superphosphate as soon as possible after your cotton is ginned.
17. It costs you no interest to purchase your superphosphates for composting early in the season, therefore buy it in time.
18. Every month your compost heap has to lay, adds much to its value.
19. High grades of dissolved bone are the cheapest fertilisers sold.

TO FIND THE CONTENTS OF WAGON BEDS.

Add the top and bottom lengths, in inches, and divide by 2.

Add the top and bottom widths, in inches, and divide by 2.

Multiply these quotients together, and their products by the depth of the bed in inches, and divide this product by 2,150 42 (the number of cubic inches in a bushel), and the quotient will be the capacity in bushels.

Testimonials.

We publish below testimonials from several successful planters living in different parts of this section, as to their experience with the "Planter's Best" Guano. The testimonials speak for themselves:

Montgomery County, Jan 31, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

This is to certify that I have used a small quantity of your Guano (Brand "Planter's Best"), and will say, that I was very much pleased with result produced by same. I am satisfied it is quite as good, if not superior, to any brand I ever used.

Respectfully,
H. L. STONE.

La Place, Ala., Jan. 30, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Gents:—The Guano I received from you last spring I did not have a fair trial of. I anticipated an early spring, and put my guano in too soon, and the beating rains injured it, I think, very much, though I think I made as much again cotton on the land as I would have made without it. I like it so well I expect to try it again this spring.

Your respectfully,
(Rev.) E. W. STORY, Sr.

Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Last season I used your Planter's Best Guano beside four standard brands and consider same fully equal to any I have ever used.

Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

I received your note requesting me as to merits of your Guano. I have used it under cotton, corn, potatoes and melons, and I have also used other brands, but I think the Planter's Best beats the best. I shall want more.

W. T. LIGHT.

Ada, Montgomery Co., Feb. 9, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Dear Sirs:—I give you a few names that used the "PLANTER'S BEST GUANO," and were very well pleased with it. They said it was as fine Guano as they ever used.

OFFICE OF JAMES CALDWELL,
NURSERYMAN AND FLORIST,
Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 22, 1884.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Gentlemen:—The fertilizer, "PLANTER'S BEST," I bought of you last year, acted with good results upon all the crops and plants upon which it was used. So far as I have tested your fertilizer, it was satisfactory. Amoniated Bone Phosphate is an excellent fertilizer; it stimulates the plants in the early stages of their growth, and keeps them in a healthy, growing condition until the maturity of the crop.

Respectfully,
JAMES CALDWELL.

Tuskegee, Ala. Jan, 26, 1884.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Gents:—In reply to your inquiries as to how I liked your Planter's Best, will say that I was well pleased with it, although I had no rain from last of June until it was too late to benefit the crop any. I gathered about 800 lbs. of seed cotton per acre, where I would have not got more than 400 without it.

Respectfully,
J. M. CONNER.

Fitzpatrick's, Bullock Co. Ala., January, 21, 1884.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Gentlemen:—I received a letter from you a few days ago, asking for my experience with the PLANTER'S BEST GUANO. I have used several kinds of Guano in the last two years, and of all I have used yet, I think the PLANTER'S BEST is the best.

Yours truly,
W. H. TOMPKINS.

Coosada, Elmore Co., Jan. 29, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Dear Sirs:—Your Planter's Best Guano gave entire satisfaction, taking in consideration the bad season. I was entirely satisfied with the results, and expect to use the same this year.

Yours,
WM. ZEIGLER.

Matthews, Montg'y Co. Jan. 25, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Dear Sirs:—I procured from you last spring some Guano which I applied as follows, with the following results: Opened water furrow very deep, applied 175 to 200 lbs. per acre; bedded on it and planted at once. Cotton came up early and grew off very fine, and continued to do well until, say 20th July; at that time it was as good a prospect for a crop as I wanted. The land fertilised was hammock, a very thin soil. It could not stand the long continued drouth of last season. One good season the middle of July would have doubled the yield. A portion was put in with the seed; 75 lbs. to the acre; it gave it an early send off and made a fair crop. I am satisfied with the Guano; will try it again.

Respectfully,
JAS. P. BRENAN.

Mooreo, Macon Co. Ala. Jan. '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

With this, my order for Planters' Best Guano, I take pleasure in stating, that notwithstanding the past hard season on fertilizers, it paid me handsomely.

Yours truly,
J. H. JONES.

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 1, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Dear Sirs:—Any Guano that stood the drouth of the last year must be good. The Planter's Best did, and you already have my order for more herewith. I would say that I have examined your English Acid Phosphate and Kainit; will take for use this year, twenty tons of the English Acid Phosphate and fifteen tons of the Kainit. From all appearances it is the best I have ever seen.

Yours truly,
CHAS. E. HAIL.

Matthews' Station, Ala., Feb. 5, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

I purchased one ton of your PLANTER'S BEST GUANO last year, and for the purpose of testing it, just before planting my cotton, I picked out twelve acres of old worn-out hammock land, and used the fertilizer in the drill on ten acres of it. The ten acres yielded 800 lbs. of seed cotton per acre, while the two acres that I did not fertilize, only gave me 75 lbs. of seed cotton per acre.

Respectfully &c.,
R. SAVAGE.

Benton, Lowndes county, Ala., June 26th, '84.
Messrs. MARKS & GAYLE:

Gents:—After a thorough trial I am convinced that the "Planter's Best" is the best fertilizer I ever used. I am satisfied it increased my crop 100 per cent. Will use three times as much this season as did last.

Yours truly,
JOS. R. DUDLEY.

Habits of a Man of Business.

A sacred regard to the principles of justice forms the basis of every transaction, and regulates the conduct of the upright man of business. He is strict in keeping his engagements; does nothing carelessly or in a hurry; employs no one to do what he can easily do himself; keeps everything in its proper place; leaves nothing undone that ought be done, and which circumstances permit him to do; keeps his designs and business from the view of others; is prompt and decisive with his customers, and does not over-trade his capital; prefers short credit to long ones, and cash to credit at all times, either in buying or selling; and small profits in credit cases, with little risk, to the chance of better gains with more hazard; he is clear and explicit in all his bargains; leaves nothing of consequence to memory, which he can and ought to commit to writing; keeps copies of all his important letters which he sends away, and has every letter, invoice, etc., relating to his business titled, classed, and put away; never suffers his desk to be confused by many papers lying upon it; is always at the head of business, well knowing that if he leaves it, it will leave him; holds it as a maxim that he whose credit is suspected is not one to be trusted; is constantly examining his books, and sees through all his affairs as far as care and attention will enable him; balances regularly at stated times, and then makes out and transmits all his accounts current to his customers, both at home and abroad; avoids as much as possible all sorts of accommodations in money matters and lawsuits, where there is the least hazard; he is economical in his expenditure, always living within his income; keeps a memorandum book in his pocket, in which he notes every particular, relative to appointments, addresses, and petty cash matters; is cautious how he becomes security for any person, and is generous when urged by motives of humanity. Let a man act strictly to these habits. When once begun they will be easy to continue in, and success will attend his efforts.

Excellent Interest Rules.

For finding the interest on any principal for any number of days, the answer in each case being in cents, separate the two right-hand figures of answer to express in dollars and cents:

Four per cent.—Multiply the principal by the number of days to run, separate the right-hand figure from the product and divide by 9.

Five per cent.—Multiply by number of days and divide by 72.

Six per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right-hand figure and divide by 6.

Eight per cent.—Multiply by number of days and divide by 45.

Nine per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right-hand figure and divide by 4.

Ten per cent.—Multiply by number of days and divide by 36.

Twelve per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right-hand figure and divide by 3.

Fifteen per cent.—Multiply by number of days and divide by 24.

Celebrated Chinese Cement, for mending glass, marble, china, earthware, etc.—White shellac, one ounce, dissolved in two ounces of spirits of wine; ten grains of borax, dissolved in two drams of sulphuric ether. After the ingredients are dissolved, put them together. Directions for use: Put it on the edges of the broken ware with a brush or feather; burn it off with a spirit light. Put the pieces together, hold them till they are set and they will be as firm as they were before they were broken.

"THINGS THAT ARE NOT."

I heard a sweet voice of love say
That she was holy, pure, and true,
A friend to give delight on earth,
A voice to bid men look above,
Her constancy her only worth,
Alas! like this she comes to very few.

I heard her sacred name
On lips of many, young and old,
I looked their idol in the face,
A giddy, pleasure-seeking dame,
Whose vanity is her disgrace,
Whose summer friendship fades before the cold.

Is love then but a dream,
The greatest flavor man can know?
Or has she broken earthly bars
And fled, with her celestial gleam,
To shine aloft among the stars
And look with scorn upon the clouds below?

When Faith and Hope are dead,
When life has for its only aim
To seek the passing moment's bliss,
To find sufficiency of bread,
Man soon his highest joy will miss,
And seeking Love will find her but a name.

THE LOVERS' QUARREL.

"Never, while I live," said Miss Rashleigh, "never while I live, will I see your face again!"

She meant it when she said it; and as she spoke, she threw her betrothal ring toward her lover, who had offended her.

It missed him and rolled down upon the floor and over the sill of an open china closet—one of those old-fashioned closets that used to stand on either side of the mantel-piece.

She did not notice where it rolled; he did though; and after she had left the room, he turned to pick it up. The ring she had worn would always be precious to him.

Miss Rashleigh went straight to her own room, as miserable a girl as ever lived, and a moment later Grandmother Rashleigh hustled into the drawing-room, pushed the open closet door to, picked up the fallen magazine, set the annuals and books of poetry straight on the table, pulled down the shades, arranged the chairs mathematically against the wall, and bustled out again.

"I've had these things fifty years," she said to herself, "and there's Cornelia and her beau with no more respect for them than if they were so much lumber."

Then she closed the door behind her, and went away to her own room upstairs, where a fine silk patchwork quilt was in the frame, a surprise for said Cornelia.

Grandmother Rashleigh gave every young person of the family something of her own manufacture on his or her wedding day.

"Now," the old lady had said a dozen times to Tripheny King, who was helping her; "I rather think Cornelia will have the best thing I've done; and there's a bit in it of every handsome silk there's ever been in the family, and of her father's and grandfather's wedding vests."

"Yes, m; it's a real memorial quilt," said Tripheny. "It takes you, mum, to plan such things."

The quilt was finished and bound that afternoon, and Tripheny's job of quilting being over she went home. But she carried about the village the news that she "was sure all was over between Miss Rashleigh and Mr. Spear. She'd heard Cornelia saying something to her grandma, and the old lady was furious."

"He would never have done that if he had cared for me, you know, grandma," Cornelia was saying at that moment.

"Stuff and nonsense! He loves the ground you walk on!" said the old lady. "You'll never get such another, Cornelia!"

"I shall never marry at all; I hate men," Cornelia answered.

And then her grandmother made the heroic lie [illegible] and went over to her mother's, her usual course when she fell out with grandma.

Three days passed. At the end of the third Piety Pratt stepped in at Mrs. Rashleigh's—young Mrs. Rashleigh, as they called her, though she was nearly fifty, for grandma was old Mrs. Rashleigh.

"I expect you'll feel upset when I tell you the news, Cornelia," she said. "You have been too upset this time—he, he, he! Orville Spear hasn't been heard of since he went over to explain and make up, and he never came back—he, he! She thought maybe he'd stopped over to his mother's, but he hasn't—he, he! I reckon he's drowned himself!"

"I don't know why the whole town should talk over my affairs and every meddling old maid gossip about them!" cried Cornelia.

Piety jumped to her feet, asked her parents and turned pursuit the door.

"Good afternoon, Miss Cornelia and Mrs. Rashleigh," she said, with a contemptuous courtesy. "I'll remember my manners, if other folks forget theirs. Only there's other folks in Piety to be old maids as me, and I fancy it's Miss Spear's affair now if anything has happened to her boy!"

"Army [illegible]

"You've got Piety into a rage, Cornelia," said Mrs. Rashleigh. "That's a pity; she has a long tongue.

But Cornelia was crying.

"Oh, I'm sure it's all true, that Orville did not feel [illegible] Piety's [illegible] Rodney."

But at this moment Sally, the little servant girl, came flying into the room, without any more warning than if she had been shot from a gun.

"The old missus says you are to come over at once, both you ladies!" she cried, standing before Mrs. Rashleigh, and repeating her lesson like a parrot. "There's something of importance, and you're needed at wonst."

"Get your bonnet, Cornelia," said her mother. "I'll just put on this sun-hat. What is it, Sally; do you know?"

"I know it's something dreadful. Missus is almost wild, and there's lots of folks there. Something about Mr. Spear."

The two ladies said no more. They hurried away together, and entering grandma's parlor, found there assembled more of the members of the Spear family and a friend or two besides.

Orville had indeed disappeared. He had never been home since his visit to Cornelia, and now the alarmed relatives were anxious to get all the information they could regarding the interview between Orville and Cornelia.

"I had reason to be angry, Mrs Spear," said Cornelia, proudly; "good reason, and I took off my ring and gave it back and went out of the room. I don't know when he went or where. I—I thought he wouldn't mind so much. I believed he had stopped caring about me."

"He ought to now, at all events," said grandma

"My boy is dead, I'm sure. I shall have the pond dragged!" said Mrs. Spear, amidst her tears. "He left all his money at home. He wouldn't have gone traveling without a change o clothes. Oh, you wicked girl?"

"I hope," cried the eldest Miss Spear, "that he'll haunt you!"

"I could kill you, you hateful thing!" cried the youngest Miss Spear.

Cornelia had kept up bravely until now; but when her two friends turned upon her thus, she gave a little scream, and fell over on the sofa. She was in a dead swoon, and the water they sprinkled in her face did not bring her to.

Grandma grew frightened.

"I hope it isn't an attack of heart disease," she said. "Poor child! she looks as if she were dead."

"Oh, don't say that!" cried th mother.

They gathered around Cornelia ar did all they could for her, and soon s recovered and sat up, but all her pric was gone.

"Oh, dear! oh, dear!" she sobbed, "I wish I had died! I wish I had never come to! Oh, Orville! Orville! what has become of you?"

"Oh! oh!" moaned the mother.

"Oh! oh!" moaned the sisters.

And Cornelia's head fell back again.

"Emma, get the lavender out of the china-closet," said grandma to her daughter. "Quick! It's on the corner shelf!"

Mrs. Rashleigh rushed to the closet.

"It won't open," she cried, wildly.

"It's a patent lock," said grandma; "there is a [illegible] the key."

And Mrs. Rashleigh flew back to the door, opened it and uttered a shriek.

There on the floor, huddled up under the shelf lay poor Orville Spear.

[illegible]

Cornelia sat and stared at him in the most vivid way. She thought him dead, like the most experienced matron on such [illegible] was yet living.

Sally was sent post-haste for the doctor; and there, in Mrs. Rashleigh's drawing-room, he found Cornelia and Orville lying quite unconscious, like Romeo and Juliet in the scene at the tomb, and the rest of the party in a state of bewilderment and terror past description.

At last, however, both were conscious and seated in arm-chairs, regarded each other, while the observers kept silence, and Mr. Orville Spear uttered the first words:

"Of all confounded fools——"

"Who, dear?" asked his mother.

"Me," said Orville, regardless of grammar. "Who sent me in?"

"What were you in the closet for?" asked Cornelia, with [illegible] confidence.

"To pick something up that rolled there," said Orville.

"The ring?" asked Cornelia, frankly.

"Take me away," said Mr. Spear.

"More fool I!" Some one banged the door on me, I stumbled in the dark and kicked [illegible] the ring."

"Oh, oh, oh, oh!" shrieked Cornelia. "I believe they [illegible] for no other purpose than out of revenge."

"You banged the door on me," said Mr. Spear, "I would do anything."

"[illegible]," said old Mrs. Rashleigh. "I [illegible] left everything flying. I just pushed it as I passed, and [illegible] your stars that you are alive, for people don't go into the drawing-room, sometimes for a fortnight in this small family. We use the parlor much more, and I am [illegible] you would have killed him, Cornelia," added the old lady, [illegible] his pretty diamond ring on the floor."

"[illegible]

"[illegible] Orville, for [illegible] confounded fool all through," cried Orville. "I know that now; but don't blame Cornelia."

"I shall always blame myself!"

IT IS BEST TO KEEP SOBER.

A YOUNG MAN DRUNK, AND THE POSITION IN WHICH IT PLACES HIS BEST GIRL.

An Original Way of Telling a Man why it is Best not to Drink too Much Free Lunch.

A young man who signs himself "A Bounced One," writes and asks the following question: "If a girl tells is giving her fellow the bounce if he comes home full of—not love, but beer—once, only after having a two year's engagement?" The girl is the one to judge whether she is right or not. If she thinks that it [illegible] settles it. It does not follow that because a young man gets full once in a two year's engagement that he would necessarily [illegible] husband, but a girl is supposed to know whether she wants to take the chances or not. It is not a light thing to get drunk in the presence of one you love, young man. You may laugh at it, and think she will look upon it as a joke, but you are liable to knock all the love out of her heart, when you think you are smart. She thinks of you as a noble man, and your picture is in her heart, engraved, as it were, there, just as she sees you when you are at your brightest and best. What a shock it gives her to see you drunk, with your eyes blood-shot and watery, your hair, that, perhaps, she has stroked with her gentle hand, all tangled up and full of cheese sandwich! She has admired your gentlemanly bearing, and now she sees you staggering, and left-handed in both feet. She has learned to love to hear you laugh, and see you smile, and the echoes of your pleasant words linger in her soul, and when she hears that maudlin laugh of drunkenness, and sees a leer in place of the heavenly smile, and listens to your words, that come thick and uncertain, as though from your stomach, and she does not know but the next words that come will be accompanied by stale beer and free lunch, you cannot wonder that she gives you the bounce.

You would not go and have your photograph taken when you were drunk, and present it to her, and yet, when you appear before her in that condition, your appearance is photographed on her heart, and the new pictures takes the place of the old one that has been there, and try however hard she may to see you as she wants to, bright and sober, and a true lover, for the life of her, she cannot erase the drunken picture, and while she would forgive you if she could, she feels that you have hurt her terribly. She is not to blame, poor girl, for bouncing you. You bounced yourself out of her heart when you thought you were smart, and got full. True love and drunkenness cannot exist, where the parties are refined. You had rather she would bounce you than to have her tolerate you, and always have that picture of your drunken condition coming up before her. You can probably find a girl, less refined, who would overlook your getting drunk, and you may marry such a one, but you will always love the little finger of the good girl who bounced you more than you can ever love the one who will overlook and laugh at your drunkenness. It is a serious thing to do as you have done, and forty years from now, instead of thinking you did a smart thing, you will discover that you made a colossal fool of yourself. If you think so now, and decide that she has done right and can convince her that you realize what you have done, and are not too proud to go and tell her about it, and ask her pardon, it may be well with you, but if you feel that she is over-nice, and has wronged you, you had better stay away, and then you can get drunk all you want to, with no little girl that you love, to complain, and you will regret your act as long as you live. It is best to keep sober.

Floating Villages.

LITTLE COMMUNITIES THAT LIVE ON THE CROWDED CANAL BOATS.

People who visit the neighborhood of the Atlantic or Erie Basins will notice the smoke curling from the little stunted stovepipes projecting above the neat white cabins of the scores of canal boats that remain there the winter through. About the decks, when the snow is on, will be seen the tracks left by the shoes of little ones, the French-heeled shoes of maidens and the broad soles of the men. There are other easily-found signs which show that in every boat a family is living, and that, in fact, these collections of boats are communities, separate and distinct like villages in the country. These families are bound together by social ties and by similar business interests. The boats furnish them their means of livelihood, and are their homes. [illegible] intermarry, and many a man among them was born on a boat of parents who were on the canal about all their lives before him. More quiet, peaceable, industrious communities cannot be found than the villages floating in these basins.

The community of interests among them is so strong that a society was formed some years ago for the advancement of their pecuniary and other interests. By its efforts the agitation was started which first took the toll from the unloaded boat and at last gave New York State its free canal. The society is now called the Canal Boat Owners' and Commercial Association. It numbers over 200 members.—N. Y. Sun.

Smashing 'em All Up.

In 1861 when General McClellan made his demonstration on Winchester in order to cover his real design of approaching Richmond by the Peninsula route, he marched as far as Berryville, West Virginia, and a little beyond there retraced his steps and with haste proceeded to embark his troops on board of transports to be carried to Fortress Monroe.

On the advance toward Winchester, when the head of the column had reached Charlestown, greater caution was observed on the march, as it was expected that the enemy would be encountered at Berryville. A Western brigadier was sent forward with his brigade to feel the enemy. Now this officer had seen service in Mexico and was accounted a brave and experienced officer. As he passed at the head of his troops by the regiment of Col. Owen, of Philadelphia, he stopped, and pulling his moustache as was his habit, said: "Look out now, Colonel, you'll hear music soon, sir. I'll knock 'em all to thunder if I meet 'em. Make no mistake, sir."

Then he rode on and sure enough, about the time he should have arrived at Berryville, the boom of cannon was heard and the troops hurried to the front. We went up at the double quick and when near Berryville met the brigadier coming back radiant with joy. Pulling his moustache again he cried out: "What did did I tell you? I made 'em bounce. They brought out a battery into the open ground, just beyond town, but it never fired a shot, sir. I knocked it all to flinders before it could limber." Troops hurried on and as we came to the spot indicated we found a threshing machine utterly wrecked and a dead horse in the harness, still hitched to it. In a house near by were some farmers, frightened half to death. They had been going out to thresh some grain when the rampant brigadier saw them and opened his batteries on them. When the brigadier heard he had destroyed a threshing machine only his jaw fell and it was many a day before he heard the last of his ludicrous adventure.

Meeting Trouble.

Numbers of people really make themselves ill by going out to meet disaster and misfortune—in other words, by fancying all sorts of bad things to exhaust [illegible].

As a rule, not a tithe of these terrible [illegible] ever occur, and all the [illegible] apprehension is undergone for nothing.

A man, especially a family man and a father, ought always to prepare for the worst—for instance, by insuring his life. But this is no reason for his getting up every morning and fancying he is going to die before noon.

If people drawn over within their means, always had a little put by, and never let the future worry them unduly, they would lead far happier lives than at present seems to be the case.

To-day the heaviest fruit an engine for [illegible] approved—that is [illegible].

An International Question.

Dr. Edward Nunez, of Philadelphia received word from relatives in Cuba that Colonel Emilio Nunez, a tobacco importer of that city, had been arrested while on board the American schooner John B. Hamil, Jr., lying in the harbor of Sagua la Grande, Cuba. Colonel Nunez had formerly been an officer in the patriot army and recently applied for a passport to return to Cuba to settle his brother's estate. This was refused. He then embarked on the schooner as one of her crew, not intending to land on Cuban soil. The schooner reached Cuba January 12, and two days afterward a demand was made for the surrender of Colonel Nunez. This was refused by the schooner's captain, and an armed crew from a man-of-war then took him prisoner. Dr. Nunez left for Washington to lay the case before the Secretary of State.

"There were 650,000,000 menhaden taken in the waters about New York and in Long Island Sound last season," said a dealer in oils to a reporter, "but they were so poor that the oil secured from them was only 1,800,000 gallons, against nearly 22,000,000 gallons from 800,000,000 fish taken in 1883. The difference made, however, in 1883 over a third more than that made in the previous year—about 40,000 tons against 30,000; in favor of last season. The market is full of the fertilizer, and it is being held for better prices."

LAWSUITS FOR EVERYBODY.

The Manner in which a Western Editor Settled Two Libel Accounts.

"Libeling it" is one of the most ridiculous perils of the experience of American life. It seems to be considered a cheap luxury to have a lawsuit, and yet it is very expensive. It has got half of the people seem to have a chip on their shoulder all the time, ready for somebody to knock it off, and the first thing they do when they think they have been injured is to go for a lawyer or a justice of the peace, and a lawsuit is the result; men who are not interested are taken from their business to act as jurors, and ill feeling is created that lasts forever. The fact that the poorest person in the world can indulge in a lawsuit, and be encouraged by lawyers, and pointed at as "the one who had the lawsuit," causes many cases in courts. Instead of using every other device for a settlement of differences before resorting to the courts, a lawsuit is the first thing thought of. If a man slips down on the sidewalk, he looks up to see who owns the building in front of which he fell, with a view of suing him for damages, even before he feels of himself to find if he is hurt. He does not stop to think that perhaps his boots are to blame, being run over at the heel, and it does not enter his head that he is liable to be beaten in the lawsuit and have a bill of costs saddled onto him. Two men are driving in opposite directions and run into each other, and, without stopping to reason together to see if the damage cannot be amicably settled, they shake their fists at each other, call names, and one drives off after a policeman and the other goes to a justice of the peace to complain, and a lawsuit is the result, in which both are damaged more than by the accident, but each always believes that the other is a pirate, and their children quit speaking to each other. If men who have differences would go to some neighbor and state their case and abide by his decision, shake hands and be friends afterward, the country would be better off. Not many months ago a man felt aggrieved at something that appeared in the Sun, and after blowing around for a day or two he came to the office to interview the editor. He explained his grievance, and wound up by saying that his lawyer had told him that the article was libelous, and that he could recover damages. The editor never had a lawsuit and never wanted one, and he said to the man:

"Partner, a lawsuit is a foolish way to enjoy religion. Now, I'll tell you what to do. You go to the President of the Merchants' Association, of which you are a member and I am not. Have the President appoint a committee of five men from the association to hear your statement. You take the paper containing the obnoxious article to them, and state your case, just as strong as you can. I will not make any defense. Whatever amount they say you have been damaged I will give a check for, and we will shake hands and be friends, and go to the same church as usual, and listen to the same minister preach the gospel. If I have damaged you, you must have your money, but we don't want to spend the balance of our lives in a lawsuit."

The man stopped and thought a moment, and said:

"That is the fairest proposition I ever heard, and you don't owe me a cent, and the matter shall drop from this moment."

If people would never go into a lawsuit until they couldn't go into anything else, there would be fewer men with enemies all around, and while lawyers might get tired sitting around, it would do them good in the end.—Peck's Sun.

School was Out.

"I hear a great deal of talk," said old Mr. Joblingson, as he drove out into the country, the other day, in order to enjoy a sleigh-ride with a friend, "of the decay of manners in Americans, and particularly in American youth. Now I don't take much stock in it. To be sure, when I was a boy, I was taught to say 'Sir' or 'Madam' to every man or woman who spoke to me, and to take off my hat to every grown person I might meet on my way to school. Possibly the boys are less [illegible] perhaps, but are they half so truly polite? I think not. Look at the crowd outside the school-house we are just coming to. Did you ever see a brighter, more respectful, quieter set of boys? Gentlemen, every one of them. I make no doubt." The boys were indeed, as remarkably quiet, and when the old gentleman bade them "good day" as he and his friend skimmed by, they responded in fitting terms. "What did I tell you?" asked Mr. Joblingson proudly, as the congregation was passed. But at that instant a snow-ball came between the heads of the pair, and, striking the horse, set him off at a dead gallop; another knocked off Mr. Joblingson's hat; a dozen hits and his friend on their backs at the same instant, and as they were so nicely peppered, and the hoots and yells of the "quiet young gentlemen." And when the horse was stopped, and Joblingson had picked the snow out of his ears and neck, he cursed the youth of the present generation roundly for a pack of rowdys and incorrigible rascals.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER.

MEDICAL COUNTERFEIT DETECTED.

"One of these dollars is a counterfeit, ma'am."

"How can you tell?"

"Simply by sound. Just tap it, ma'am, how clear the genuine sounds. That's tenor. Notice when I tap the other one. That's base."—Austin Siftings.

A BOY WITH AN EYE TO BUSINESS.

"Please, ma'am, I'll clean your sidewalk for a quarter."

"But it is cleaned. I just paid a boy thirty cents to shovel off the snow, and yet you are the sixth boy who wanted to clean it over. I presume there'll be twenty more."

"Then, ma'am, gimme fifteen cents and I'll sit on the door-steps and tell 'em they're left!"

A BIRD IN THE HAND.

"My darling, you do not bestow upon me so much affection as you did before we were married," remarked a pouting bride of four years to her husband.

"Don't I?" he replied.

"No, Charles, you do not; you pay very little attention to me," said his wife.

"Well, my dear," observed the wicked husband, "did you ever see a man run after a horse-car after he had caught it?"

CLEAR WASTE.

"You don't call on Miss G. now?"

"No, we've quit."

"Quit? What's the difficulty?"

"Oh, her father's too penurious."

"Too penurious? Why, he has the reputation of being particularly liberal."

"Perhaps he has, but he told me the other evening I'd better leave, as he couldn't afford to waste shoe leather on me. It's my private opinion that that man would skin a flea for its hide and tallow."—Oil City Blizzard.

PERFECTLY WILLING.

As the President sat down Elder Penstock rose up. There was a yearning, anxious expression on his face, and, after clearing his throat of tacks and splinters and scrap iron, he said:

"Misesur President, in case—dat is—in case you doan' want——"

"Sit down!" "Fire him out!" "Snatch him bald-headed!" came from all parts of the hall, accompanied by a great clatter of feet, and the Elder was forced to hide his head.

ANOTHER NAME FOR THEM.

Two young ladies, one a resident of Philadelphia and the other of Chicago, were walking on Michigan avenue when the Philadelphia girl remarked:

"It strikes me as quite remarkable that so many of the houses in this city have bay windows attached to them."

"Yes" responded the Chicago miss; "we find them very convenient, but we do not call them bay windows."

"No? What do you call them?"

"Foot receptacles."—Philadelphia Call.

WHY HE WASN'T THERE NOW.

Kosciusko Murphy, who is a bookkeeper in a grocery house, met a friend who clerks in a cigar store on Austin avenue, and asked him for a cigar.

"Ain't got any," said his friend.

"Ain't got any?" said Kosciusko. "Why, when I used to work in a cigar store, I always had my pockets stuffed with cigars."

"Yes, probably that's the reason you ain't in a cigar store now," was the crushing reply.—Texas Siftings.

PROUD OF IT.

Some of the richest men in Austin started in life in a modest way, and are still plain, unpretentious people, but their sons put on a great deal of style. One of the latter, who was better posted about other people's affairs than about his own family's, remarked, sneeringly, to an acquaintance:

"Your father was nothing but a simple stone mason."

"I know where you got that information," quietly remarked the other.

"From whom did I get it?"

"From your father."

"How do you know that?"

"Because your father used to be my father's hod carrier."—Texas Siftings.

SAVING MONEY.

Mrs. B.—"You remember, dear, that you said last week I better attend Cash & Co.'s annual remnant sale as I might pick up a few little bargains and save something."

Mr. B.—"Yes, and I hope you went, for my business is not prospering and we must save where we can."

Mrs. B.—"Yes, I went, and you can't guess how much I saved."

Mr. B.—"How much? A dollar?"

Mrs. B.—"A dollar! I saved ten dollars!"

Mr. B.—"Bless my stars. What have you been doing?"

Mrs. B.—"Having money just as you said. I found a fifty dollar remnant of silk just large enough for two dresses and by taking it all I saved ten dollars. The bill will be sent to you to-morrow. Shall I go again and save——"

But Mr. B. had fainted.

TAKING HIM AT HIS WORD.

"Now, my son, this won't do! You spend altogether too much time in play. You must buckle down to work."

"All right, father," was the dutiful response.

The next morning the young man, instead of exercising himself in the woodshed, slung his skates over his shoulder and disappeared, not to return until hunger drove him home for supper.

"Well," exclaimed the irate father, "where have you been all day, sir?"

"Skatin'," replied the youth.

"And didn't you promise me last night that you would buckle down to work?"

"Indeed I did, dear father," said the bright and truthful lad. "I couldn't skate, you know, if I didn't first buckle down to work."

ON THE LOOKOUT.

A young man was standing on Chestnut street smoking a cigarette and blowing the smoke proudly through his nose when a gentleman stopped and said to him:

"Will you be kind enough to favor me with your name and address?"

"And why should I give you my name and address? You are a stranger to me," replied the young man, lighting a fresh cigarette.

"You will please pardon the request," continued the gentleman; "but it is merely a matter of business. I have watched the expert manner in which you handle cigarettes, and, being an undertaker, I would sort o' like to get on speaking terms with your immediate family."—The Call.

A MOONLIGHT SYMPHONY.

Algernon—"My dearest Eudora, you know that as we are soon to be married we should cease to live in an enchanted dream and begin to take practical views of life."

Eudora—"I know that, dear, and have thought it all over much more often than you think."

Algernon—"You know that I am not rich, and cannot afford to keep my bird of paradise in a gilded cage."

Eudora—"It makes no difference, Algernon, I have already picked out a sweet little house in the suburbs, which I know you can rent."

Algernon—"How good of you, my angel, and then you know that in order to pay for the furniture, which must be bought on instalments, it will not do to keep a servant. Can my darling's pretty white hands make bread and attend to all the other household duties?"

Eudora—"Well, no; but I have provided for that, too. Mother's people are staving housekeepers, and she and my three maiden aunts will give up boarding and come and live with us."—Philadelphia Evening Call.

WHY HE COULDN'T FIGHT.

Two Brooklyn boys found a New Year's card case. It was not a valuable card case, but the boys at once quarreled for its possession. The smaller of the two, a slim little fellow, with red hair and a turned-up nose, displayed quite a phenomenal ability in the matter of blood-curdling threats and general braggadocio that the other boy, who had a head like a cannon-ball and a fist like the knotty end of a club, felt compelled to give up the quarrel in disgrace. A gentleman who was passing asked the larger boy why he did not take forcible possession of the card case, if he felt it was his by right of discovery.

"Kin I lick 'im!" said the boy, "in course I kin lick 'im. I kin jess ram up into bits an' chew an' swallow 'im."

"Then why do you stand here?"

"You don't know that boy, Mister. Why, he kin talk bigger'n a preacher, and nobody but a deaf boy up on Henry street dast tackle him. I've tried 'im more'n once, but he scares me off every time. Why, he'd scare the wits outen Sullivan. Lick 'im! Jest tie his mouth up an' I'll show you how I kin lick 'im!"

LEAP YEAR LEVEE.

A young Chicago man has applied for a divorce, alleging that his wife forced him to marry her. This statement, and the fact that leap year is so near, will make timid young men feel very nervous.—Chicago Telegram.

It is understood that the girls have adopted the following as their motto for leap year: "If you see what you want, ask for it."—Texas Siftings.

For several years past it has been customary for young men to shoot the girl who refuses to marry them. Of course the girls will be justified in running the tables next year.—Arkansaw Traveller.

The girls have already formed their plans for leap year. To the bashful lover they will say, "Do you like bread, made bread?" If he says, "Yes," the reply will be, "Well, I can bake." Then if he doesn't take the hint they may go to using both his hands, fall on their knees and put the question direct.

Although women have the right to propose in leap year, there is no law that compels man to say yes. This fact ought to encourage the young men to stand firm.—Philadelphia Herald.

Good Yankeeisms will only come from good souls. One cannot afford to sow doubtful seeds. Those of covetousness or without tables and of doubtful source, should be burned and a fine stock ordered.

The Wetumpka Times advocates the nomination of Chancellor Neil S. Graham for Congress in this district.

A call for a county Democratic mass meeting is published this week. A large attendance of the Democratic voters of the county is confidently expected.

The tramp law should be enforced, and every vagrant visiting this locality, should be arrested and jailed, until he can be made to work out a fine on the roads.

A man was ejected from a Chicago show of beautiful women because he remarked that if only things of beauty were joys forever the exhibits seemed doomed to eternal misery.

The New York Herald says that the recent cyclone is but a beginning and that with the advance of spring and summer cyclones and tornadoes will increase in frequency until July.

The Troy Messenger has this: "The member of the next Alabama legislature who devises a good plan for the improvement of Alabama's roads and keeping them in good condition will have a first mortgage on any office he may want."

A singular accident happened lately at a mill in Nashville, Tenn. A workman was thrown toward a circular saw, and, thinking he would strike it, died from fright. When picked up he was dead, but there was no sign of a bruise on his body.

DeVoe, the New Jersey weather prophet predicts for March: "The stormy days will be on or about March 2, 6, 9, 16, 21, 25 and 31. There will be a snow blockade in New York State on the 21st. It will probably extend south of New Jersey. Northeast gales will occur about the 3d, 7th, 10th, 22d and 27th of March. Although March will be cold yet the outlook is very favorable for a fruitful season."

As was expected, Hon. John M. McKleroy resigned the Chairmanship of the State Democratic Executive Committee at the called meeting of that body on Thursday last. Capt. McKleroy stated in his letter of resignation that his resignation was tendered as a proper move since he had determined to become a candidate for Governor before the State Convention. Col. N. H. R. Dawson, of Dallas, was elected Chairman of the committee by acclamation, and Hon. H. C. Tompkins was elected a member of the committee to fill the vacancy occasioned by Mr. McKleroy's resignation. And now the campaign will open in earnest, and a lively time may be expected.

A peculiar gambling case came before the Bow street Police Court in London on the 16th of April, 1812. Two men, one tall and stout and the other short, were charged under the following remarkable circumstances: A Bow street officer named Croker was passing along the Hampstead road when he observed the two prisoners at the top of a wall. A moment later he saw to his horror the tall man hanging by his neck from a lamp post attached to the wall, being that instant tied up and turned off by the short man. Croker rushed up to the spot, when the tall man fell to the ground, the handkerchief with which he had been suspended having fortunately given way. Croker produced his staff, said he was an officer, and demanded an explanation of the proceeding; the only reply he received to his inquiry being a violent blow on the nose from the tall man, which nearly knocked him backward. The short man ran away; but the officer, procuring assistance, managed to capture both. They explained to the bench that they worked on canals. They had been tossing for money, and afterward for their clothes. The tall man, who was hanged, won the other's jacket, trousers, and shoes. They then agreed to toss up which should hang the other, and the short man won. They got upon the wall, and the tall man paid his debt of honor by allowing the short man to hang him. They both agreed in this; and the tall man said if he had won the toss he would assuredly have hanged his friend.

Withdrawn.

In a letter published in Wednesday's Montgomery Advertiser, Col. J. M. McKleroy says he has made a mistake and that he will not be a candidate for Governor before the State Convention. This, we think, was a step on the part of Col. McKleroy both wise and patriotic. This paper supported that gentleman for Governor not from any hostility to Gen. O'Neal, who has served the people well, but because it preferred Col. McKleroy for the high position. We predict for Col. McKleroy even higher honors than are to be obtained from the Governor's office.

Our Legislators.

ED. CHILTON VIEW: As this is the year to elect members to the State Legislature, we may expect as usual in every county in the State, there will be many patriotic men, who will be glad to sacrifice themselves in the service of the dear people. Many will not care whether the people will want them or not, they have the brass and patriotism to serve the people, and they are determined on doing it, even if they are not wanted. Now as all pray to be delivered from floods and tornadoes, we should not forget the last session of the Legislature of Alabama, but remember it with prayers that we be delivered from another such. It is true that there were many very good men in the last Legislature, but they could do but little as they were overrun by weak ones. Now, to avoid the return of such a calamity, we would suggest that those who aspire to the high trust of making laws for our State, carefully examine themselves, and see if they understand what they desire to do if they should become members of that body: Are they familiar with our road laws and our miserable system of public schools, our revenue laws, and our election laws and our jury system with all their defects, all of which certainly require a change and a radical change. If our would-be martyr sees and comprehends these things, can he draw up a bill? can he frame a law and embody it in such language as will be harmonious and consistent with the symmetry of wise laws? If so, can he introduce his bill and discuss its merits? Does he understand the financial condition of Alabama, what measures will be best to pay her liabilities and preserve her credit? If Chilton county has such a man, we should try to send him to represent us in the next legislature. If not, we had better, with all other counties that cannot send competent men, let the seats be vacant; so that what good men should be in that body can work without being encumbered with brainless drones.

The people do not want to send Col. Snoodles or Dr. Doodles, just because he wants to go to gratify his vanity or further his self-aggrandizement; they want live, practical men, who comprehend the possibilities and boom of Alabama. We are tired of seeing nothing in the proceedings of the legislature but bills to revise "section 3608 of Code." Good, commonsense, practical legislation is what the people want. JULIUS.

Clanton, Ala., March 3d, '84.

The Birmingham Age furnishes the following as to the support received from the press by the two Gubernatorial candidates that are now before the people:

Neutral—Birmingham Age, Montgomery Advertiser, Union Springs Herald.

O'Neal—Mobile Register, Talladega Mountain Home and Reporter, Athens Post and Courier, Huntsville Democrat, Mercury and Independent, Tuscumbia North Alabamian, Decatur News, Florence Gazette, Blountsville News, Marion Democrat, Greensboro Beacon and Watchman, Tuscaloosa Times and Gazette, Gadsden News and Times, Shelby Sentinel, Birmingham Chronicle, Oxanna Tribune, Eutaw Whig.

McKleroy—Eufaula Times and Bulletin, Tuskegee News, LaFayette Sun, Brewton Banner, Marion Standard, Opelika Review, Moulton Advertiser, Chilton View, Troy Enquirer, Oxford News, Greenville Advocate, Columbia Enterprise, Clayton Courier, Abbeville Times, Ozark Star, Geneva Bulletin, Wetumpka Times, Selma Mail, Franklin News, Clay Co. Watchman, Choctaw Herald, Anniston Hot Blast, Marengo News-Journal, Monroe Journal.

Anybody to beat O'Neal—Selma Times, Eutaw Mirror.

The Age omited the names of the Columbiana Chronicle and the Florence North Star from the O'Neal list, and the names of the Prattville Signal, the Conecuh Star and the Bibb Blade from the list of McKleroy supporters. The Decatur News should be placed among the "neutrals," as that paper is not a decided supporter of either candidate.

The Gadsden Times gets off this paragraph:

If the Mr. Vincent who is mentioned in the London papers as financial adviser of the Khedive of Egypt is our Ike, the Khedive will soon have all the advice and Vincent all the finance.

Philosophy of Advertising.

In his address to the editors of Indiana, at their recent meeting at Fort Wayne, Col. Pierce, of Chicago, presented the following thoughts with reference to advertising, which are worth remembering. He said:

And in presenting a beautiful sheet typographically one should remember the advertisers as well as the readers. A man likes to have his advertisement pleasing to look upon, catching to the eye, and indicative generally of the advertiser. This class of patrons are so important to success that they should receive every encouragement. Particularly should they be impressed with the desirability of keeping their wares before the public. A man never realizes the full benefits of advertising till he has placed the matter before the same people fifty or a hundred times. The first ad. is good, but the one hundredth is worth more than five hundred times as much as the first. Some one has said that the

First time a man looks at an advertisement he does not see it.

The second time he does not notice it.

The third time he is dimly conscious of it.

The fourth time he faintly remembers something of the kind before.

The fifth time he half reads it.

The sixth time he turns up his nose at it.

The seventh time he throws the paper down impatiently.

The eighth time he ejaculates: "There's the confounded thing again."

The ninth time he wonders if there's anything in it.

The tenth time he thinks it might possibly suit somebody else's case.

The eleventh time he thinks he will ask his neighbor if he has tried it, or knows anything about it.

The twelfth time he wonders if the advertiser can make it pay.

The thirteenth time he rather thinks it must be a good thing.

The fourteenth time he happens to think it is just what he wanted.

The fifteenth time he, for a long time, resolves to try it as soon as he can afford it.

The sixteenth time he examines the address carefully and makes a memorandum of it.

The seventeenth time he is tantalized to think he is hardly able to afford it.

The eighteenth time he sees painfully how much he is in need of that particular article.

The nineteenth time he counts his money to see how much he would have left if he bought it.

The twentieth time he rushes frantically forth and buys it.

Calliersville Dots.

Notwithstanding the severe weather on the 1st inst., some of our neighbors tried their luck fishing, but without success.

Mr. Moore, Mr. Brazelton and Miss Tinnie Crum, all of Selma, paid us a visit on the 2d.

There have been several persons arrested and sent to Montgomery for getting timber from Government land.

A severe wind passed through on the 7th, followed by an immense quantity of rain, doing much damage.

Miss Sallie Crum is spending a short time with friends in Selma.

Dixie has a good school and a fine teacher.

There is a happy family on the hill now. Four generations under one roof. Mr. Adams, of the firm of Adams & Callier is the happy father of a fine boy.

There is a whiskey shop in three miles of Dixie. Is it possible?

M. A. H.

A farmer's club has been organized in a neighboring county, with the object of striving to see who can raise the most corn this year on one acre of land. Each one who enters the contest is required to deliver a bushel of corn at a specified place, and the farmer who makes the most corn on an acre is to have all the corn thus delivered. It would be a good idea to form such clubs in every county and beat, and the result would be that no member would have to buy corn.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which have ever characterized him.

Now we say with feelings of profound gratitude to our many customers for past favors, that by strict attention and promptitude in business, and fair dealing with all, we hope to maintain our former standing, to retain our old patrons and to secure many new ones. Come one, come all, but not all at once.

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and renew all the secretions healthy. Numerous testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Quite a crowd witnessed the base ball game last Saturday.

Mrs. Mary Marsh, will entertain during court regular and transient boarders.

The new cottage, of Mr. T. J. Davis is quite an improvement to his lot.

Col. D. T. Blakey, of Montgomery, was in town Monday, on professional business.

Live merchants keep business brisk by advertising what they have to sell at all seasons. Try it.

Mr. Willis Lowe has the material on his lot preparatory to erecting his fruit store near the depot.

Miss Annie Hall, of Nixburg, visited Clanton during the past week, and was the guest of Miss Gussie Evans.

Married, in this county, on the 6th inst., at the residence of the bride's father, by Squire S. L. Arledge, Mr. R. M. Porter and Miss S. J. Bolton.

The "Black Hawks," of Verbena, played a match game of base ball with a Clanton club, on Saturday. The "Black Hawks" were victorious by a score of 15 to 10. Another game is to be arranged soon, to be played at Verbena.

Albert Thacker, a young son of Mr. J. W. Thacker, while cutting wood on Saturday had the axe to slip and it came near cutting his foot off at the instep. It is hoped that the accident may not prove dangerous.

Messrs. Gregory & Coe, at Stanton, have sent out circulars containing the following information: "On January 12th, 1884, a post office was established at Stanton, Chilton county, Ala. All communications intended for the mail should be addressed to that point."

The Agent's Herald, published by L. Lum Smith, at Philadelphia, is the best thing in its way that we have seen. It is doing a needed work in exposing the frauds and mountebanks that infest the larger towns to prey upon an unwary and unsuspecting public. Long life to the Agent's Herald.

The young men of the Clanton base ball club regaled themselves with a dance at the Thornton House, on Saturday night. The Verbena club left on the evening mail train, and could not take part. The Verbena club is composed of a most courteous and gentlemanly set of young men, and Clanton was glad to make their acquaintance.

A very large and beautifully executed picture of Bartholdi's great statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," has been presented to us by the Travelers Ins. Co., of Hartford, Conn., who have been among the most liberal contributors to the Fund. The picture, which is 26x36 inches in size, gives an excellent idea of the superb work of art which is to adorn the harbor of New York.

Verbena Views.

Some refreshing electrical thunder showers last week.

The usual Spring-fever has begun, and the poetic youth will soon give full rein to his fiery Pegasus.

Prof. J. L. Williams, county surveyor, was at work in our neighborhood last week.

We forgot to note, last week, That Miss Etta Haralson had closed her school at Wadsworth and is now at home.

Sheriff Garner was here last week, issuing summons for court attendance.

O. J. Dollins, a young man from the Buckeye State, after spending several months among our gay youths, gave his creditors the slip, and winged his way northward. His unsettled accounts amount to some one hundred and fifty dollars. His father was down here last fall looking for mineral lands, and, after a short stay, returned north leaving some Alabamians richer in experience and poorer in purse.

Mrs. M. A. Bateman and Miss Fannie Wainwright, of Prattville, are visiting Mrs. Davis.

Our Prof. is preparing for the Summer campaign by enlarging his phiz with a new set of side-whiskers.

The large road forces at work, recently, have considerably improved the condition of our roads.

Miss Abbotte Spratlen, assistant teacher at the academy, was incapacitated for work by several days illness last week.

Rev. J. W. Shores preached a good sermon at the Methodist church Sunday night.

A young man, a Mr. Schell, of Texas, who, with his family, was visiting at Mr T. B. Bristow's, died here to-day, the 7th inst., of Typhoid fever. He was sick when he arrived last week. We extend our sympathies.

Mr. H. C. Humes has just finished painting Mrs. Davis' house, and will at once begin work on the new dwelling erected by Prof. Haralson.

Sheriff Garner came down today and arrested two negroes, Sam Nettles and Lewis Price, who have attempted to wreck trains by breaking the switch locks at this station. It is believed that they had a hand in the freight train wreck last December.

The members of our base ball club, the "Black Hawks," are jubilant over their victory at Clanton last Saturday, and speak in high terms of Clanton's hospitality. Their victory was a surprise to all except Mr. R. Ehrman, of Clanton, who predicted Verbena's success. The two clubs will have another game, this time at Verbena, the first Friday in May.

Base ball talk all around. We hear of an effort to raise a second nine among our sober and sedate old men who are getting back some of their youth since the base ball boom has started. Success to the movement! BIJOU.

A bevy of young ladies visited the VIEW office on Saturday to be shown into the art typographic. Only one of the "devils" was in at the time, the others having collapsed with the baseball fever, and the remaining one was so bewildered with the glitter of so much feminine loveliness in the dismal sanctum that he didn't know whether he was explaining to them the art of sticking type or of making "pi." He intends, however, to be prepared for the next siege, so will invite them to call again.

Standing advertisements in a paper command confidence. The man who for years resides in a community and lives a reputable life, even though he be of moderate abilitity, will grow in the confidence and esteem of his fellows. On the same principle a newspaper advertisement becomes familiar to the reader. It may seldom be carefully read, still it makes the name and business of a man familiar, and its continued presence in the columns of a paper inspires confidence in the stability of the advertiser.

Democratic Mass Meeting.

A call is hereby made for a mass meeting of the Democratic and Conservative voters of Chilton county, to meet at the courthouse, in Clanton, on Tuesday, the 25th day of March, 1884, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to transact such other business as may come before it.

A. J. BROOKS,
Acting Chairman.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Sinkings after eating, Aversion to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

A CRACKSMAN'S CHAT.

WHAT HE SAYS ABOUT JOB AND HIS BUSINESS.

How a Burglar gets Into a House at Night And Gets Out Again.

"What is the prime quality in your business?"

"Nerve—nothing else."

"What is the best method?"

"Boldness. Many a job have I done right before the eyes of people, done it just as though it was the regular thing and I was just where I ought to be. I have had my pal taking things out of a house when a couple of cops were walking by, and stood with a pencil, in my hand, keeping tally of the things. They thought it was allright, as I looked right at them. I tell you a fellow wants to keep perfectly cool and know what he is doing, and what he is going to do every time.

"The right kind of men are somehow lacking. They are either too timid or too rough. It wants a fine man, a real Damascus blade, to do a neat job. There are plenty of opportunities, if there were only the men to fill them. But I was speaking about chances. The people are asleep; you are awake. They are timid; you are perfectly cool. You know just what they will do if they wake up. They don't know how many are in the house, nor where you are. Most people are cowards in the night. Without any odds you could get the best of them, but in the night with the bugbear and the reality of a burglar in the house—and they have spent all the years of their lives in working up a dreadful fellow in their imagination—in such a plight a man's house is like a foreign land to him, and he is a perfect stranger to the situation in his own home."

"How do you feel when you are alone in a house at the dead of night and running such terrible risks?"

"There, now, you have got as much nonsense into that question as they usually do. In the first place, midnight is not the usual hour when a house is worked. Things are not so quiet generally as they are two hours later. And then, if it were midnight, what of it? Midnight except to cowards is no different from any other hour, only as it is a great deal safer for those like us. Alone in a house? It is a little shaky at times, but generally safe enough; but that isn't the way a house is generally worked. There should be two, and three are better. Terrible risks? We don't think of it in that light. There is something fascinating about the risk, and it isn't considered objectionable. What do we think? How do we feel? Now, look here, there isn't much time nor occasion for thinking and feeling outside of the job to be done. Your sentimental chaps don't want to be prowling about nights on any of these delicate 'rackets.' The man who is going to stop in a bedroom of a strange house at two o'clock at night to consult his feelings had better keep out of the bedroom. The man who proposes to enter this profession will want to run very slow on the thinking and feeling line, particularly when he is on duty."

"How does an operator feel when he is confronted by some inmate?"

"In the first place he feels that something must be done pretty quick. Dodge 'em if you can, but no fooling anyhow. Do anything short of killing, if necessary. The women are the hardest to handle, except a man who wakes up cool with his weapons handy. The funniest experience I ever had was when I went into a bedroom one night where there was one man asleep. I was at the bureau drawers, and looking into the glass I saw him sit bolt upright and look at me. I turned pretty quick, you may believe, but he never stirred nor spoke. I didn't move after turning round, but looked at him and he at me. I very soon saw that he was not awake. I gathered up the swag and walked round the bed to the door, but his eyes were on me all the while. I got out of the room safely, and he never spoke or afterward made any disturbance. I didn't stay much longer in that house."—Boston Herald.

A Friend in Need.

Mr. Horace B. Claflin, the great dry goods merchant of New York city, was sitting alone in his private office, late one afternoon, when a young man, pale and careworn, timidly knocked and entered.

"Mr. Claflin," said he, "I am in need of assistance. I have been unable to meet certain payments, because certain parties have not done as they agreed by me; and I would like to have ten thousand dollars. I come to you because you were a friend to my father and might be a friend to me."

"Come in, said Claflin. "Come in and have a glass of wine."

"No," said the young man. "I don't drink."

"Have a cigar, then?"

"No, I never smoke."

"Well," said the joker, "I would like to accommodate you; but I don't think I can."

"Very well," said the young man, as he was about to leave the room. "I thought, perhaps, you might. Good day, sir."

"Hold on," said Mr. Claflin. "You don't drink?"

"No."

"Nor smoke?"

"No."

"Nor gamble, nor anything of the kind?"

"No, sir."

"Well," said Mr. Claflin, with tears in his eyes, too, "you shall have it, and three times that amount if you wish. Your father let me have five thousand dollars once and asked me the same questions. He trusted me, and I will trust you. No thanks. I loved it for your father's sake."

HAND-EMBROIDERED suspenders are now worn, but lots of men will continue to hold up their pants with a leather belt fastened with a shingle nail.

Echoes in the Capitol Dome.

"Did you ever hear the echoes of the Capitol dome?" asked the old man of the oldest part of the dome, just under the worm eaten portion, of an old watchman to a reporter the other day.

"Why, no; tell me about it," said the reporter with sudden interest, getting close to the old man and speaking in a low confidential tone.

"No, you didn't know it. Well, it ain't!" he said, shutting his mouth with a snap and looking as inscrutable as a dried purple-pest, parrot tells you that it is 7 miles to——, and leaves you to guess where.

"Yes, that's the Senate side," he said to a wild-eyed countryman who was staring about in quest of that desirous body. Then turning to the reporter, "No, it ain't haunted."

"It's not, eh? Well, I thought not," replied the scribe, sticking his thumbs into the arm-holes of his vest and looking at the new frieze-work.

"No, it ain't haunted; it ain't haunted," repeated the old man with a low chuckle. "A man committed suicide on the rail there some time, but it ain't haunted." Then he looked knowingly at the reporter to see if his curiosity was sufficiently aroused. But the scribe was admiring the "Baptism of Pocahontas," and the old man assumed a more confidential tone. "You remember the man that jumped off there? It ain't been so long about, and it seems years. You know he stood on the rail of the highest balcony and throwing up his arms to heaven, gave a wild plunge and was crushed on the iron roof, nearly two hundred feet below. Well, I guess his ghost went somewhere, but it didn't stay about here."

"Well, what are you talking about then?" said the reporter, the interest getting the better of his patience.

"No, it didn't stay about here," he continued, not heeding the reporter's impatience, "but some folks think it did, and it seems kind o'natural that it should, too. Lots of queer folks go up on the dome. I've been here a long time, and I see lots of them. They go up there more in the winter than they do in the summer—ten to one more. It's too hot to climb the stairs in the summer. There are now [illegible] with Congress. They come to the Capitol every day, and always go to the dome. They say it's the concerts, that's what I tell them. But I know that they go there for, any more than I know why a church-mouse stays in church. All the strangers who come here want to go on the dome, and couples who want to get off by themselves often go up there. You can see them standing on every landing, looking out the windows with a way-off look. Then there are certain who go up there to get nearer Heaven."

"Well, yes, I know," interrupted the reporter, "but what's all this got to do with the dome's being haunted? Did any of these curious visitors ever get frightened at a ghost up there and run down stairs? Has any one's hair been turned suddenly white by the sight of a specter about to plunge head-long in a suicidal leap? Where does the ghost come in?"

"Didn't I say there weren't any ghosts," retorted the old man, an injured expression passing over his face. "I was just coming to that," he said, recovering his good humor under the influence of the reporter's conciliatory smile. "There ain't any ghost up there, but some of these strangers get frightened and think the house is haunted. It all comes of the 'whisper gallery.' You know the 'whisper gallery'? Well, you know when people are talking around on the other side the echoes bring their voices right close up to you. A great many strangers hearing these voices and not seeing any one have jumped at the conclusion that the place is haunted. Knowing that a man committed suicide there, they think that his troubled spirit still lingers about the scene. As I told you, it ain't haunted, it's only the echoes."

A Story of an Elephant.

There is a beautiful story of an old elephant engaged in a battle on the plains of India. He was a standard-bearer, and carried on his huge back the royal ensign, the rallying point of the Poona host. At the beginning of the fight he lost his master. The "mahout," or driver, had just given him the word to halt, when he received a fatal wound, and fell to the ground, where he lay under a heap of slain. The obedient elephant stood still while the battle waged around him and the standard he carried. He never stirred a foot, refusing to advance or retire, as the conflict became hotter and fiercer, until the Mahrattas, seeing the standard still flying steadily in its place, refused to believe that they were being beaten, and rallied again and again round the colors. And all this while, amid the din of battle, the patient animal stood straining its ears to catch the sound of that voice it would never hear again. At length the tide of conquest left the field deserted. Mahrattas swept on in pursuit of the flying foe, but the elephant, like a rock, stood there, with the dead and dying around, and the ensign waving in its place. For three days and nights it remained where its master had given the command to halt. No bribe or threat could move it. They then sent to a village, 100 miles away, and brought the mahout's little son. The noble hero scented that it remember how the driver had sometimes given his authority to the little child, and immediately, with all the chattering trappings clinging as he went, paced quietly and slowly [illegible]

THE SHARKS of Florida find means to themselves of the sharks which abound in those waters in a novel way. The root of the dogwood is certain death to them. Whenever a shark is discovered a small fish is killed, this root enclosed and thrown overboard, and in a few minutes the carcass of the shark rises to the surface.

The Lucky Prediction.

"It's the easiest thing in the world to get married," said [illegible] one evening recently, [illegible] ing matrimony for young men in an uptown hall; "it's as easy as rolling off a log, as thanksgiving. [illegible] that it is his duty, [illegible] philosophers agree that the foundation of the state is the family, friends point out to him the happy life to [illegible] possible. The young man [illegible] to protest against all this opposition, and, if he is a right-minded person, he will not try to oppose such logic. If he is of proper age, is matured in his judgment, can support a wife, and is reasonably industrious, he ought to be married before twenty-five. But there are many [illegible] never speak to a decent woman from one year's end to another. Sometimes engaged in [illegible] only associate with [illegible] ployed; others in offices which [illegible] have a female visitor. Their [illegible] in lonely furnished rooms, with meals at restaurants. These poor fellows actually pine for refined female society. One whose loneliness has come to my notice lives in Harlem."

The reporter left this callback, and got from him his story. He was living in a furnished room and boarding at restaurants. After two years of this life he began to wish for some refined female society, and accordingly engaged board in a fashionable boarding-house in East Seventeenth street. He was somewhat surprised by the greed with which his week's board was demanded in advance, and almost snatched out of his hands, but comforted himself with a glimpse of a golden-haired head through a half-opened door.

The young man had stipulated for a fire in his room, but on going up at night found it as cold as a barn. He called for the landlady, and, after repeated trials, succeeded in gaining her attention. In an injured tone she promised to raise a little fire in the room. In half an hour or so, during which the young man grew warm from inward heat a frowzy and slatternly servant-girl came in with a bang, threw some kindling-wood on the hearth, lit it, put on a little coal, and went away, taking the coal-bucket with her. He started after her to secure the bucket, but too late, and met only the golden-haired beauty say: "What's the matter with that galoot upstairs?"

"Oh, he wants fire, and luck to him."

"Well, he must be a gilly. Carry him up the kitchen stove."

Slowly and sadly the young man in search of refined female society pulled on his overcoat, walked down to the street, hired an express wagon, helped to put his trunk on, and quit the house just in time to hear the golden-haired young woman remark: "Well, I knew that fellow was a fraud when I first saw him."

He went to his old furnished room. It had not been let. It was warm and comfortable, and he heard the cheery laugh of the landlady and her delighted remark: "I expected you back, but not quite so soon." That was his last attempt to find refined female society. The young man said there were sixty such isolated fellows in his block.—New York Sun.

How Millionaires are Made.

"Who is the wealthiest man in California?" asked a reporter of an old Californian.

"Jim Flood, worth $100,000,000; he is a liberal man and a shrewd one. He has built up on San Francisco Bay a new port called Costa City, with magnificent store-houses and piers from which the wood of those rich counties is shipped direct to Europe and the world. O'Brien, Flood's partner, is dead and his fortune distributed. Mackey, one of the bonanza crowd, is thought to be worth $60,000,000, and Jim Fair is worth perhaps $40,000,000."

Said I: "How in the world did Flood and O'Brien make such fortunes?"

"Just in this way, my friend," said Mr. Hyneman, taking up a piece of paper and a pencil. "Flood and O'Brien kept a saloon, and the drinks were 25 cents apiece. Fair and Mackey were miners who for some years did not strike anything very rich. So they gave mining stock for the drinks instead of money. The habit was to walk into the saloon with three or four friends, ask for the drinks and drink them, repeat and say to the barkeeper, 'This is mine,' and walk out. The barkeeper made four marks with a pencil and a fifth mark across them, signifying $1.25 for each round. These rounds would go up to a pretty high figure, [illegible] occasion Mackey or Fair would say, 'Well, Flood, we want to make a settlement for drinks,' and they would give their mining stock at a certain valuation current at that time which Flood and O'Brien put into the safe. Behold! On a certain day metal is struck in prodigious quantities in the mines that Fair and Mackey own, and when Flood and O'Brien open the safe and count the stock they have it amounts to more than Fair and Mackey's, or when the mines were pouring out their millions of [illegible] every week these saloon-keepers, who had been receiving 25 cents per drink for watered whisky, started a fortune."

Could not Sleep.

The Cheyenne (Wyoming) Leader tells this story: "A guest at a local hotel was surprised the other night to see his next-door neighbor [illegible] sheet. It left a mark of [illegible] light. A gunpowder [illegible] supposed to have been the cause. In fact, the [illegible] startled with [illegible] could not sleep, and finally [illegible] another [illegible]

Some people who play the flute all the afternoon [illegible] play the piano and we wonder why [illegible] near with their neighbors.

A TRUE FAIRY STORY.

[illegible] The [illegible] and proud, and [illegible] and Maud Marian. The [illegible] Triste. Triste, as you [illegible] sleepy and ca[illegible] and this Triste was [illegible] for [illegible] something. She had [illegible] —Triste, indeed, [illegible] her future life. She [illegible] to [illegible] more [illegible] dark room, [illegible] it was [illegible], poor Triste would always say, "Would God it were evening!" and when it was evening she would always say, "Would God it were morning!" and these two remarks were all the remarks she ever made.

Once an Evil Eye had looked hard upon Triste and called her ugly and deformed. She had burdened [illegible] feelings, the [illegible] and trembling, and her face. Well, if you looked at it once you did not dare to look again. As for the aches and pains that darted [illegible] and agitated through her, one would not suppose that a frame like Triste's could contain room for so many.

So Triste stayed in her dark room, and made her morning and her evening remark day after day, while Mary Maud and Maud Marian went to the balls and the tournaments and the feasts. Whenever the [illegible] of mirth and music from below where [illegible] enough to reach Triste's room at the top of the castle, she would draw her head down her hands and weep, and the weeping and the making her two remarks were all the amusements she had.

But, after a while something wonderful happened. One morning as Triste was sitting in her room wishing it was evening, she heard a new sound. It was not the mirth and music, it was not the clumsy-footed servant bringing up the dreadful meals, it was something coming up the winding stairs with a rap-tapping noise. The rap came on, and finally Triste's door opened and a little, old, bent-over woman with a walking-stick came in. The little old woman's face was white and wrinkled, her hair was white as snow, but eyes were black and so very bright that they lit up a space around her like a couple of candles and made Triste's dark room quite light. The little old woman tapped three times on the floor with her walking stick and looked 'round the room. "I am your godmother," she said, when she saw Triste up in the corner; "you don't remember me, but I remember you; I did not forget you, my poor child."

"Oh, would God it were evening!" said Triste, trying to be sociable and meaning, perhaps, "Good-morning, ma'am! How do you do?" or something like that.

"Hark ye, goddaughter," said the godmother, "do you want to go to the tournaments with your sisters? Do you want to sit down at the feast? Do you want to have the brave young knights and princes, with their snow-white plumes and their coal-black chargers, come riding to woo you as they come to woo your sisters? Do you want to sing? Do you want to laugh? Do you want to dance?"

Then Triste put her head into her hands and began to cry by way of carrying the sociability.

"Stop your crying, goddaughter," said the godmother, tapping her three taps on the floor again, and as Triste raised her head she shone upon her with her beautiful eyes and dried up the tears, and while her eyes were shining she went on talking:

"I was your godmother when you were christened, Rosabel. When the Evil Eye struck you and cursed you, and you were turned into Triste the Sad, I did not desert you like the others. I have been wandering over the world ever since to find the Fairy that could take off the curse of that Evil Eye. I have wandered, wandered—oh, how I have wandered! I was handsome and straight as a poplar tree; I am old and crooked, but I do not care. I have found the Fairy. It ran from me, it flew, it hid, it went up and down; it was never there when I put my hand on it, —but I got it at last." And the godmother tapped her three taps, and laughed three merry laughs, that ran round the wrinkles in her face like streaks of quicksilver. "I found it, I put it into a bottle and corked it down tight; I have brought it to you."

The godmother drew from under the tattered cloak a bottle, in which was a little Fairy, jumping and sprinkling and making funny little fairy bows and gestures. The godmother laughed her three merry quicksilver laughs again as the little Fairy looked at it. "It is meek and quiet enough now," she said. "The Fairy. Once caught it gives up. It will perform its mission. Do as it bids, pound it to dust, and the curse of fate will [illegible]

The godmother pressed the fairy into Triste's hand, and before Triste had got over being perfectly dazed at the gift the godmother was tapping down the winding-stair with her walking-stick, and Triste was left alone with the bottled Fairy.

How long it took her to get over being dazed; how soon she released the Fairy from the bottle; what it said and what it did, first, second, and last, we can all put into fairy history for ourselves. However and whatever the magic and mummery is certain that those frolicsome echoes and noises which God made of Triste their exercise grounds and camping places, were roused out, big and small, little and big. She stopped making her two remarks and learned some new ones. And one began to live in the room which the windows; and she got to crave and [illegible] that she would sometimes at night, when the garden was still and dark, steal herself all round and steal down the winding stairs, walk under the trees, and to look at the stars and the moon.

From looking at the stars and the moon she wanted to look at the sun. And one [illegible] day, right in the very brightest sunshine, Triste walked boldly into the garden. The birds were singing, the flowers were blowing, the trees, the frogs, the fountains—everything was glorious. And wonderful—she walked on with extraordinary [illegible] and easiness, and so happy she did not know whether it was the birds she heard singing, or some kind of music within herself. She stopped beside a fountain, and as she glanced in, the silver water smiled back to her with a frank, happy face—such a free, happy face, so free from those old dreadful lines and marks of the Evil Eye, that Triste cried out for joy, and yet such a wonderful change as this she did not half believe it was [illegible] to [illegible] she saw in the water.

She did not half believe it until the old godmother came from behind some shrubbery, laughing her quicksilvery laughs fast and loud, and saying: "Hot hot, sir! Romeo! Rosabel! Whatever the [illegible] between the laughs. And Mary Maud and Maud Marian, who happened to be walking in the garden, heard the laughing and came to the fountain, and when they saw and understood they pressed Triste in their arms carrying for joy [illegible] and [illegible] Rosabel.

And so it was ever afterwards, Mary Maud, Maud Marian, and Rosabel, were the three sisters that lived in the castle. Triste the Sad was never more heard from. The little room at the top of the castle was locked up, and the key lost forever. When Rosabel went up to take a last look at her old room she found that the dear little Fairy had departed, but on the deserted bottle had left its name.—Dr. R. V. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

The above is perfectly true in all but the thin varnish of its seeming fable, and, indeed, the truth in it was considerably cracked and rubbed off even that thin coating. Do we not all know sad-spirited ones, to whom life is a curse on account of painful and deforming disease? Restless, discouraged souls, who say in the morning, "Would God it were evening!" and in the evening "Would God it were morning!" dragging out their weary days with no expectation of anything better this side of the grave.

If Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do what it claims to do it is surely a golden gift to humanity, that it will do so potently what it claims hardly admits of a doubt. If we take into consideration the exceptionability and position of its voucher, and the thousands of most trustworthy witnesses to its wonderful powers in their individual cases. Dr. Pierce is well known to the general public, not only for his Golden Discovery, but also in connection with the Worlds Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel at Buffalo, N. IF the profits be crowded out of the German and Mediterranean markets by Russian petroleum it becomes all the more important that we should cultivate our neglected trade with South America, Mexico, Canada, Australia and the West Indies. THE Madhi is not an Arab by birth, and is of a black hue, which is unacceptable to the Semitic Moslems. He belongs, however, to the Kadriyah order, which is held in very high veneration in Egypt and which preserves all the pagan superstitions, including the worship of the gigantic shoe of their founder. They are distinguished from other orders by their white banners and by carrying always fish nets in their processions. With the Malawiyeh and Ahmeiyeh they are among the most powerful of the Derwish orders in Syria and Egypt.

UNDER a bill which has passed the senate of Virginia and is now before the house, the State Lee Monument association (of which the state treasurer is the treasurer ex-officio) will have upon the redemption of their bonds, as provided for, about $28,000. The Ladies' Lee Monument association have $20,000; the Musical association $1,000 more; total $49,000, not including the rapidly growing veterans' fund. This money was collected all over the south, and is held in trust by these associations for building a monument in the city of Richmond to Robert E. Lee.

IN a recent lecture on "The Rainbow," Professor Tyndall described the rare phenomenon of a white rainbow which he had witnessed in the Alps, and also in Hampshire. This rainbow is caused by reflected light on a mist atmosphere. The professor showed how to produce this phenomenon by artificial means. At the same time it was shown how, when the air was composite, as, for instance, where water spray is mixed with paraffine oil spray, a still more wonderful rainbow results, such as is to be seen at almost all times in western China, whither the people flock at all times to witness what they call "The Glory of Buddha."

THERE are now forty-eight lady students in the Harvard annex, and it is the testimony of [illegible] Harvard professors that the average scholarship of the classes in the annex is above that of the college. Over fifty courses are open to the pupils, and of these Greek, Latin, English, German and mathematics attract the largest numbers. This year thirty-five out of the forty-eight ladies have chosen Greek electives. Two enthusiastic girls from Texas sold lands and traveled two thousand miles for privileges which Harvard university could not give to any woman's college. In return the Annex has sent a graduate to Montana as head of a classical school.

THE progress of the Washington national monument is very gratifying to the patriarchs who have been watching the work for more than half a century. The Monumental association was organized in 1839. By 1848 $300,000 had been collected by private subscriptions, and the sum of $230,000 was expended in raising the obelisk to the height of 154 feet. In 1876 the government took charge of the work, and has since appropriated $900,000. The monument is a trifle over 400 feet in height, and its total cost thus far has been $687,000, with a balance of $150,000 on hand, which will complete the work. The capstone will be completed by December, the base being fifty-five feet and the height 555 feet, overtopping all other constructions of human hands, the spire of the Cologne cathedral being 536 feet [illegible] Washington monument, when finished, will weigh 81,120 tons.

THE New York trade schools, though less than four years old, have successfully established themselves, and it is generally admitted that they fill a long felt want. At these schools hundreds of bright boys and young men are learning to master the mysteries of brick laying, plastering, plumbing, painting, stone-cutting and wood-carving. They pay only a moderate tuition fee, and in the course of five or six months they are prepared to go out into the world and earn their living. These schools have been [illegible] by the hostility of the trades unions to the apprentice system. If young men cannot learn useful trades in the regular way, they will learn in some other way, and under the new system it is said that a boy will receive more instruction in five months than he would get in the shops in a year's time. These institutions are not [illegible] their influence they will soon be established all over the country.

In 1879 only $1,800 was appropriated for the District of Columbia, and it was not until 1887 that the yearly proportion reached $1,000,000. SUMMARY OF CONGRESS.

Senate.

The House bill repealing the test oath was passed after being modified by an amendment proposed by the Senate judiciary committee, providing that no person who held a commission in the United States army or navy before the war and was afterward engaged in the military, naval or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, shall be appointed to any position in the army or navy of the United States.... Mr. Sewell introduced a bill to grant a pension to the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick.... A bill was introduced to incorporate the Yellowstone Park Reservation company.... The pleuro-pneumonia bill was amended in committe of the whole and reported to the House.

Consideration of the bill for the construction of new steel cruisers was resumed, and several amendments were adopted.... Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to relieve the members of the original Fitz-John Porter court martial of the obligation of secrecy as to the votes of members.... Mr. Pendleton, by request, introduced a bill to facilitate the settlement and development of Alaska, and appropriating $100,000 to open overland communication with that Territory.

Mr. Ransom reported adversely from the committee on appropriations his joint resolution providing for an appropriation to aid the sufferers by the recent great storm in the South. He explained that on investigation it appeared that the suffering caused by the storm was not of such a character as to baffle local and State relief.... A resolution by Mr. Plumb was agreed to calling on the secretary of state for information regarding the amount of wheat, rye, corn and cotton produced and consumed in foreign countries for several years back, and especially whether political or other complications are likely to occur in the near future calculated to influence the market value of American products or their cost.... Debate on the bill to construct seven more steel cruisers was resumed and it was finally passed—38 to 13.... Mr. Vest introduced a bill to incorporate the Interoceanic Ship Railway company, stating Captain Eads and his associates a body corporate, with power to hold property and to issue bonds to the extent of $50,000,000. The capital stock is limited to the same sum.

House.

A motion to strike out the enacting clause of the pleuro-pneumonia bill was defeated—113 to 114.... A resolution by Mr. Morrison was adopted, directing the secretary of the treasury to inform the House how much money is now in the treasury of the United States, under what provisions of law it is there retained, and how much, in view of the current receipts, expenditures, and legal liabilities of the treasury, can be applied at this time in liquidation of that part of the public debt soon payable, without embarrassing the department.... Mr. Phelps from the committee on foreign affairs, reported back the resolution directing that committee to inquire as to whether the minister of any foreign power has [illegible] resolution of the House by reflection on the committee [illegible] The committee had made an investigation but had not [illegible] any information on the subject, and asked to be excused from further consideration of the resolution. The report was agreed to without discussion and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. Dunnell, of Minnesota, obtained unanimous consent to have the clerk read the resolution of the executive committee of the Liberal Union of the German parliament, expressing its appreciation of the action of the House of Representatives in adopting resolutions in honor of Edward Lasker. Mr. Dunnell said he was convinced that the action of the Liberal Union was a true index of the feeling of united Germany. Mr. Gunther, of Wisconsin, expressed a similar opinion. Mr. Kasson thought the House would better consult its dignity by waiting until some official communication reached it showing that [illegible] had been made upon its action. Upon a motion the matter was referred to the committee on foreign affairs.... The pleuro-pneumonia bill was passed—157 to 137.... Public business being suspended, the House paid its tribute to the memory of the late Representative D. C. Haskell, of Kansas. Many eulogistic speeches were made by members, and as a further mark of respect the House adjourned.

Synopsis of the Bill as Passed by the House.

The pleuro-pneumonia bill, passed by the House, [illegible] provides that the commissioner of agriculture shall organize a bureau of animal industry and appoint a chief clerk, [illegible] shall be to investigate and report on the number, value and condition of the domestic animals of the United States, and also the cause of contagious [illegible] among them, and the means of the prevention and [illegible] to appoint two competent veterinary surgeons, whose duty it shall be to report upon [illegible] methods of treating, the [illegible] for animals, and the means [illegible] for the [illegible] contagious pleuro-pneumonia. The bill further provides [illegible] the owner of any cattle [illegible] of the [illegible] may be [illegible] if it is deemed necessary to slaughter, and in such case [illegible] may be necessary to extirpate [illegible] The authorities of the States shall pay one-half of the expense of the animals. It is [illegible] necessary to slaughter, and provides that the cost of disinfection and [illegible] of cattle [illegible] It prohibits the transportation from one State to another of any live stock affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and provides for the prosecution of any person violating this prohibition. The sum of $250,000 is appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of the bill.

STORM.

THE Eddystone Light of the Pacific is to be erected on [illegible] George's Reef, eight miles from the shore, opposite Crescent City, Cal., and will cost $400,000. The highest point of Seal Rock is fifty-four feet above mean tide. The light will be 100 feet higher.

THE growing power of Chile is attracting attention. The financial credit of Chile is exceptionally good; her foreign trade, which was barely $62,000,000 in value in 1875, has more than doubled since, and in 1882 exceeded $125,000,000, the balance of trade in her favor being $20,000,000. Her population, it should be recollected, is only 2,500,000, and our foreign trade in 1880, when we had 13,000,000 inhabitants, was much less in value. It must be admitted that Chile is the controlling power on the west coast of South America. She could at this moment command the Pacific coast of the United States. Any one of her [illegible] from clads could [illegible] every wooden vessel in our wretched navy, and any of our seaboard cities could be laid under contribution by [illegible] those formidable [illegible] which after [illegible] could [illegible] destroying the city by bombardment, could quietly steam away without danger. In the event of any complication between the United States and Chile as to the control of the Panama canal Chile could give us serious trouble, especially if she could privately be backed by England, France and every other South American country.

SUMMARY OF CONGRESS.

Senate.

The House bill repealing the test oath was passed after being modified by an amendment proposed by the Senate judiciary committee, providing that no person who held a commission in the United States army or navy before the war and was afterward engaged in the military, naval or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, shall be appointed to any position in the army or navy of the United States.... Mr. Sewell introduced a bill to grant a pension to the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick.... A bill was introduced to incorporate the Yellowstone Park Reservation company.... The pleuro-pneumonia bill was amended in committe of the whole and reported to the House.

Consideration of the bill for the construction of new steel cruisers was resumed, and several amendments were adopted.... Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to relieve the members of the original Fitz-John Porter court martial of the obligation of secrecy as to the votes of members.... Mr. Pendleton, by request, introduced a bill to facilitate the settlement and development of Alaska, and appropriating $100,000 to open overland communication with that Territory.

Mr. Ransom reported adversely from the committee on appropriations his joint resolution providing for an appropriation to aid the sufferers by the recent great storm in the South. He explained that on investigation it appeared that the suffering caused by the storm was not of such a character as to baffle local and State relief.... A resolution by Mr. Plumb was agreed to calling on the secretary of state for information regarding the amount of wheat, rye, corn and cotton produced and consumed in foreign countries for several years back, and especially whether political or other complications are likely to occur in the near future calculated to influence the market value of American products or their cost.... Debate on the bill to construct seven more steel cruisers was resumed and it was finally passed—38 to 13.... Mr. Vest introduced a bill to incorporate the Interoceanic Ship Railway company, stating Captain Eads and his associates a body corporate, with power to hold property and to issue bonds to the extent of $50,000,000. The capital stock is limited to the same sum.

House.

A motion to strike out the enacting clause of the pleuro-pneumonia bill was defeated—113 to 114.... A resolution by Mr. Morrison was adopted, directing the secretary of the treasury to inform the House how much money is now in the treasury of the United States, under what provisions of law it is there retained, and how much, in view of the current receipts, expenditures, and legal liabilities of the treasury, can be applied at this time in liquidation of that part of the public debt soon payable, without embarrassing the department.... Mr. Phelps from the committee on foreign affairs, reported back the resolution directing that committee to inquire as to whether the minister of any foreign power has [illegible] resolution of the House by reflection on the committee [illegible] The committee had made an investigation but had not [illegible] any information on the subject, and asked to be excused from further consideration of the resolution. The report was agreed to without discussion and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. Dunnell, of Minnesota, obtained unanimous consent to have the clerk read the resolution of the executive committee of the Liberal Union of the German parliament, expressing its appreciation of the action of the House of Representatives in adopting resolutions in honor of Edward Lasker. Mr. Dunnell said he was convinced that the action of the Liberal Union was a true index of the feeling of united Germany. Mr. Gunther, of Wisconsin, expressed a similar opinion. Mr. Kasson thought the House would better consult its dignity by waiting until some official communication reached it showing that [illegible] had been made upon its action. Upon a motion the matter was referred to the committee on foreign affairs.... The pleuro-pneumonia bill was passed—157 to 137.... Public business being suspended, the House paid its tribute to the memory of the late Representative D. C. Haskell, of Kansas. Many eulogistic speeches were made by members, and as a further mark of respect the House adjourned.

Synopsis of the Bill as Passed by the House.

The pleuro-pneumonia bill, passed by the House, [illegible] provides that the commissioner of agriculture shall organize a bureau of animal industry and appoint a chief clerk, [illegible] shall be to investigate and report on the number, value and condition of the domestic animals of the United States, and also the cause of contagious [illegible] among them, and the means of the prevention and [illegible] to appoint two competent veterinary surgeons, whose duty it shall be to report upon [illegible] methods of treating, the [illegible] for animals, and the means [illegible] for the [illegible] contagious pleuro-pneumonia. The bill further provides [illegible] the owner of any cattle [illegible] of the [illegible] may be [illegible] if it is deemed necessary to slaughter, and in such case [illegible] may be necessary to extirpate [illegible] The authorities of the States shall pay one-half of the expense of the animals. It is [illegible] necessary to slaughter, and provides that the cost of disinfection and [illegible] of cattle [illegible] It prohibits the transportation from one State to another of any live stock affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and provides for the prosecution of any person violating this prohibition. The sum of $250,000 is appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of the bill.

STORM.

THE Eddystone Light of the Pacific is to be erected on [illegible] George's Reef, eight miles from the shore, opposite Crescent City, Cal., and will cost $400,000. The highest point of Seal Rock is fifty-four feet above mean tide. The light will be 100 feet higher.

The dark-horses killed McKleroy off. They had hoped to do it in convention, but he preferred to have the funeral over and get back to his private business.—Selma Times.

The Monroe Journal mentions the following names as gubernatorial timber: Hon. Willis Brewer, of Lowndes; Hon. W. F. Foster, of Macon; Hon. W. H. Forney, of Calhoun; Hon. Pope Walker, of Madison, and Hon. Luke Pryor, of Lauderdale.

A Western woman applied to a doctor for a prescription for her husband's rheumatism. "Get that prepared," said the medical man, "and rub it well into your husband's back. If it does him any good let me know; I've got a touch of rheumatism myself."

Mr. A. S. Elliot telephoned the Chronicle as follows, to-day: "Please announce that I have just received from the Birmingham Rolling Mills three bundles of No. 27 sheet iron, the first ever manufactured in the south."

This is a most important announcement for Birmingham, and marks a new era in her progressive march as the coming chief manufacturing city of the south.—Birmingham Chronicle.

Secretary Lincoln has always been extremely popular with the colored people, especially in Washington, but his popularity has probably received a blow. A colored minister, highly recommended, applied to him recently for an army chaplaincy. The request was not acceded to. While it is true that there may not have been a vacancy, yet the colored people seem to think it was a discrimination against them, and are displeased. They found out a good while ago that in the distribution of favors by the Republicans in power the negro is carefully excluded.

The World's Exposition at New Orleans will devote 247 acres to lakes and gardens, showing the rarest trees and plants of Mexico, Central America, Florida and foreign countries. Horticultural hall will be 600 by 184 feet. Mr. P. J. Berckmans, of Augusta, Ga., has been appointed a special commissioner to confer with various European societies in reference to the fruit and plant display. The collective Mexican exhibit will be an immense thing, occupying a building 140x900 feet. Accompanying this exhibit will be a Mexican band and a battalion of Mexican troops. The Exposition will receive liberal encouragements from the leading countries of the world.

Miss Eva Mackey, the daughter of millionaire John Mackey, was born in California, and is hardly 20 years of age. Though a young lady of decided beauty and many rare accomplishments, she is but little identified with the fashionable world. A recent incident in her life very beautifully illustrates the strength and simplicity of her faith. Her mother was seized with a violent illness, and for days her life was despaired of by all except our little heroine, who when the physicians themselves had not a word of comfort to give, took her maid and went quietly to the famous grotto of our Lady of Lourdes, and there fell upon her knees and prayed five hours without ceasing for her mother's recovery.

One who knows tells us that Jefferson county has doubled its taxable property in four years, and that it now pays more taxes than any county in the state with the exception of Mobile and Montgomery counties. The counties of the black belt have been retrograding while Jefferson has been taking gigantic strides onward. In a few years we will overtake Montgomery but it may be possible that Mobile will keep ahead. What grand possibilities lie before the city on the gulf if she would but wake up from her Rip Van Winkle sleep and pierce the Warrior coal fields with a railroad! She could become the coaling station for ships which flit from the rice fields of China to the Golden Gate of California. When the canal is dug across the Isthmus of Panama these vessels will touch at her port and drop their precious shekels as the white sea gulls enrich the islands of the sea where they rest from their weary flight.—Birmingham Chronicle.

A Foolish Claim.

It is claimed by some that the Democratic party has an "unwritten law" to give each of its officers a second term, as "an endorsement," unless it has been clearly demonstrated that an officer has made a glaring failure in performing the duties of his office. With the few who think there is such a precedent in the Democratic party, many disagree, believing that no party claiming to be "a party of the people and for the people," should have any such precedent. Such a tacit law might be allowable in such an organization as the Republican party—a party of officeholders and for officeholders, but it can be emphatically denied that the Democratic party has ever abided by such weak and driveling sentimentalism. Can a man feel any more honored that he is given a second term simply because of "a custom of the party"? To the majority it would appear as if "damning him with faint praise." Col. McKleroy, in his letter withdrawing from the race for Governor, touched upon this precedent in the following language, which is the only true definition of the precedent as established by the Democracy: "I deny the existence of any precedent which has power to estop the party from voluntarily selecting its nominees for each term of office as by law. If there is such a precedent, then the sooner it is abrogated the better it will be. I understand the precedent to be to renominate those officers whose former administrations were so satisfactory to the people that they believed it best to have a continuance of such administration—best for the general welfare, and not simply as a reward even to a faithful and efficient officer."

Col. McKleroy is on the side of the people, and is right.

Relief of Mr. Pratt.

MR. EDITOR:—I see from the quotations of various papers in the State that there is a general feeling and desire on the part of the people of Alabama, to reimburse Mr. M. E. Pratt (by voluntary contributions) for the heavy, and I think, as many others do, the unjust debt that he is laboring now to pay the State, in consequence of Vincent's deficit. I say this debt, in part, at least, is unjust because the deficit was made principally after the expiration of Vincent's first term as State Treasurer, and Mr. Pratt not being informed by the State officials (whose duty it was to investigate the state of the Treasury) that Vincent was squandering the funds of the State, Mr. Pratt, unhesitatingly did what he would certainly not have done with the lights before him, that is, placed his name on Vincent's bond for the second term.

Now, had the State officials and the Legislature done their duty and informed themselves and Mr. Pratt that Vincent's dealings with the State were not in accordance with law and honesty, and Mr. Pratt had then gone on his bond, I would say that Mr. Pratt should pay as long as he was able to pay a single dollar or until the full amount of Vincent's deficit had been paid to the State, and would have had no sympathy for Mr. Pratt. But neither the State officials nor the Legislature let the "cat out of the wallet" until Vincent had endeavored to make his bond for a third term, and Gov. O'Neal insisted upon a stronger bond than he found himself able to make. However, Mr. Pratt was shrewd enough to know that Vincent was handling too much money and in too loose a way, and refused to make his third bond. I say make his third, for if Mr. P. had gone on his bond, the bond would have been accepted and the State would have been still the greater loser. So, it is evident to all that Mr. Pratt deserves the sympathy of the people, as the principal in exposing Vincent's dishonesty.

Now as a voluntary contribution is the remedy suggested by many of Mr. Pratt's friends and sympathizers, I will make the following suggestions:—1st, That we Chiltonians show our appreciation of a good and valuable citizen of Alabama, by forming what we might term a "Pratt Relief Society," of which society the people of Chilton county shall all be regarded as members. 2d, That a good man be requested to act as soliciting agent in the different neighborhoods of the county. 3d. That one good man residing in Clanton be requested to act as general receiver of funds collected in the county, and to forward such funds to the State Treasurer at Montgomery, to be placed to Mr. M. E. Pratt's credit. 4th, That Judge Callen be selected as the general receiver at Clanton, and Mess. W. H. Lawrence, of Clanton, P. C. Dennis, of Cooper's, A. J. Brooks, of Verbena, J. F. Maull, of Lomax, S. J. Heath, of Strasburg, J. P. Allen, of Jemison, J. P. Vanderveer, Clear Creek, Noah Foshee, Maplesville, Dr. Callier, Dixie, and Dr. Jos. Johnson, of Benson, be requested to act as soliciting agents.

Now, if the gentleman whose names I have taken the privilege of using in this matter are satisfied with my suggestion, I can see no good reason why the ball cannot be put in motion at once. I feel very much interested in this matter, and have endeavored to get the thing in a shape that immediate action can be taken; and I have suggested a plan which appears to me the most feasible. In conclusion I respectfully ask, that the gentlemen whose names are used above, notify the editor of the VIEW in time for next issue whether they approve of my suggestion and whether or not they will act in the capacity I have placed them, and if there can be a better plan than the one I have suggested I will willingly withdraw my proposition and concur in anything that would facilitate matters more.

I am very respectfully,
A. J. HALL.

RANDOLPH, ALA., Mar. 14.

EDITOR VIEW: Dear Sir — In consequence of a retail groggery near this place in Chilton county, Benson beat, the prohibitionists of said beat have wisely concluded to call an election to be held on April 8th next.

Now, Mr. Editor, if you will allow me, I will address myself to the task of calling the attention of the voters of Benson beat to a fact or two, which, I think, clearly demonstrate the advisability of voting whiskey out of our beat. First, I wish to ask the question: Must Chilton county and Benson beat be the bung-hole from which the whiskeyites of the our neighboring prohibition counties of Bibb and Shelby are to draw their maudlin swags? The whiskey drinker of Bibb comes through Randolph and gets his whiskey in Chilton county, as much as to say: "We wont allow the stuff sold in the midst of our wives and children, but will go over into Benson beat, and get our whiskey. They don't care for their wives and children and if we get drunk and curse and cut up jack a little, it won't make any difference." This is not a picture merely, as the people of this beat well know, but has an actual manifestation in fact, almost every day. And still some will cry "freedom!" What is freedom? Is a man free when he is drunk? or when his wife is compelled to hear all kinds of oaths and anathemas as she passes the grocery? Is he free when the drunk man takes him by the collar and tells him he must drink or take a whipping? And is the drunk man free when he thus forces himself upon another, and places himself in danger of being hastily sent into another world by some party who may have no sympathy for his half responsible condition, and who, perhaps, might be glad of such an opportunity to get rid of him? The privilege of drinking whiskey when and where he chooses simply frees a man, in many cases, from all manliness, from all righteousness, from all care of those who should be near and dear to him. He loses his position, he loses his money, he loses self respect, and soon ceases to be respected. And yet he is FREE of all that is good.

Let us vote against the curse on the 8th of April, and show that we do not propose to be made a cat's paw of longer. Truly, &c.,
E. D. C.

The Nashville World, of Sunday, has the following story:

"It seems now that Marsh. T. Polk, the defaulting Treasurer of Tennessee, is not dead. But few persons were allowed to view the remains at the time they were shipped to Bolivar. This information is gleaned from a gentleman by the name of Westbrook, a former resident of Nashville, who passed through this city this morning, en-route to the West from a trip through the South, who saw and talked with Polk at San Antonia, Texas, but promised the fleeing felon that he would not give the matter to the press until he had passed Memphis. A reporter of this paper was the first member of the press he met after passing that point. Mr. Westbrook says he walked up to Polk and made himself known, and that he never saw a man so much affected in his life, and begged and implored him not to cause his arrest or speak of having seen him.

In reply to a question from the reporter, Mr. Westbrook said: "No, sir, Marsh Polk is not dead. His friends took advantage of his condition (as a matter of fact he was sick), and assisted him to escape from the clutches of the law by means of securing the remains of a Nashville medical college subject, the subject being substituted for that of Polk and was shipped to Bolivar, Tenn., and there buried, without the people viewing the same either at Nashville or Bolivar and while Polk's friends were pretending to grieve over his sad fate they were inwardly rejoicing over the ruse by which they had helped to gain his liberty."

Good Roads Needed.

Talledega Home.]

What Alabama now needs worse than she does a new Governor, is a legislature with wisdom enough to devise and courage enough to enact a system that will give us good public roads. Our present system was inaugurated away back in the twilight of Alabama's existence, and did pretty well for a new country with but few wants, but times have changed, and many other things with them, save and except our roads. If every man now in Alabama who is waiting to be struck by legislative lightning will devote the next few months to the subject of roads, it may be that out of the next gathering of Solons we may get a road law that can escape being called barbarous.

An Atlanta Constitution correspondent says: "The other night while talking to Senator Brown I noticed a piece of rabbit fur protruding above his collar. I asked him if he wore a rabbit's foot about his neck. 'No,' he replied, 'but I do wear a rabbit skin on my chest. A lady recommended it as the best possible protection against cold. I got a fine rabbit skin and cut off the feet, and tying the two legs together with a ribbon, I tied the skin about my neck. It has worked like a charm.

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mr. T. M. Ternan advertises his farm for sale.

Remember the Democratic Mass Meeting on Tuesday next.

Court begins next Monday, the 24th inst. An interesting term is expected.

Mrs. Mary Marsh, will entertain during court regular and transient boarders.

Messrs. S. K. Williamson and Clayton Zimmerman, of Verbena, visited Clanton on Monday.

Our genial and clever friend, W. F. Claughton, is keeping books at Gullahorn's new mill, Coopers.

Miss Fannie Wainwright, of Prattville, is visiting her sister, Miss Josie Wainwright, at this place.

Died, at Kincheon, this county, on the 15th inst., Mrs. John P. Milford. The deceased leaves a husband and three children.

Six prisoners are in the county jail. It will probably be emptied next week, as the Circuit Court will get in its work, and send them up higher.

Miss Pratt DeBardeleben, daughter of Mr. H. F. DeBardeleben, of Birmingham, is stopping with her sister, Mrs. S. T. Brittle, at Verbena, while her parents are on a visit to San Antonio, Texas.

Mrs. Dr. Green and niece, of Talladega, have been on a visit to Mrs. F. A. Hannon, a sister of Mrs. Green. Mrs. Hannon returned with the latter to Talladega, on Monday, in hopes of recuperating her health, which her friends regret to learn, is feeble, and it is to be hoped that she may be greatly benefitted by the change, and soon be able to return.

A negro by the name of Robert Pelham, was arrested at Verbena on Sunday, charged with assault and battery upon a prominent citizen, Col. B. J. Baldwin. The darkey, our Verbena correspondent says, was under the influence of whiskey, and used a pair of brass knucks upon the face of the assaulted party. He is now in jail to await his trial, which was to take place some time this week.

A communication from Mr. A. J. Hall appears elsewhere in this issue, favoring aid to Mr. M. E. Pratt, who, as is well known, is made responsible to the State to the amount of $60,000, as one of Vincent's bondsmen. Contributions are being started in various counties of the State for the relief of Mr. Pratt. Mr. Hall mentions the names of parties in the different beats in the county whom he thinks would undertake the work of soliciting contributions and forwarding them to Judge Callen at Clanton, to be forwarded by the latter to State Treasurer Smith at Montgomery. We second Mr. Hall's suggestion, and believe that every Democrat who voted for Vincent should bear a portion of the burden of his defalcation.

Verbena Views.

Mr. Phil Mitchell is rebuilding on the site of his burned dwelling.

Rev. J. L. Thompson preached an interesting sermon to a large audience at the Baptist Church last Sunday.

The Pratt Saw Mill Co., have been running their log train day and night for the past week.

The Baptist church has changed conference meeting from morning to night of the Saturday before the the third Sabbath of each month.

Dr. Jackson, a Montgomery dentist, is visiting us this week.

Married, in Rome, Ga., Sunday, March 16th, Mr. G. W. Farr, of Cooper's, to Miss Lula Pierce, of the former place.

Mr. J. T. Wells has returned from Montgomery, and will remain until next fall when he expects to leave for Texas.

Master Eddie Shannon leaves this week for Sewanee College, East Tennessee. He makes this change with hopes of restoring his health.

Last Saturday, Col. Baldwin, an old and prominent citizen, was attacked on the streets by a drunken negro named Robert Pelham. Col. B. was only slightly injured by a bruise on the head from the brass knucks with which the negro was armed. Had it not been for the prompt assistance of friends, the result might have been different, as the negro is a desperate character. The negro was detained a short while; but as no officer was present, he was set at liberty. A warrant was soon procured, and a posse composed of Prof. Acree, Messrs. R. W. DeBardeleben and Ollie Zimmerman, started in pursuit, and succeeded in capturing him about three o'clock Sunday morning in a negro cabin near Robinson Springs, Autauga county. He was brought back and delivered to the Sheriff who came down to take him in charge. The negro's captors incurred great danger in arresting him; and had it not been for the negro leaving his gun at a store where he stopped for supper, the arrest would have been attended with bloodshed. Some efforts were made by the negroes here to raise money for his bail, but without success so far as we have learned.

We think it advisable for the public safety that our citizens should be instructed in regard to the law for arresting criminals, and sufficient authority given to prevent their escape. Much labor, expense and danger would thus be avoided. BIJOU.

Democratic Mass Meeting.

A call is hereby made for a mass meeting of the Democratic and Conservative voters of Chilton county, to meet at the courthouse, in Clanton, on Tuesday, the 25th day of March, 1884, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to transact such other business as may come before it.

A. J. BROOKS,
Acting Chairman.
W. E. STEWART, Secretary.

Jack Smith is a native African who was brought to this country when a boy and sold into slavery. He resided in Montgomery many years. Last summer he returned to Africa with his family. He writes back to his colored friends in Montgomery that there are 200,000,000 natives of his race on the "dark Continent," and that every American negro is needed in that country to assist in the work of civilizing them. Jack advises his brethren to join him in Africa, and thus to throw off the heel of oppression, which he says is upon them. The average American negro would not care so much about assisting in the work of civilization as he would to visit his native country for the purpose of learning whether the ginger cakes in Bathurst or Timbuctoo were better than the American article. Jack has relatives in Clanton, who will be glad to hear from him, but who will not likely be disposed to follow him to Africa.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS,
DISORDERED LIVER,
and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Aversion to exertion of body or mind, Dizziness, Sourness of Stomach, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor change with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE FEELS LIKE A NEW MAN.

"I have had Dyspepsia, with Constipation, two years, and have tried ten different kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the first that have done me any good. They have pleased me yet nicely. My appetite is splendid, food digests readily, and I now have natural passages. I feel like a new man." W. B. EDWARDS, Palmyra, O.

FARMER HENSON'S "HELP."

Lizzie Stone was not more than four feet eight inches high. She was pale and thin. Her dresses never fit her.

She did not consider herself a servant, nor did the Hensons so consider her. She was the "help." She worked with them, ate with them, and made their friends her friends. She had none of her own. At the age of twenty-three she had never been in love. She had no thought of the man who was to be her partner. It never occurred to her that Jason Williams, their next neighbor's eldest son, came to see her when he came over to Henson farm on frequent, trivial errands. But it occurred to Jason that that was what he came for. Lizzie Stone, thin, pale, short, with scanty light locks pulled back from a prematurely old face and twisted into a hard knot behind, in her poorly-fitting staff dresses, was to him a dream of beauty.

He was six feet two inches tall, red-haired, freckled, with immense mouth. He always walked home with Lizzie from the village singing school on Saturday night and it was considered very kind and neighborly of him. He asked her once if he might "keep company with her," and she, because the Williamses were good neighbors and it was pleasant to have an escort at all times, consented.

Lizzie was twenty-three the summer Mr. Henson decided to take boarders from the city. Lizzie looked forward with joy to the change it would make in the household.

Farmer Henson went to the city and advertised. Mrs. Henson and Lizzie scrubbed and polished the spare room till it shone. They put up new and stiff starched muslin curtains, and covered the washstand and high bureau with clean towels.

Well, a boarder, not boarders, came; a fashionable young man named Osborne Hicks. He was tired of watering place gayeties, and was not well, so he came to this far-away farm house to rest. He paid a large price for his board upon condition that Henson would take no one else. As no one else applied they were very ready to make this bargain. He was the handsomest man Lizzie had ever seen. When she sat at the table with him she could neither eat nor talk. He never stooped from his great height to notice her. He saw, to be sure, a queerly dressed but tidy, pale-faced little thing, and supposed she rejoiced, as well as the others, in the name of Henson. If he thought at all of her, he was glad that she did not intrude herself upon him.

He had not been there a week when the worthy Hensons agreed that they did not like him. He was stiff and "stuck up," he sat in his room every evening, and burned an extra light, instead of sitting down sociably with them and their tow-headed offsprings. He wanted a clean towel every day. These were a few of his major sins; he had quantities of minor ones, which Mr. and Mrs. Henson discussed in season and out. Lizzie, who as a member of the family, was present at all the councils, was grieved to hear him spoken ill of.

He sank still lower in the Henson estimation, when Sunday came, by refusing a polite invitation to drive to church in the Henson carriage with the united Henson family.

Lizzie was as usual left at home to cook dinner. The mere knowledge that she was alone with this Apollo sent her to a seventh heaven of delight. She didn't anticipate the happiness of even seeing anything of him. But there was a greater pleasure in store for her than she imagined.

She was sitting on the kitchen steps paring the potatoes, singing to herself, when he came around the house. He stopped idly before her, smiling at the deep blush which overspread her face. She certainly was the queerest little thing he ever saw.

"So your parents were wicked enough to have you stay at home from the meeting," he said.

He wanted to hear her talk.

"They—they ain't my parents," she faltered, like a child, setting him right before she answered his remark.

He was not at all interested in the relationship, and did not ask what it was.

"I'm the help," Lizzie advanced timidly.

"The what?" he demanded sharply.

"The help—the hired help,"

"Well, I like that," he cried.

"Sir?"

"I thought you ate with the family?"

"I do. Don't all helps?"

"Well, I do like this," he said, more of himself than to her. "This comes of seeking health in a fourth-rate place. I'll change to-morrow."

He turned away impatiently. She knew that she had angered him in some way, and, in consequence, he was going to leave. She put down the pan of potatoes and ran after him.

"Please tell me, Mr. Hicks," she cried, "why you are so angry? Have I done anything to make you go? I won't again if you'll tell me."

"I suppose," he answered, loftily, "that you are all so ignorant here that you don't know how I have been insulted by being forced to eat with the servant." His petty soul was stirred to its depths.

"Do you mean me? Am I a servant?"

"What else are you?" he cried.

"I—I—I am the 'help,'" she returned, humbly. She scarcely knew what "servant" meant. "If you are angry with me, I will go away."

"Not at you. Have you no sense? But because I must eat at the table with you."

"You needn't again," she sobbed. "Indeed you needn't. And I will go away if you don't like a ser-ser-vant."

"You have no sense," he answered, angrily. "You either cannot or will not understand. Of course there should be a servant here. I would not stay if there were not, but I will not eat with one. Now, do you understand?"

"Yes, sir; indeed, indeed I do! I won't do so any more," she sobbed. "Indeed, I won't! I'll wait till you are done. Indeed, I will! Only please don't go away from here."

She ran back to the kitchen, weeping bitterly. He hated her, she knew, and she worshiped the ground his aristocratic feet deigned to tread upon.

When the Hensons came home dinner was ready. They sat down with their boarder, and Lizzie remained in the kitchen—they ate in the sitting-room since Mr. Hicks came. Mrs. Henson called her, but she answered that she must make the pudding-sauce, and could not come. And when they were ready for pudding Mrs. Henson found it much more convenient to have Lizzie bring it in than to have to jump up for it.

Mr. Hicks was less talkative than usual. He was usually exceedingly quiet. He was angry at the Hensons for existing, and for insisting upon existing. Unacknowledged, even to himself, but very bitterly did he curse the way he spoke to the pale-faced little girl, who did her duty and kept her word so unswervingly well.

He did not come down to supper. Lizzie, at Mrs. Henson's bidding, went to his room and knocking on his door, called to him. He had a headache, he answered, and did not want any supper, and bade her leave him. Unwillingly she obeyed.

He was lying on the bed.

"Come here," he said, holding out his hand. She took it. "Why do you tease me so?"

"I—I—" she began, but she could not say any more. He stepped down into the milk-house. The baskets fell, and the little arms were up to shield her face. He took her hand and put his shoulder and turned her gently around. "Why?" he said, in pretended surprise. "What's the matter?" Has one of the cows gone dry?"

"Oh, Mr. Hicks!" she sobbed, deeply mortified that he knew she was crying. "Don't be angry," she added kindly, changing his tone. "I'll be back next summer."

"Are you, really?" she gasped.

"Yes, really; but I don't suppose you'll be here. You'll be over there, with that corn-sheller man."

"Oh, never!" she sobbed.

"Now, don't cry. Look up!" He took her hands from her face. "The winter won't be long, and I'll be back in June."

"Will you, sir?" she asked, looking down as he held her hands, and catching her breath in quick sobs.

"I will, indeed. I am going to say good-bye to you now, as I shall not see you alone again."

He bent down suddenly and kissed her, and then went quickly away. His conscience troubled him a little. He did have a little conscience, surprising as that may seem.

"It won't hurt her," he said to himself. "She'll forget all about me in two weeks; and Helen will never know anything about it."

But it did hurt Lizzie. It hurt her then as she lay on the milk-house floor, sobbing hopelessly.

He went away the next day, and then began the weary waiting for June to come and bring him back. Autumn went slowly by—winter came and passed. Every Tuesday evening during that time Jason came over to borrow something, and on Thursday evening came over to bring it back. On Saturday evening he walked home from singing school with Lizzie.

On Saturday evening in the beginning of March he screwed up his courage again, and asked her to marry him. She was not surprised now, for she had begun to understand his attentions, but it pained her, for her answer was a firm "no." She had too much sense to expect to marry Osborne Hicks, but the world never marry any one else. March and April dragged by; there was only May left to live through. But now that the time of his coming was really so near Lizzie did not know how she could wait patiently till he came.

Mrs. Grimes had taken boarders early in May. The day after their arrival she came over to see Mrs. Henson. Her house was full, she said, and one of the ladies, a Mrs. Cooper, had some friends who would like to come, but as she (Mrs. Grimes) could not accommodate them, they would be willing to board at Mrs. Henson's.

They were talking in the sitting-room, and Lizzie was ironing in the kitchen with the connecting door open.

"I would be glad to take them," replied Mrs. Henson, "but we have but one spare room, and that is promised to Mr. Hicks. He will be here in a little while now."

Lizzie stopped ironing to listen. Had they heard from him?

"You needn't expect him," responded Mrs. Grimes. "Mrs. Cooper knows him well, and she says he sailed for Europe two weeks ago with his wife."

"His wife!"

"Why, yes! Didn't you know he was married? Mrs. Cooper told me all about it. He was married last Christmas——"

"Good gracious, Lizzie!" Mrs. Henson cried, as a flat-iron fell to the floor. "Have you broken anything?"

Lizzie made no answer, and the next moment the outer kitchen door was pulled shut. She ran down the garden path, holding her hands to her head. She ran to get away from herself. She was suddenly bereft of her reason, and she did not know where she went. The creek was at the foot of the garden. She stopped an instant to look into it, then cast herself forward.

Down at the village that night a body was found floating in the water. It was poorly dressed, with scanty skirts clinging around it, and with yellow hair about its neck. It didn't matter so much. The world went on just the same as if Farmer Henson's "help" had not lost her reason and drowned herself. Mrs. Henson got another "help" without delay. Jason had long ago taken to borrowing tools of Smith's, who had a daughter, and a daughter who looked favorably on him and his borrowing. Osborne Hicks, in a foreign land with his bride, had forgotten that Lizzie Stone ever lived.

Household Hints and Helps.

Pigs' feet fried may be a new dish to some one. Make a batter of flour and sweet milk, season with salt. The batter should be quite thin. Dip the feet into it and fry in hot lard. Serve with drawn butter. Eat with your fingers.

An old fashioned and toothsome spice cake is made of three pounds of seedless raisins, one and a half pounds of citron, two and a half coffee cups of sugar, two cups of sweet milk, four cups of flour, six eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, three teaspoonfuls of cinnamon and two of mace.

Lemon cookies are made of one large cup of sugar, a little more than half a cup of butter, half a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in two teaspoonfuls of hot water; flavor with lemon, and use just flour enough so that you can roll the cookies out thin; bake in a quick oven.

NANTUCKET SALT-FISH GEMS.—Soak half a pound of salt cod-fish over night in enough cold water to cover it; and the next morning pick the fish into small flakes, and simmer it gently for fifteen minutes in two quarts of water; putting the fish over the fire in cold water; test the fish to see if it is tender, and if the water is only moderately salt; if the fish is tender proceed to finish the soup; if the water is too salt pour it off the fish and replace it with fresh hot water; add a quart of milk to the fish; rub three tablespoonfuls of butter to a smooth paste with one of flour, and stir the paste into the soup until it is entirely dissolved; season the soup palatably with pepper, and let it boil gently for two or three minutes; meantime beat the yolks of three eggs very smooth, with a good half a cupful of soup; put the soup in tureen, pour the five eggs into it, stirring it well, and serve at once. Slices of fried or toasted bread should be served with it.

THE DEVIL'S CIPHER.

A Communication Relative to the Secret Lodges of the Land.

The following are the signs chalked by the fraternity on doors and gateposts for the information of their brethren:

This road is better than the other.

They will buy it, if you have what they want.

Good for something to eat.

Religious; but good on the whole.

No good.

Spoilt by too many tramps calling.

Likely to have you taken up.

Dangerous game of being imprisoned.

The upper crust of the fraternity (those living on "full-fed," in the cities) resort to the directories in public places, and mark the names of the "good ones." Several thousand are thus marked in New York and Chicago, and the "gangs" that profit by this system are well organized and number from ten to thirty members.

The following are their marks, with their meanings:

— Means doubtful, or not called on before.

Has money and is likely to give.

Knows of a gang of ten or twenty persons in one of the big towns, who make at least $10 a week each.

The letters and petitions sent or presented are skillful fabrications or forgeries; sometimes they are sent by post, but more frequently they are presented in person.

"The petitions often profess to be signed by the Mayor and have attached to them excellent imitations of the signatures of another influential people who are stated to have contributed to the case. Sometimes the case is that of a hundred whose horse had taken fright and dashed her van to pieces, injuring her only son and causing her great loss; at other times the case is that of a widow in distress, whose husband has died under afflicting circumstances and left her unprovided for—the circumstances varying with the supposed social position of the husband; or a widow is represented as being in danger of ruin in consequence of her shop being robbed by burglars, or her having an execution on her house, or of her cow having died of pleuro-pneumonia.

"Frequently the members of the gang assume a variety of characters and call upon people without letters or petitions and recommend one another for assistance on every kind of plea—an invalid child requiring to be placed in an asylum, a distressed tradesman or foreigner, a singer of celebrity who has fallen into poverty, or a sufferer by shipwreck or fire. Sometimes the members of the gang call singly, at other times they work in parties of four or six, two going into the house while the others keep watch in the neighborhood to give warning of danger.

"The names of the neighboring clergy are freely used, either as writers of recommendatory letters accompanying petitions, or as contributors or references; or the visiting-card of people of position are employed as introductions, these cards having been taken from the card-basket lying in the halls of other people.

"The leaders of such gangs read all the social news in the papers to be posted about the movements of the fashionable world, and they make it a practice to supply themselves with any kind of reference that may prove useful. You may ask why I am not one of the kind? Well, I am not 'done' and go on in occasional best. Good night!"

The Hoothmut.

When Cortes and his army were resting from their labors after the siege and destruction of Mexico, having heard many accounts of a certain king of a neighboring country called Montezuma, to the west of Mexico, which king was a hereditary enemy of Montezuma, the great captain resolved to send an exploring expedition there to ascertain if the accounts he had heard of the greatness of the monarch and the richness of his country were true. To this end he made choice of a soldier of fortune named Montano, a man of some education, for he wrote an account of his journey, and to him he gave as colleague one Penaloza and two others, all "men of discretion and valor." Penaloza owed this distinction to his being the owner of a very celebrated dog, who had not his equal in Mexico. So big and courageous was he, says the annalist, "and so dexterous withal and so much dreaded by the Indians, that when let loose, although there might be a thousand Indians in front of him, they dared not stand up before him." His master ware ample pot enough. He rushed at the nearest Indian, knocking him down by his weight and the impetus of his attack, tearing with amazing swiftness to another and another, till he had left a dozen or twenty men on the ground, whom the Spaniards would then dispatch with their spears. By this time the front rank of the enemy had generally retired to a distance, so the dog would turn round to see if those whom he had thrown were moribund. Those who lay quiet, either paralyzed with dread or already dispatched by his two-legged comrades, he took no notice of, but the faintest sign of life was a signal for him to rush upon them and tear their throats to pieces with his powerful jaws. These men being disposed of, he would go in search of fresh victims until tired out, or until there were no more to tear.

Murder of Six Girls in Russia.

An Odessa letter to the London Daily News says: A few days ago seven girls, employed as a sugar factory in Balta, left that town in the evening to return to their native village at some distance. The girls, belated on the way, resolved to pass the night in the fields and proceed at daybreak. They had located themselves near a haystack in a field adjoining the highway, and, having some slight fears of robbery, placed their united weekly earnings in the hands of one of their number, for greater safety. The unfortunate girls were all last asleep when they were tracked by a number of young men. The girl who had secreted the money in her dress had taken the precaution to cover herself with hay. The miscreants, finding no money on the persons of the other six girls, murdered them in cold blood. They then fired the stack, and in the conflagration and smoke the surviving and terrified girl effected her escape and reached the village in safety. An alarm was given, and the murderous band were all arrested. The survivor had recognized the murderers, who were all employed in the same factory as their victims.

SUEZ.—At Boirahrock on the Rhine, a guest cut down and saved a waiter who had just hanged himself. The waiter has sued his savior for undue interference and the value of the rope. The suit has not been decided.

A MODERN RESURRECTION.

A Remarkable Case Which Occurred in Your Midst—Something Which Has Puzzled the Public—Worth Reading.

One of the most remarkable occurrences developed in the public walk which has come to our notice in a long time has come to our knowledge and will undoubtedly awaken a wonder and surprise akin to nervousness in as it has already in numerous circles. The facts are briefly as follows: Mr. Wilhelm A. Crombie, a young man formerly residing at Birmingham, a suburb of Detroit, and now living at 56 Antietam avenue, in this city, can truthfully say that he has looked into the future world and yet returned to this. A representative of the paper has interviewed him upon this important subject and his experience is given to the public for the first time. He said:

"I had been having most peculiar sensations for a long while. My head felt heavy; my eyesight did not seem so clear as formerly; my appetite was uncertain and I was unaccountably tired. It was an effort to arise in the morning and yet I could not sleep at night. My mouth tasted badly, I had a faint all-gone sensation in the pit of my stomach that food did not satisfy, while my hands and feet felt cold and clammy. I was nervous and irritable, and felt all entirely unfitted for the duties of life. At times my head would seem to whirl and my heart palpitate terribly. I had no energy, no ambition, and I seemed indifferent of the present and thoughtless for the future. I tried to shake the feeling off and persuade myself it was simply a cold or a little malaria. But it would not go. I was determined not to give up and so time passed along and all the while I was getting worse. It was about this time that I noticed I had begun to bloat fearfully. My limbs were swollen so that by pressing my fingers upon them deep depressions would be made. My face also began to enlarge, and continued so until I could scarcely see out of my eyes. One of my friends, describing my appearance at that time, said: 'It is an animated something, but I should like to know what.' In this condition I passed several weeks of the greatest agony.

"Finally, one Saturday night, the misery culminated. Nature could endure no more. I became irrational and apparently insensible. Cold sweat gathered on my forehead; my eyes became glazed and my throat rattled. I seemed to be in another sphere and with other surroundings. I knew nothing of what occurred around me, although I have since learned it was considered a case of death by those who stood by. It was to me a quiet state, and yet one of great agony. I was helpless, hopeless and pain was my only companion. I remember trying to see what was beyond me, but the mist before my eyes was too great. I tried to reason, but I had lost all power. I felt that it was death, and realized how terrible it was. At last the strain upon my mind gave way and all was a blank. How long this continued I do not know, but at last I realized the presence of friends and recognized my mother. I then thought it was earth, but was not certain. I gradually regained consciousness, however, and the pain has ended. I found that my friends had, during my unconsciousness, been giving me a preparation I had never taken before, and the next day, under the influence of this treatment, the bloating began to disappear and from that time on I steadily improved, until to-day I am as well as ever before in my life, have no traces of the terrible acute Bright's disease, which so nearly killed me, and all through the wonderful instrumentality of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy that brought me to life after I was virtually in another world."

"You have had an unusual experience, Mr. Crombie," said the writer, who had been breathlessly listening to the recital.

"Yes, I think I have," was the reply, "and it has been a valuable lesson to me. I am certain, though, there are thousands of men and women at this very moment who have the same ailment which came so near killing me, and they do not know it. I believe kidney disease is the most deceptive trouble in the world. It comes like a thief in the night. It has no certain symptoms, but seems to attack each one differently. It is quiet, treacherous, and all the more dangerous. It is killing more people, to-day, than any other one complaint. If I had the power I would warn the entire world against it and urge them to remove it from the system before it is too late."

One of the members of the firm of Whitehead & Mitchell, proprietors of the Birmingham Eccentric, paid a fraternal visit to this office yesterday, and in the course of conversation, Mr. Crombie's name was mentioned.

"I knew about his sickness," said the editor, "and his remarkable recovery. I had his obituary all in type and announced in the Eccentric that he could not live until its next issue. It was certainly a most wonderful case."

Rev. A. R. Bartlett, formerly pastor of the M. E. Church, at Birmingham, and now of Schoolcraft, Mich., in response to a telegram, replied:

"Mr. W. A. Crombie was a member of my family at the time of his sickness. The prayers of the church were requested for him on two different occasions. I was with him on the day he was reported by his physicians as dying, and consider his recovery almost a miracle."

Not one person in a million ever comes so near death as did Mr. Crombie and then recover, but the men and women who are drifting toward the same end, are legion. To note the slightest symptoms, to realize their significance and to meet them in time by the remedy which has been shown to be most efficient, is a duty from which there can be no escape. They are fortunate who do this; they srecn the sure road to death who neglect it. —Detroit Free Press.

John Morrissey's Request.

Speaker Carlisle's difficulties over the arrangement of Congressional committees has recalled a story of Schuyler Colfax and John Morrissey, when the former was Speaker and the latter had just abandoned pugilism for statesmanship. Morrissey entered the Speaker's room one day, when Mr. Colfax was working busily at the formation of committees, and, placing a box on the table, said: "Mr. Speaker, here is a box of the best brand of cigars sold, and I hope you will accept it as a present from me."

Colfax thanked him, and then Morrissey continued: "And now, Mr. Speaker, I want you to do me a favor."

Colfax at once put himself on guard. "What I want," added the other, "is for you to put me on the committee which has the least work and holds the fewest meetings."

"Oh, I will, I assure you I will, with pleasure!" exclaimed the delighted Speaker, sure, now, of satisfying at least one man, and he put Morrissey at the tail end of the committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

A Grand Lesson.

Seven years' success in favor in Great Britain. In 1883 there were only thirty steam yachts of 3,762 tons; there are now 146, and the aggregate tonnage is 51,800. One-third of these are of 400 tons and upward, and another third of 200 to 400 tons. Their aggregate value is over $11,000,000, and the cost of maintenance is equally large.

Green Apples.

Eaten in the spring time, or any other season, is liable to give one a bowel trouble, which can be speedily checked by the use of Dr. Bigger's Southern Remedy, the great specific that will certainly cure cramp colic, diarrhœa, dysentery, and restore the stomach and bowels to health away from the effects of teething. This, with a bottle of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein combining, the stimulating expectorant principles of the sweet gum with the demulcent healing one of the mullein, for the cure of croup, whooping cough, colds and consumption, presents a little assistant that no household should be without for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. Ask your druggist for them. Manufactured by Walter A. Taylor, proprietor Taylor's Premium Cologne, Atlanta, Ga.

The orange crops of Florida are said to be now worth $1,500,000.

The Secret of Living.

Scovill's Sarsaparilla, or Blood and Liver Syrup, will cure scrofulous taint, rheumatism, white swelling, gout, goitre, consumption, bronchitis, nervous debility, malaria, and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood. Certificates can be presented from many leading physicians, ministers and heads of families throughout the land, in closing it in the highest terms. We are constantly in receipt of certificates of cures from the most reliable sources, and we recommend it as the best known remedy for the cure of the above diseases.

We Should Help One Another.

Mr. Norman Hunt, of No. 169 Chestnut street, Springfield, Mass., writes April 10, 1885, saying:

"Having the affliction caused by kidney and liver diseases, and after enduring the aches, pains, weakness and depression incident thereto until body and soul were nearly distracted, I sought for relief and a cure from my trouble, and was told by a friend who had been cured by it himself, that the best and only sure cure was Hunt's Remedy, and upon his recommendation I commenced taking it, and the first few doses improved my condition in a very marked manner, and a continuance of its use has justified all that my friends claimed for it—that it was a sure and permanent cure for all diseases of the kidneys and liver. Several of my friends in Springfield have used it with the most gratifying results, and I feel it my duty as well as a pleasure to me to recommend Hunt's Remedy in the highest possible terms."

Manufacturer's Testimony.

Mr. H. W. Payne, manufacturer of harness, saddlery, trunks, valises, etc., No. 177 Main street, Springfield, Mass., writes us under date of April 10, 1885:

"Gentlemen—I have used Hunt's Remedy, the best medicine for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bladder and urinary organs, and have received great benefit to my health from its use, and I find that it will do just what is claimed for it; it will cure disease and restore health. I therefore pronounce it the best medicine that I have ever used."

Boston and Albany Railroad.

Albert Holt, Esq., paymaster Boston and Albany railroad, at Springfield, Mass., writes April 23, 1885: "I have used Hunt's Remedy, and my experience with it has been such that I can cheerfully say that I am satisfied that it will do just what it promises to do, if used according to directions."

BAD, BAD, BAD BLOOD.

Some blood is bad because it is poor and weak. Some is bad because it contains impurities. Some men have such bad blood that the wonder is it does not poison the mosquitoes who come to bite them.

The rich red color of good blood is owing to the iron which it contains. Blood which has not enough iron in it is always unsatisfactory. The person in whose veins it circulates cannot be said to enjoy good health.

The efforts of expert chemists to produce a preparation of iron which can be assimilated with the blood have resulted in that perfect preparation which we call Brown's Iron Bitters. It is the only one which freely enters into the blood. It is the only one which accomplishes the desired good.

Weak, poor, thin blood may be made rich and strong, and impure blood may be purified by the use of the Great Iron Medicine, Brown's Iron Bitters.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

NEW YORK has under lock and key in its prisons, penitentiaries and reformatories an army of convicts numbering 15,699. This is an increase of 69 per cent in ten years, concurrent with an increase of 23 per cent in the total population of the State.

WITHOUT speedy legislation to protect game in the western states and territories, it is safe to predict that in five years from now, at the present rate of destruction, there will be very few elk, buffalo, mule deer, or antelope to hunt. The hide hunters are destroying game in a wasteful and reckless manner. As an instance of the wholesale destruction now going on it may be mentioned that in the past year the hide hunters killed more than 25,000 buffaloes between the Yellowstone and the headwaters of the Little Missouri.

SIGNOR CRISPI, Italian premier, has asked the Chamber to increase the annual allowance of his office from £385,000 for her expenses, but of this amount no less than £131,220 is absorbed in the salaries paid to the fortunate people whose duty it is to aid in spending the majesty's income. Sometimes the British people feel a ripple of indignation when they reflect that such an immense sum is swallowed up annually by a horde of titled drones, who in reality do nothing to earn the salaries which they draw with such great regularity.

IT is claimed that the population of Florida has doubled since the census of 1880. Settlements are springing up all over the state with magical rapidity, and it is believed that there are now in the state fully 100,000 tourists and pleasure seekers. The real estate fiend flourishes in Florida like the greenbay tree, he hangs out his shingle in the wilderness with as much confidence as he would feel in the crowded city. Towns with high sounding names are springing up all over the state, and there is no doubt as to the permanence and prosperity of these enterprises.

THE New Jersey law making it a penal offence to sell cigars, cigarettes and chewing tobacco to boys appears to work well. The magnitude of the tobacco evil among boys is not sufficiently well understood. The use of nicotine in excess is very injurious to adults, but it is infinitely worse for youths. It stunts them physically and mentally, and blunts their moral perceptions. Any law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to children is difficult to enforce because the small shopkeepers are the worst offenders. The most effective scheme ever suggested was a law empowering every adult to cane on sight any boy caught smoking.

LIEUTENANT GARLINGTON, who was in charge of the government relief steamer, Proteus, last summer, is positively certain that the Greely party is safe. Greely had plenty of provisions to last him through the winter, and he was stationed where he could get all the fuel he needed. Under these circumstances there is no reason why Greely and his men should not all be alive and in the best of health. Of course the cold weather is hard to stand. Lieutenant Garlington is anxious to return to the Arctic regions, and will make application to be permitted to accompany the Greely relief party this summer.

THE great sensation of the day is the new motor. This new motor is simply the vapor of bi-sulphide of carbon. It has been in practical use in driving machinery in New York city for the last six months, but in so quiet a manner that the general public know nothing about it. Bi-sulphide of carbon can be manufactured abundantly at a cost of $3 per hundred weight. It is cheap, portable and combustible, and heretofore the difficulty has been in controlling it. The inventor has organized a company with $8,000,000 capital, and the motor will be speedily brought before the public.

CARNATION really appears to be entering upon a boom. New Orleans now has a cremation society, which is going actively to work and intends to build a crematory in a short time. Its members urge that the public health demands cremation in New Orleans above all other cities, because of the low, wet land in and surrounding the city. The society is composed of the most prominent citizens, and the head of the citizens. One thing is certain, and that is an ordinance authorizing the cremation of all who die in smallpox hospitals, and of all who are to be buried at the public expense. Public opinion seems to be moving more rapidly than hitherto towards cremation.

THE consumption of beer in the United States is probably not more than half what it was two generations ago. The cause of this decrease is probably due in not unequal shares to the influence of the temperance organization and the progress of beer drinking. The fact is that the bulk of the liquor drinking in this country is done by foreigners. Intemperance is gradually coming to be an American vice.

GENUINE butter is a thing of the past. Very little of it is to be found on sale in the large cities, and even wealthy people sometimes find it impossible to get the real article. The method of making butter from swine is very simple. Leaf lard is run through a hasher and then rendered in a temperature of 150. Next it is deodorized and cooled in ice water for from thirty-six hours to four or five days. Afterward it is drained off, melted, churned and mixed with cream butter. The percentage of butterine will run from twenty to fifty, ordinarily about forty. Oils are used to produce the desired color. It is a settled fact that the live cow cannot compete with the dead hog in the matter of making butter. Very few retailers admit that they are selling a substitute. They take the cover from a tub of oleomargerine, lay it on the counter bottom side up and set the tub in it. That conceals the oleomargerine brand on the cover. Then they conceal the brand on the tub by putting a "best creamery butter" label over it. Such is the fatal illusion for butter.

PROMINENT PEOPLE.

SPURGEON.—Mr. Spurgeon, the famous English Baptist preacher, has fallen heir to a large fortune.

SMITH.—Ex-United States Senator Truman Smith, of Connecticut, is now in his ninety-fifth year, and continues to be active in mind, though weak in body.

PINKERTON.—Allan Pinkerton, the head of the detective agency, is a Scotchman and the son of a policeman. He employs nearly 200 detectives, men and women.

WOLF.—Simon Wolf, ex-consul general to Egypt, drew up the Lasker resolutions of condolence introduced in Congress by Representative Ochiltree, and returned by Bismarck.

DAVIS.—Jefferson Davis has declined an invitation to address the Mississippi legislature on the life of S. S. Prentiss. He says that his health is too feeble for him to undertake any public work.

MASON.—Mason Mason, now governor of Mansowan, Egypt, is a Maryland man. A graduate of West Point, he took the losing side in the war of secession, and after Appomattox sailed for Egypt.

NEWCOMB.—Miss Anita Newcomb, now studying abroad, has inherited from her father, Professor Newcomb, of the Naval observatory, remarkable mathematical powers, and is competent to calculate eclipses.

POMEROY.—Bishop Pomeroy has been temperance lecturing in Rhode Island.

LAWSON.—Sir Wilfrid Lawson is the champion of prohibition in the British house of commons.

GOULD.—Jay Gould, the well-known New York financier, has gone on a trip South as far as Florida.

GORDON.—"Chinese" Gordon is an intensely religious man, and studies the Bible more earnestly and enthusiastically than many a parson.

ALEXANDRA.—The Princess of Wales, mother of the heir of a family long afflicted with several ills, still preserves her sweet, over-girlish face. Her health, however, is not good.

PRINCE ARTHUR.—Prince Albert Victor is the first son of a prince of Wales to come of age before his father's accession to the throne. King George II. became king a few months before his son reached twenty-one.

AMMEN.—Rear-Admiral Ammen, though sixty-four years old and on the retired list, is as hearty and vigorous as ever, and his favorite pastime is to ride on the outskirts of Washington in the same of many enjoyable parties of officers.

SCHLEY.—Commander Winfield Scott Schley, who has been placed in charge of the Greely relief party, was graduated in 1839, at Frederick, Md., and leaving the Naval academy in 1858, went to Japanese waters. During the war he was in active service as master and lieutenant. Since 1864 he has been at the Naval academy, in the Asiatic fleet, the South American station, and the lighthouse service. CLANTON, ALA., MAR. 27, 1884.

The citizens of Blount Springs have so far contributed $31.00 for the relief of Mr. M. B. Pratt.

The 14th annual session of the Alabama Press Association will be held at Eufaula on the 7th of May.

Birmingham uses more coal, according to the Chronicle, than does the entire city of New Orleans.

The Manufacturer's Record states that in the last two months $28,000,000 was invested in manufacturing in the south. Kentucky is first, with $6,851,00; Alabama second with $5,120,000.

At the Presbyterian church on Madison Square, New York, General George B. McClellan can be seen almost any Sunday sitting in a pew with two interesting little girls cuddled close up under his arms. They are two of the orphans of the late General Hood, who were adopted by a Mr. Adams, of New York, and are great pets of General McClellan.

Selma is arousing herself to a realization of the great possibilities of which her situation and other advantages make her capable as a future city of wealth and prominence. We are always glad to hear of anything that speaks for Selma's good, and we have faith that she is yet to be one of the "great towns" of America. Her brass and her Glass will help her much.

The name of Mrs. I. M. P. Henry adorns the top of the columns of The Greenville Advocate as associate editor. Her pen is even a greater adornment to each and all of its columns. Mrs. Henry is the only lady connected with the editorial department of an Alabama newspaper, and her presence is a source of gratification to all her copartners in the field of State journalism.

Years ago John Q. Adams loved the prettiest girl in Alabama. Her parents forced her to marry a man named Jackson, who took her to Texas, where she became the mother of nineteen children. A year ago her husband died. Meanwhile John Q. Adams, who had married early, had not been idle. He acquired considerable local renown by becoming the father of twenty-one children. Recently his wife died. He has gone to Texas to marry Mrs. Jackson. The families will live on the co-operative plan.

Congressman Byron Cutcheon is said to resemble Garfield in appearance. Congressman Lawrence, of Pennsylvania, might pass for a portrait of George Washington. Congressman Thomas Williams, of Alabama, is Col. Ingersoll in miniature—fat, round face, double chin, laughing face, bald head—all. Congressman King, of Louisiana, imitates Napoleon Bonaparte in bangs, struts, as well as in facial construction. Congressman Geddes, of Ohio, resembles Abraham Lincoln, but is not so large, and has small feet and hands.

The Alabama Permanent Mineral Exposition, will be opened at Birmingham, on April 22d. A movement is on foot to have the second regiment of Alabama State troops and the Alabama Corps of Cadets of the State University in attendance for a review by Gov. O'Neal Applications for space in the Exposition building must be made by April 1st, to Prof. Henry McCalley, postoffice box 135, Birmingham. This is a great enterprise in Alabama, and a new era of increased prosperity may be dated from the opening of this exposition. Excursion rates for the opening day will probably be offered by the railroad companies leading to Birmingham.

Mr. Spurgeon will attain his jubilee in June next, having been born at Kelvedon, Essex, on June 19, 1834. He settled at Waterbeach, Cambridgeshire, when only 17, and in London, over the church now meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, at the early age of 19. His jubilee has already begun to excite considerable interest. It is an event in which most of the Nonconformist churches are likely in some way to take some part in commemorating. The silver wedding of his pastorate was celebrated a year or two since by the collection of 6,000 pounds sterling, which was presented to Mr. Spurgeon, and which he forthwith handed over for the benefit of institutions connected with his ministerial work. A second fund, in recognition of his jubilee, is now in contemplation, though the exact object toward which it will be devoted is not yet announced.

Col. John G. Bass.

The above named gentleman will be a candidate before the State Convention for the office of State Auditor. Col. Bass filled the position of Warden of the State Penitentiary for six years, and the fact that he filled the position satisfactorily and well, remedying many of the evils of our iniquitous convict system, should be sufficient to entitle him to other honors. He would fill the office of Auditor to the credit of himself and of the Democratic party.

Superintendent of Education.

Rev. Joseph Shackleford, of Morgan county, will have his name prevented to the State Democratic Convention by his friends, as a candidate for State Superintendent of Education. Though not personally acquainted with Mr. Shackleford, his reputation as a cultured Christian gentleman of fine abilities warrants the assertion that he is the man for the place. He is at present principal of Trinity College and is a Baptist minister who has always been earnest and zealous in his Master's cause. As a member of the last Legislature he did good work for the State, and is said to have been unsurpassed as a committee worker by any other member of the body. He has the ability to fill the position, and deserves the honor.

For Congress.

Montgomery Advertiser.]

In the third district, Hon. Wm. C. Oates, the present incumbent, and Hons. Jere N. Williams and John D. Roquemore, have declared themselves as candidates for Congress.

In the Fifth district, Hon. Thomas Williams is a candidate for re-election; and as stated in our last issue, so are Chancellor Graham and Hon. W. F. Foster.

In the Sixth District, Hons. John M. Martin and N. N. Clements are already announced as candidates for the nomination. It is not definitely known, but it is presumed Representatives Hewitt will be a candidate for renomination.

In the Seventh District represented by General Wm. H. Forney, no movement has been made to show who may be in the field.

In the Eighth, or North Alabama District, General Luke Pryor has postively declined renomination; and all the indications point in such an event to General Joseph Wheeler and Hon. W. N. Richardson, as the candidates.

Hon. J. W. Bush and A. C. Davidson have entered the field for Representatives from the Fourth District, now represented by General C. M. Shelly. We have heard no intimation from General Shelly whether or not he will be a candidate, and it is presumed he will also be before the convention.

In this and in the Mobile Districts, the question of succession has not been canvassed, but we presume Hons. H. A. Herbert and J. Taylor Jones will again submit their claims to the convention.

Another Reason Why.

In the last few months influential newspapers and public men in many States have given expression to the wish that Mr. Tilden might again become the candidate of his party. It was no new opinion that if it were possible for the Democracy to be strengthened by the use for a second time of his name, no other name was to be thought of. But the events of the last three months have made the minds of thoughtful Democrats revert with stronger interest to their most illustrious leader.

The fierce enthusiasm with which a part of the Democracy started out in untried paths has been sadly chilled by experience. It becomes evident that the old economic policy of the country, right or wrong, is too strong to go down in a day; and even Col. Morrison has brought in a protectionist tariff bill that is likely to increase the revenue rather than reduce it! This shows a sad vacillation of purpose, with a more or less certain apprehension of fatal division. The result of passing over the issues upon which alone the party could act unitedly, have made and are making men long for a return to safe principles and a sure leader.

That they should look to Mr. Tilden was natural, retired from public affairs as he is. The mention of his name under these circumstances is a proof of continuing public confidence and regard such as any man might be proud of, and it is much more than that. It shows that the party is sick of the uncertainties and cross purposes which have recently distracted it. It is a proof that Democrats now appreciate the necessity of entering upon reforms which are practicable.

It is a splendid though an insufficient recompense to Mr. Tilden for past service that in time of doubt and danger the party instinctively turns to him. If the Democracy is to succeed in the contest that is now so near at hand, it will succeed because it again asserts the principles which he represented in 1876. Would that it were possible for them this year to restore the sanction and have the benefit of his name at the head of the Presidential ticket!—New York Sun.

Democratic Mass Meeting.

At a meeting of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county, held in pursuance of a call of the executive committee, at the court house in Clanton, on Tuesday, March 25th, 1884, the following proceedings were had.

On motion, H. J. Callen was called to the chair, and W. H. Fosher and W. A. Collier were requested to act as Secretaries.

On motion of A. J. Brooks, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved 1st. That the chair appoint a committee of three to select the name of one person from each voting precinct as a member of the executive committee of Chilton county, to report at the sitting of this meeting.

2d. That upon the selection of said executive committee, they shall at once assemble (a majority constituting a quorum) and select a chairman and lay out the work of said committee.

3d. That said committee shall call a county convention on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884, to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions.

4th. That the best meetings shall be held on Wednesday, May the 14th, to select delegates to said county convention, and this meeting recommends that in these meetings, the delegates to the county convention shall be selected by ballot.

5th. That at said best elections the sense of the voters be taken as to the propriety of nominating county officers.

Thereupon, the chair appointed J. J. Dawson, J. D. Wells and A. J. Hall, the committee to select the names of persons to compose the executive committee of Chilton county.

The committee having retired made the following report:

We the committee select the following named persons to compose the Executive Committee:

Providence precinct	—	B. M. Gentry,

Turkey-Caller.

Mr. O. A. Duke, of Clanton, came up on the L. & N. train Thursday. He exhibited to a crowd of admiring friends a curiosity in the way of a turkey-caller. The ingenuity of man has been exausted to invent a turkey-caller, but without success. The fingers, a leaf, a cedar box, have all failed to answer the purpose, and it remained for Mr. Duke to make the perfect caller. It is a wooden cup, with a ten-penny nail fastened to the bottom and projecting just a little beyond the brim. When this is scratched on a slate the call of a turkey gobbler is exactly represented. The ingenuity of Mr. Duke will be highly commended by all hunters.—Birmingham Chronicle.

Mexico has no political conventions. The newspapers do the nominating. The papers begin a discussion of candidates about a year previous to the Presidential election. Next they "postulate," or nominate certain candidates. At the head of the paper will appear, "We postulate" so and so, naming the journal's choice. Then, on election day, the voters assemble at the polling places, and each deposits a written ballot for electors, who are to constitute the Electoral Board of the State. The law stipulates that the ballot must be written, and a table, with paper and writing utensils, is provided beside the ballot box, and the ballot must be written and immediately deposited under the inspection of the Supervisor. Sometimes the voters of the different parties will meet a few hours previous and agree upon some candidate, but usually each voter has made a choice of candidate without any pressure from party machinery.

The people, and not the politicians, determine the issue of campaigns. The party that ascertains what the people want, and regards that want in its declaration of principle is wise and will succeed.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and restore all the secretions healthy. Numerous testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Who would be without a newspaper, when they can get the VIEW for a whole year for $1.50.

We understand that Col. B. J. Baldwin is quite sick, suffering great pain just below the wound received some days since.

Robert Pelham, the negro who is in jail for carrying brass knucks will be tried before the county court the first Monday in April.

Among the visiting attorneys at Clanton, during the past week, was Capt. W. R. Oliver, of Calera. He is enthusiastic over the future of Calera.

Don't let any man make you believe he is a candidate unless you see his announcement in the paper. He is only trying to play a joke on you.

Senator W. P. Oden and James A. Kelly, Esq., of Wetumpka, were in Clanton on Monday, together with quite a number of other visitors from neighboring towns.

Dr. Jackson, Dentist, of Montgomery, is now in Clanton, and is prepared to do all work in his line in the very best manner and at reasonable rates. Leave orders for him at Dr. I. D. Lanier's Drug Store.

Col. Thos. G. Jones and Capt. J. M. Falkner, of Montgomery, and attorneys for the railroad in the Frazer damage suit, have been here the past week. The case was continued, on account, of the absence of an important witness.

FOR SALE—A fine Philadelphia Singer Sewing Machine. This is the best machine now manufactured, and is sold on easy terms. If you want a good machine at a bargain call at the VIEW office for terms and particulars.

The many friends and subscribers of the VIEW who have called and left substantial tokens of their appreciation during the past week have the thanks of the establishment. They know how to appreciate a good paper, and we intend to make it better for their benefit if for none other.

Several contributions of $1,00 each have been left at the Probate office for the relief of Mr. M. E. Pratt. If one half the Democratic voters in Alabama should contribute one dollar each, Mr. Pratt would have no fears of financial trouble. He has five years in which to pay the amount, and in that time every one can lay aside his dollar for such a noble purpose.

"I believe," said a map box man down at Lanier's Drug store the other evening, "I believe a man gets his punishment for his misdeeds as he goes along in this world." "I don't," promptly spoke out a young bystander. "Boy, remarked a certain medical gentleman near, were you ever married to a redhaired woman with a noble mind and an awful appetite to wear the trousers?" "Can't say that I was." "Well then don't talk about things you ain't posted on."

Mr. A. P. DeBardeleben has returned from Texas. He has the same time been running Powell's Hotel at San Antonio. He has however disposed of his interest in that fine property and returned to Alabama to stay, for he says he would rather be a porter at the Clifton House, than the owner of a cattle ranch in Texas, and furthermore that he would rather be a pine tree in Alabama than a white man in Texas.

J. F. Snell's mill at Lomax, is now running on full time, and is turning out on an average about 10,000 feet of lumber per day, he informs us. We are glad to know that Mr. Snell has been able to recover from the heavy loss by the fire which visited him the past winter. His new mill is much better than the old one, and has a much greater capacity. His planing mill is of Hoyt Bros. manufacture and does the very best work, having a capacity of 10,000 to 12,000 feet a day.

Dr. T. E. Callier, of Dixie, brought over $8.00 on Tuesday, to be added to the Pratt relief fund. Dr. C. says that every persons whom he approached contributed except two. The amount was distributed as follows: T. E. Callier $2.00, E. G. Adams $1.00, J. E. Callier 50 cents, S. D. Keyser $1.00, John C. Morrow 50 cents, E. W. King 50 cents, J. B. Hardy 50 cents, E. A. Thuston $1.00, John Parnell $1.00. The amount has been deposited in the Probate office, and contributions from other localities are now in order.

Fatal Affray.

On last Wednesday evening a difficulty occured in the vicinity of Mahan & McGee's grocery, seven miles northeast of this place, between Ben Benson and Morgan Glascook. It was reported here that both parties were under the influence of whiskey, and that a groundless quarrel brought on the difficulty. Glascock was cut in the abdomen and disemboweled. He has since died, living only about twenty-four hours after the cutting. After being cut Glascock seized a maul which was being used in splitting rails and struck Benson upon the head with it. It was thought that the latter was seriously hurt by the blow, and there were apprehensions that he would die, but the following night he recovered to such an extent as to be able to leave the neighborhood for parts unknown. The Sheriff went into the neighborhood and endeavored to capture Benson, whom he says is hiding out in the hills, but failed of success. He had to return to Clanton, on account of court, but is still on the lookout for the fugitive.

Verbena Views.

Farmers are behind with their work in consequence of much unfavorable weather the past few weeks. Some corn was planted last week.

Spring goods and Spring advertisements are the next thing in order for our merchants.

Dr. A. Jackson has given us his professional services the past week. He goes from here to Clanton.

Prof. Acree's debating society is in a flourishing condition. The weekly debates are well attended by the public.

Rev. J. W. Shores is visiting relatives at Orrville, Ala. He will be absent two weeks.

A run off on the Pratt saw mill road one night recently. No serious damages.

Our base ball club has selected a good ground, just below the Pratt mill, and will soon get into practice.

The rail road track has been relaid with new rails.

Mr. J. C, Traywick has recently put up a new addition to his black smith shop.

A negro fell off the log train on the Pratt saw mill road, one morning last week, and broke a leg.

We forgot to mention, last week, that Master Willie Wadsworth was with the party who captured the negro man at Robinson Springs.

Miss Rosebud Lynch, who has been visiting Mrs. Davis, has returned to Montgomery.

Mrs. Annie McCullough, from near Louisville, has been visiting her brother, Mr. J. W. Hanlin.

Mr. W. T. Bozeman has returned to his home in Elmore Co. He will engage in farming this year.

Mrs. Geo T. Burch, of Mt. Meigs, Ala., has opened a private school near the hotel.

Mr. A. P. DeBardeleben and family have returned from San Antonio, Texas.

We commend the Vews's knowledge-envelopment for his article on Prohibition.

Dumb bell exercise and jumping are the favorite athletic sports of our young men.

Two of Montgomery's most charming ladies, Mrs. S. L. Watt and Mrs. C. A. Lanier, spent last week in Verbena.

Miss Annie Chiles has returned from a visit to Anniston.

Mr. Charley Reid has bought an interest in the retail grocery business of Mr. R. W. DeBardeleben.

We regret to hear of the serious illness of our esteemed citizen, Col. R. J. Baldwin.

We are under obligations to our lady friends for their kindness in giving us many lunch.

Mrs. H. P. DeBardeleben and a friend, Mrs. Stephenson, are stopping with Mrs. E. T. Brittle. They are on their way from San Antonio, Texas to Birmingham.

We learn that the law gives sufficient authority to detain a criminal until he can be turned over to an officer. People should bear this in mind. BIJOU.

Alabama, not to be outdone by Georgia, comes forward with a bearded lady. She lives not far from Valley Head, DeKalb county. She is fifty years old and her beard is two or three inches long and of recent growth.

UNDER THE CHESTNUT BOUGHS.

You'd a bit thought for sartin sure—
He may never to home again,
But, whether or not he comes back to me,
My heart is his own, as when
We were side by side on a day long fled,
When I heard his eager vows,
And blushed at the tender words he said
Under the chestnut boughs.

They tell me a sailor's heart is bound
By bonds that break at a breath;
Others, perhaps, doth love have found,
But his will be mine till death.
And whether he sleeps beneath the wave
Or over the crest he plows,
I trust always be true to the pledge I gav
Under the chestnut boughs.

It would grieve me less if the news were brought
That he died in a far-off sea,
Than if, sitting alone to-night, I thought
He could ever be false to me.
The lowland in winter garb is clad,
Snow covers the mountain brows,
No longer I stand beside my lad
Under the chestnut boughs.

But I feel that my love will come back some day
From over the stormy sea,
As loyal and true as when going away,
He whispered farewell to me,
My heart goes out by the foam-flecked shore
And never a doubt allows;
We shall surely stand, as we stood before,
Under the chestnut boughs.

Lydia Mackey.

AN EPISODE OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

In 1781 South Carolina was completely overrun by the British. Lord Cornwallis held quiet possession of Charleston, had defeated Gates and Dekalb at Camden, driven Marion to the swamps of Pedee, scattered the force of Sumter, and established his headquarters in the Waxhaws, on the borders of North Carolinia, while Tarleton had his on the Hanging Rock Creek, about thirty miles north of Camden. Davie alone was left with a small force on the left bank of the Catawba, making occasional sorties to harass the outposts of the British.

Lancaster County was one of the strongholds of the Whigs or rebels. The Whigs had always made Lancaster too hot for the Tories, and had ruthlessly driven them out of the county to seek companionship and sympathy where they might find it. But the advent of the British turned the tide of war completely, and now the Tories, with Tarleton's aid, drove the Whigs from Lancaster, some across the Catawba to join Davie, and some to the Pedee to join Marion.

Charles Mackey, as the leader of the rebels, had made himself very obnoxious to the Tories, and they impatiently awaited a time of vengeance.

He was a man of medium size, very active and energetic, a fine horseman, a splendid shot, hot-headed, impulsive, often running unnecessary risks, and doing dare-devil deeds. No work was too hazardous for him.

Lydia Mackey, his wife, was a woman of good common-sense, with a clear head and fine judgment, and in coolness and self-possession far superior to her impetuous husband. They had a young family of two or three children, and Charles Mackey had not seen or heard from them for several weeks. Their home was not more than two and a half miles from Tarleton's camp on the Hanging Rock Creek. He knew very well that it would be hazardous for him to return to his home so near to Tarleton's headquarters, but his anxiety became so intense on account of his wife's peculiar condition that he could no longer remain in doubt about it. So he cautiously made his way home, where he unwisely loitered for a week, and during this time he had the temerity to enter Tarleton's lines more than once in search of information which would be valuable to his country's defenders.

Charles Mackey's house was a double log cabin, with cultivated patches of corn and potatoes on either side of a lane leading to the front, while at the rear was a kitchen-garden of half an acre or more, extending back to a large huckleberry swamp, which was almost impenetrable to man or beast. This swamp covered an area of ten or fifteen acres, and was surrounded by a quagmire from ten to thirty feet wide, thus making it practically an island. It was entered by jumping from tussock to tussock of moss-covered clumps of mould a foot or two in diameter, and rising six or eight inches above the pitch-black semi-jelly-like mire, which shook in every direction in passing over it. A plank or fence-rail served as a temporary draw-bridge, which was pulled into the swamp after crossing over.

When the country was infested by Tories, Charles Mackey spent his days in the swamp, if not out scouting. At night he ventured home. He had good watch-dogs, and they gave the alarm when any one approached, whether by night or day. If at night, he would immediately lift a loose plank in the floor of his bedroom, drop through on the ground, crawl out in the rear, then run thirty or forty yards across the garden, gun in hand, and disappear in the swamp, pulling his fence-rail draw-bridge after him. There was no approach to the house in the rear, and his retreat was always effected with impunity.

Charley Mackey had been at home now about a week, and was on the eve of leaving with some valuable information for the rebel generals, gained by his night prowlings in and about the headquarters of Colonel Tarleton. But early in a June morning (an hour or two before day) his usually faithful watch-dogs failed to give warning of the approach of strangers, and the first notice of their presence was their shouting "Hello!" in front of the house. Mrs. Mackey jumped out of bed, threw open the window-shutter, stuck out her head, surveyed the half-dozen armed horsemen, carefully, and said, "Who's there!"

"Friends. Is Charley Mackey at home?"

She promptly answered, "No."

In the meantime Charley had raised the loose plank in the floor, and was ready for flight for the swamp at the rear, when, stopping for a moment to be sure of the character of his visitors, he heard the spokesman say: "Well, we are very sorry indeed, for there was a big fight yesterday on Lynch's Creek between General Marion and the British, and we routed the —— rebels completely, and we have been sent to General Doyle at Lenderford with orders to unite with Marion at Flat Rock as soon as possible, and then to attack Tarleton. We don't know the way to Lenderford, and we came by for Charley to pilot us."

It was now nearly daylight, and they ordered him to pilot them to Andy Mallet's, with the hope of capturing him too. But he was not at home. Then he was compelled to pilot them to James Truesdale's, and he was not at home. From there they went to Lancaster village, and then to Colonel Tarleton's headquarters, where Charley Mackey was tried by court-martial, and sentenced to death as a spy.

The next day Mrs. Mackey, not knowing what had happened, gathered some fruit and eggs, and, with a basket well filled, she made her way to Colonel Tarleton's camp. Hucksters were readily admitted when they had such luggage to dispose of.

On getting within the lines she inquired the way to Colonel Tarleton's marquee, which was shown to her. The colonel was on parade, but a young officer, who was writing, asked her to be seated. After he had finished, he said, "You have something for sale, I presume."

She replied that she had eggs and fruit. He gladly took what she had and paid for them. She frankly declared that her basket of fruit was only a pretext to get to Colonel Tarleton; that she was anxious to see him in person on business of great importance. She then explained to him the capture of her husband, and that she wished to get him released if he were still alive, for she did not know but what they had hung him up to the first tree they came to. The officer told her that the colonel was on parade, and would not return for two hours—not till he came in for his midday meal. Mrs. Mackey was a comely woman of superior intelligence, and she soon interested the young officer in her sad condition. He expressed for her the deepest sympathy; told her that her husband was closely under guard; that he had been tried and sentenced to death as a spy; that he was to be hung at sunrise to-morrow; and that he feared there was no hopes of reprieve, as the evidence given against him by Tories was of the most positive kind. He told her that Colonel Tarleton was as cruel and unfeeling as he was brave, and that he would promise her anything to get rid of her, but would fulfill nothing.

"However, said he, I will prepare the necessary document for your husband's release, filling in the blanks, so that it will only be necessary to get Colonel Tarleton's signature. But I must again frankly say that this is almost hopeless."

It was evident to the most superficial observer that Mrs. Mackey would soon become a mother, and this probably had something to do in enlisting the kindly sympathy of the brave young officer. At twelve o'clock Colonel Tarleton rode up, dismounted, and entered the adjoining tent, as he passed close by the young officer said: "You must wait three or four minutes after the bugle sounds the dinner call, and then he will be brought forth, and when he comes out to mount, you can approach him, and not till then."

At the expected time the tall, boyish-looking, clean-shaved, handsome young Tarleton came out of his tent, and as he neared his charger he was confronted by the heroic Lydia Mackey, who, in few words made known the object of her visit. He quickly answered that he was in a great hurry, and could not at that time stop to consider her case. She said the case was urgent; that her husband had been condemned to die at sunrise to-morrow morning, and that he alone had the power to save his life. He replied: "Very well, my good woman, when I return later in the day I will inquire into the matter." Saying this he placed his foot in the stirrup, and sprang up, but before he could throw his right leg over the saddle, Mrs. Mackey caught him by the coat and jerked him down. He turned upon her with a scowl, and she implored him to grant her request.

He was greatly discomfited, and angrily said he would inquire into the case on his return. He then attempted again to mount, when she dragged him down a second time, begging him in eloquent terms to spare the life of her husband. "Hut tut, my good woman!" said he, boiling with rage. "Do you know what you are doing? Begone! I'll attend to this at my convenience; not sooner."

So saying, he tried a third time to mount, and a third time Lydia Mackey jerked him to the ground. Holding by the sword's scabbard and falling on her knees, she cried, "Draw your sword and slay me and my unborn babe, or give me the life of my husband, for I shall never let you go till you kill me or sign this document"—which she drew from her bosom, and held up before his face.

Tarleton trembled, was as pale as a corpse, and turning to the young officer, who stood near by, intently watching the scene, he said, "Captain, where is this woman's husband?"

He answered, "Under guard in yonder tent."

"Order him to be brought here." And soon Charles Mackey stood before the valiant Tarleton. "Sir," said he, "you have been convicted of bearing arms against his Majesty's government. Worse—you have been convicted of being a spy; you have dared to enter my lines in disguise as a spy, and you can not deny it. But for the sake of your wife, I will give you a full pardon on condition that you will take an oath never again to bear arms against the King's government."

"Sir," said Charles Mackey, in the firmest tones, "I cannot accept pardon on those terms. It must be unconditional, or I must die."

And poor Lydia Mackey cried out, "And I too must die"; and on her knees, holding on to Colonel Tarleton, she pleaded with such fervor and eloquence that Tarleton seemed for a moment to hesitate, and then, turning to the young captain, he said with quivering lips, and in a voice choked with emotion, "Captain, for God's sake, sign my name to this paper, and let this woman go."

With this, Lydia Mackey sank to the ground exhausted, and Colonel Tarleton mounted his charger and galloped off, doubtless happier for having spared the life of the heroic Lydia Mackey's husband.

Lydia Mackey in her old age was a fine talker, and when I was a boy ten years old I heard her tell this story with such feeling and circumstance that great tears rolled down her aged cheeks to mingle with those of her little grandchildren gathered around her knee.

The name of Tarleton was execrated in South Carolina till a very late period. But the Lydia Mackey episode shows that he had a heart not wholly steeled against the nobler feelings of humanity.

The history of our Revolutionary war can hardly present a more touching tableau than that of Lydia Mackey saving the life of her husband at the hands of the brave and bloody Tarleton. It is altogether probable that this Lydia Mackey victory was the first ever gained over this redoubtable commander.

My mother, Malvina Mackey, born September 1, 1792, was the ninth and youngest child of Charles and Lydia Mackey, the subjects of this narrative.

A PLEASANT PICTURE.

THE LONELINESS OF A BACHELOR'S LIFE WHEN MR. HARVEL FOUND HIM.

A Graphic Description of a Man's Life Before and After Matrimony.

You grow unusually amiable and kind; you are earnest in your search of friends; you shake hands with your office-boy as if he were your second cousin. You joke cheerfully with the stout, washer-woman and give her a shilling overchange and insist upon her keeping it, and grow quite merry at the recollection of it. You tap your hackman on the shoulder very familiarly and tell him he is a capital fellow, and don't allow him to whip his horses, except when driving to the post-office; you ask after the health of his wife. He says he has no wife—whereupon you think him a very miserable man and give him a dollar by way of consolation.

You think all the editorials in the morning papers are remarkably well written, whether upon your side or upon another. You think the stock market has a very cheerful look, with Erie—of which you are a large holder—down to seventy-five. You wonder why you never admired Mrs. Hemans before, or Stoddart, or any of the rest.

You give a pleasant twirl to your fingers as you saunter along the street, and say—but not so loud as to be overheard: "She is mine, she is mine!"

You wonder if Frank ever loved Nelly one-half as well as you love Madge. You feel quite sure he never did. You can hardly conceive how it is that Madge has not been seized before now by scores of enamored men and borne off, like the Sabine women in Roman history. You chuckle over your future like a boy who has found a guinea in groping for sixpences. You read over the marriage service, thinking of the time when you will take her hand and slip the ring upon her finger and repeat after the clergyman: "For richer, for poorer, for better, for worse!"—a great deal of "worse" there will be about it, you think!

Through all your heart cleaves to that sweet image of the beloved Madge as light cleaves to day. The weeks leap with a bound and the months only grow long when you approach that day which is to make her yours. There are no flowers rare enough to make bouquets for her; diamonds are too dim for her to wear; pearls are tame.

——And after marriage the weeks are even shorter than before. You wonder why on earth all the single men in the world is not rush tumultuously to the altar. You look upon them all as a traveled man will look upon some conceited Dutch boor who has never been beyond the limits of his cabbage-garden. Married men, on the contrary, you regard as fellow-voyagers, and look upon their wives—ugly as they may be—as better than none.

You blush a little at first, telling your butcher what "your wife" would like; you bargain with the grocer for sugars and teas and wonder if he knows you are a married man. You practice your new way of talk upon your office-boy; you tell him that "your wife" expects you home to dinner—and are astonished that he does not stare to hear you say it.

You wonder if the people in the omnibus know that Madge and you are just married, and if the driver knows that the shilling you hand to him is for "self and wife." You wonder if anybody was ever so happy before or ever will be so happy again.

You enter your name upon the hotel books as "Clarence —— and lady," and come back to look at it, wondering if anybody else has noticed it, and thinking that it looks remarkably well. You cannot help thinking that every third man you meet in the hall wishes he possessed your wife, nor do you think it very sinful in him to wish it. You fear it is placing temptation in the way of covetous men to put Madge's little gaiters outside the chamber-door at night.

Your home, when it is entered, is just what it should be—quiet, small, with everything she wishes, and nothing more than she wishes. The sun strikes it in the happiest possible way; the piano is the sweetest-toned in the world; the library is stocked to a charm, and Madge—that blessed wife—is there, adorning and giving life to it all. To think, even, of her possible death is a suffering you class with the infernal tortures of the Inquisition. You grow twain of heart and purpose. Smiles seem made for marriage, and you wonder how you ever wore them before.

Finger Nails.

Our finger nails grow out about three times a year. They should be trimmed with the scissors once a week, not so close as to leave no room for the dirt to gather, for then they do not protect the ends of the fingers, as was designed by nature; besides, if trimmed too close at the corners, there is danger of their growing into the flesh, causing inconvenience and sometimes great pain. The collections under the ends of the nails should not be removed by anything harder than a brush or a soft piece of wood, nor should the nails be scraped with a penknife or other metallic substance, as it destroys the delicacy of their structure, and will at length give them an unnatural thickness. We are not favorably impressed as to the cleanliness of [illegible] who have the nails trimmed to the quick, as it is often done to prevent dirt gathering there; whereas, if a margin were allowed it would be an index to the cleanliness of the hands, from which the collections under the finger nails are made. Leave a margin, then, and the moment you observe that these collections need removal, you may know that the hands need washing, when they and the nails are both cleaned together. Most persons are familiar with those troublesome bits of skin which loosen at the root of the finger nails; it is caused by the skin adhering to the nail, which, growing outward, drags the skin along with it, stretching it until one end gives way. To prevent this the skin should be loosened from the nail once a week, not with a knife or a scissors, but with something blunt, such as the end of an ivory paper-cutter. This is best done after soaking the fingers in warm water, then pushing the skin back gently and slowly; the white specks on the nails are made by pressing the nail with a knife at a point where it emerges from the skin. Biting off the finger nails is an uncleanly habit, for then the [illegible] uncleanness of the ends are hereafter [illegible] Children may be broken of such a filthy habit by covering them to the ends of their fingers with [illegible] they [illegible] thing from [illegible] object. If nails in any [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CURRENT COMMENTS.

THE foot and mouth disease, which has become epidemic among the cattle of the west, is a heavy affliction to the large stock interest of that country.

THE Manufacturers' Record publishes a statement showing that during January and February the capital invested in Southern manufacturing and mining enterprises increased $28,200,000. Kentucky shows the largest aggregate, $6,861,000; Alabama second, with $5,210,000.

THE New York Tribune clammors for uniform legislation against the dime novel evil. It is a lamentable fact that cheap literature is more of a curse than a blessing. A dime's worth of printed filth in the hands of a few active boys will poison the minds of all the juveniles in a large circle. If parents or police cannot or will not turn back this tidal wave of cheap immorality, our statesmen should turn their attention to the evil.

EDISON, the inventor, indulges in the following predictions: As to changes which will be effected by electricity within fifty years in the city of New York, I would say that I believe electricity will propel the cars of the street and elevated railroads, light the city within and without its buildings, furnish power for all purposes, work telephones, burglar alarms, deliver the opera, convey parcels, detect and signal fires, operate fire engines and possibly displace animal locomotion for vehicles.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Times shows the difference in the prices of clothing of similar quality and workmanship in New York and London. A broadcloth dress suit costing $50 in New York costs but $22 in London; a heavy business suit $30 in New York to $13 in London; a spring serge overcoat $20 in New York to $8.50 in London; a winter beaver overcoat $30 in New York to $14.50 in London; silk hat $5 in New York, $3 in London. The garments costing $218 in New York cost but $97.75 in London. Difference in favor of the latter city $120.25.

MANY people are under the impression that railroad commissions are very recent innovations. This is a mistake. Railroad commissions were established in some of the states more than twenty-five years ago, but it is only within the past ten or fifteen years that they have attracted much attention. At present the following states have commissions: Georgia, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Illinois, California, Connecticut, Iowa, Wisconsin, Virginia, Vermont, South Carolina, New York Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Missouri, Michigan, Minnesota, Massachusetts and Maine.

THE explosive compound called nitro-glycerine was discovered by Sobrero, a pupil in the laboratory of Pelouze, a French chemist, in 1846. So dangerous was the explosive that for a long time people dreaded to use it for any purpose. About 1863 mining engineers found that nitro-glycerine could be safely used as a blasting agent, when proper caution was taken. Of all the preparations of this explosive dynamite is considered the best. Its explosion is so rapid and violent that the air above it has no time to move away, but acts like a solid; hence it will act downward when placed upon the surface of a rock. Its uses are probably not half understood as yet.

THE well-known educator, Dr. A. D Mayo, in his recent address before the Louisiana Educational society, strongly advocated industrial education for women. He believed that the same brain power which enabled southern women to shine in society, to render efficient aid in church and school affairs, and to manage large plantations, would enable them to successfully push their way to the front rank of such commercial and industrial occupations as were suited to them. The tendency of young men to abandon their home places and seek remote fields leaves the young women of the south to bear the brunt of existence. Under such adverse circumstances they need a practical, self-supporting, industrial education.

GATH thus describes scenes at a famous dairy farm in Pennsylvania: "I was interested in two things in this stable. In the first place, the cream separator, which is run by a steam engine, revolves with enormous rapidity, and the cream flows out of one spigot and the skimmed milk out of another. Then I observed the apparatus for cleaning cows, which are carefully washed and brushed once or twice a day by means of brushes operated by the engine. The cow, calf or bull is brought forward and tied to the post, and from above these brushes are brought to her body and carefully raise every hair. The cattle like it, but their tails have to be tied up in a bag for not long ago one of the brushes tore out a tail. The temperature in the barn is kept at 50 degrees the year round, regulated by the thermometer, and the barn is lighted with the Brush light on every floor, and at midnight is as bright as day."

THE curious statement is made that within the past ten years the free use of narcotics has greatly increased not only generally, but among physicians. It is also said that some doctors use opium who make a specialty of curing the opium habit in others. Possibly the spread of the opium habit is due to some extent to the knowledge that it can be cured. Doubtless the stories about doctors have been greatly exaggerated, but it must be admitted that, like other people, some of them feel a desire for stimulants. It will not do for them to make a practice of drinking whisky, and they therefore resort to narcotics. Between two evils an opium-eating doctor is preferable to a whisky-drinking doctor. A doctor's undue familiarity with narcotics will not make him liable to give large doses of those drugs to his patients, but the use of liquors engenders a certain recklessness in most men. At least, this is the view of a New York physician.

TONS of mail matter in the course of a year fail to reach their destination. Many packages have no address or one that is illegible. Many things are stopped in the mails because they are non mailable, for instance, such things as hair oil, ointments and other liquids, explosives grease, dead animals, snakes, vegetables, candy, substances with bad odor, edge tools, unprotected flask, rotting cake, oil. The owners of packages of value are frequently notified that they had better take their property away. Recently nothing calculated to excite comment. A box of candy addressed to a child was found, a short time ago, to contain $45 in gold, which was restored to the owner. Among odd things recently found have been a large cactus weighing one and a half pounds, a living horned toad, colored matter for adulterating beer, artificial eyes and teeth, cigars, and wine. The postal authorities are untiring in their efforts to restore articles of value found in the mails to their proper owners.

SUMMARY OF CONGRESS.

Senate.

The commercial treaty with Mexico was ratified by a vote of forty-one to twenty, or just one vote more than the requisite two-thirds majority.....A bill was introduced by Mr. Miller, of New York, to suspend for two years the coinage of silver dollars. Mr. Logan introduced a bill to give pensions to dependant relatives of deceased soldiers.

Mr. Edmunds introduced a bill to provide for the establishment of a forest reservation in Montana.....The committee on education and labor reported favorably on the Morrill educational bill. It provides for setting apart the net proceeds of land sales, and annually a sum of money equal to one-half of the receipts from the Pacific railroads for public education.....Mr. Jackson proposed a constitutional amendment making the presidential term six years, and making the President ineligible to re-election. Referred to the committee on judiciary.....Mr. Miller, of New York, said the Senate committee on agriculture were in favor of passing the House pleuro-pneumonia bill, after amending it so as to provide that if the authorities of a State in which disease exists fail to take steps to stamp them out the President shall prohibit the exportation of cattle from that State.....Mr. Sewell spoke in favor of and Mr. Wilson against the Fitz-John Porter bill.

After speeches by Messrs. Logan and Manderson against, and Mr. Riddleberger in favor of the bill for the relief of General Fitz John Porter, the bill was read a third time and passed by a vote of 31 yeas to 25 nays. It was discovered after the announcement of the vote that the preamble to the bill had not been passed. The preamble was then passed. The bill authorizes the President to appoint Porter to the position of colonel in the army of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of dismissal, and also in his discretion to place General Porter on the retired list as of that grade. General Porter, however, to receive no compensation or allowance prior to his appointment under the act.

The Senate had a long discussion over the bill appropriating $25,000 to stamp out the foot and mouth disease among cattle in Kansas. Many Senators opposed the bill on the ground that Congress had no power to appropriate money for such a purpose, and that it had not been shown that it was beyond the ability of the State of Kansas to deal with the trouble. Mr. Ingalls attacked the State rights doctrine which, he said, had been preached against the bill. No action was taken on the bill.....A bill was introduced to authorise the secretary of the treasury to establish a number of additional life-saving stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States .....Mr. Bowen introduced a bill to reduce the postage on second class mail matter. It provides that after October 1, 1884, the rate of such postage shall be one cent a pound. This includes sample copies.

House.

Mr. Morrison, from the committee on ways and means, reported a bill revising the tariff. Mr. McKinley, from the same committee, introduced a minority report.....The post-office appropriation bill was debated without action.....A bill was passed admitting to American registry foreign vessels under certain circumstances.

Consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill was resumed. After some debate Mr. Horr's amendment, increasing to $12,500,000 the appropriation for the compensation of postmasters, was lost. On motion of Mr. Davis, of Illinois, the clause limiting the salaries of postmasters to $4,000, was stricken out. Mr. Holman offered an amendment, which was lost, fixing the salary of the postmaster at New York at $8,000. A motion by Mr. Horr to increase the appropriation for clerks by $125,000 was lost.

Mr. Harrison, from the committee on Territories, reported favorably and had placed on the calendar the bill for the admission of Dakota.....The House resumed the consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill. In committee of the whole, Mr. Skinner's amendment increasing the appropriation for the payment of letter carriers from $3,600,000 to $4,000,000, was adopted.

The bill granting a pension of $2,500 to Septimina Randolph Meikleham, the sole surviving grandchild of Thomas Jefferson, was discussed at great length in the committee of the whole. Finally on the motion of Mr. Hewitt, of Alabama, the enacting clause was stricken out by a vote of 120 yeas and sixty nays. He agreed to the committee report.....At the evening session twenty-two pension bills were passed.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

Provisions of the Morrill Bill, Reported to the Senate Favorably.

The Morrill Educational bill, reported favorably to the United States Senate from the committee on education and labor, provides for the setting apart forever of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands, and annually of a sum of money equal to one-half of the moneys paid into the treasury in each year by Pacific railroad companies under the Thurman act, for the education of the people, to be apportioned to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, upon the basis of population between the ages of five and twenty years, as an educational fund, and to bear interest at the rate of four per cent., the interest only to be paid for educational purposes. Two-thirds of the income arising from the fund shall be annually appropriated to the free and impartial education in public schools of all children between the ages of six and sixteen years; one third shall be appropriated to the endowment and support of agricultural colleges until the annual income of such colleges shall have reached the sum of $30,000, when only that sum shall be appropriated to them.

It provides for the establishment in these colleges of schools for the instruction of females in such branches of technical or industrial education as are suited to their sex. It also provides that a sum not exceeding fifty per cent. of the amount appropriated to any State or Territory may be applied in the first year to the maintenance of one or more schools for the instruction of teachers of common schools and not exceeding ten per cent. of the amount in each year thereafter may be applied to such same purpose. It provided that to entitle any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to the benefits of this act it shall maintain for at least three months in each year until January 1, 1887, and thereafter four months in each year, a system of free public schools for all the children within its limits between the ages of six and sixteen, and shall, through the proper officer thereof, for the year ending June 30 last preceding such apportionment, make full report to the commissioner of education, of the number of public free schools, the number of teachers employed, the number of school-houses owned and the number of school-houses hired, the total number of children taught during the year, the actual daily attendance, and the actual number of months in the year schools have been maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of said State, Territory or district, and the amounts appropriated by the legislature, or otherwise provided for the purpose of maintaining a system of free public schools.

THE NEWS.

BISMARCK, the German chancellor, appeared in the reichstag at Berlin and made a speech in justification of the course he had pursued in refusing to transmit the Lasker resolution to the reichstag. He said that he had recognised the good intentions of the American Congress, but he was unable to harness himself to the car of the opposition. The relations between Germany and the United States had always been pleasant, he said, and the German government had always tried to cultivate them. He declared that he would have presented the Lasker resolutions "but he has not been prevented by their form. The resolutions contained a clause directed against the policy which, in the emperor's name, he had been pursuing and which Herr Lasker had opposed for years. Once Bismarck was interrupted by cries of "Shame!" from the opposition members of the reichstag, and quite a scene ensued. The appearance of Prince Bismarck in the reichstag is generally attributed to his desire to maintain friendship with America.

ADVICES from the Congo river, in Africa, report that Henry M. Stanley has discovered another affluent of the Congo. The Arabs, in a recent slave raid, captured 1,800 children. The natives recently attacked the European factories on the Lower Congo, plundered caravans, and killed several Europeans.

Steam power for the work has arrived from England, capable of plowing fifty miles daily.

A DESPERADO'S DEEDS.

Some of the Many Crimes of Ben Thomson, of Texas.

A San Antonio (Texas) dispatch to the New York World says: The tragic death of the famous desperadoes, Ben. Thomson, King Fisher and Joe Foster, who killed each other in the Vaudeville theatre here, was the sole topic of conversation. Everybody knew Ben Thomson, and while the public in general breathes more freely over his death, yet all feel that the city has lost one of its most noted characters. Strangers coming here were loth to believe that the quiet-spoken gentleman pointed out to them was the notorious Ben Thomson. He looked more like a sentimental dry-goods clerk than like a desperado. One of his boasts was that he was the only man in the city who dared wear a silk hat on all occasions. Slenderly built, with carefully curled mustache, natty in dress, always clad in immaculate linen, Ben was the last man in the world to be taken as the murderer of a dozen men. He never could remember all whom he had wounded and not killed, and it was difficult for him to recall the names of those who had met death at his hands.

Ben was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1844, and came to Austin, Texas, when a child, with his parents. His mother was murdered by a runaway slave, and Ben, with his brother Bill, enlisted in the Confederate army at the outbreak of the war. He was only a hot-headed boy at this time and very soon quarreled with his superior officer, shot him dead, and was chained in the guard house, to which he set fire and escaped. Then he enlisted under Maximilian and spent two years chasing Mexican deserters, most of whom he shot on the run.

Tired of the army Ben went to Austin and opened a gambling saloon under the Austin Statesman. Here he often amused amused himself and friends by firing through the ceiling "just to see the printers clamber out of the windows." That old office is even now considered the best ventilated in Texas. When drunk he would ride like mad through the streets, shooting out the lights. Next day he would call and pay his fine.

One bright moonlight night Captain Rabb came to his house and asked Ben to protect him from five cowboys. Ben ran down from his house bareheaded and in his shirt-sleeves and was soon among the cowboys. His first shot killed the leader, his second a horse, and he actually chased the four men out of town, swearing, taunting and firing at them as they galloped away. So this desperado was continually fighting the battles of his friends. In Kansas his brother Bill was besieged by the entire police force in a store. Ben clambered in to his assistance. The marshal, an old friend of Ben, approached to confer with the besieged, when Bill shot him dead. Ben cursed his brother for causing the death of his best friend, but nevertheless helped Bill to escape by a rear exit. Both got away, but Bill was captured, tried and acquitted two years later.

Christmas night three years ago Ben slapped the face of the proprietor of the same theatre in which he met his death Wednesday. The latter ran behind the bar, caught up a double barreled shot-gun and fired both barrels. One side of Ben's trousers, vest and coat were cut to pieces, but only slight wounds were received and his wife soon patched the clothes. As the smoke cleared away Ben fired three times at the proprietor. One bullet went through his brain, one through his heart and the third through his arm. The barkeeper meanwhile got out his pistol, but as Ben turned upon him he dropped behind the bar. The point of his pistol was alone visible and Ben fired by guess through the woodwork of the bar. The bullet struck the man in the face, going through his mustache. Ben believed that the barkeeper died from the effects of the wound, but he did not. His name was Matthews, and he afterward was connected with the Hot Springs Sentinel. He then had three bullets in him, one of which was received from the mayor of Hot Springs. He was killed less than two years ago in an affray at the Arlyton house, Hot Springs. Ben was not strong physically. He said that when frolicking with his wife and little boy they could always throw him down and master him. But he was a dead shot, and could hit a man every time 100 yards away with his pistol, which was a beautiful silver-mounted one. His luck was amazing, and half the time he did not carry his pistol. If a man wanted to fight he tried to talk him out of it. If he persisted, Ben let him fire first. "Then," said he, with a smile, "I fixed him and worked in the plea of self-defense." One night Ben and his brother were in a gambling saloon in Laredo. A row started, the lights were put out and everybody went to shooting. Ben and Bill got in the windows, emptied their revolvers, sprang out the window, swam the river and got off without a scratch.

CHARLES BALMER, one of the best musicians in the West, and a very able and conscientious critic, thus tells a reporter the musical relations between Patti and Gerster: "The style of the artists is so different that it is almost impossible to make a comparison. Certainly, whatever Gerster does she enacts the character. She is a conscientious artist, but she has not the facility that Patti has. She has equally as much execution, but there is something in Patti's voice that is indescribable. The long and short of it is that Patti is the greatest artist in the world.

DANGEROUS EXPLOSIVES.

The United States Joining in the Crusade Against Dynamite.

Attorney-General Brewster has sent the following circular to all United States attorneys and marshals:

By direction of the President I have to inform you it is reported that certain persons are aiding in the prosecution of heinous crimes by shipping to foreign ports explosives dangerous in the highest degree to life and property. No proof has been adduced that this rumor is founded upon fact, and the President cannot believe its truth. The honor of this nation, however, requires that it should not be open to the imputation, unfounded though it be, of the slightest appearance of tolerating such crimes, whether to be committed against our people or those of other countries.

Your attention is therefore called to sections 5,353, 5,354, 5,355, 4,278 and 4,279 of the revised statutes of the United States, which regulate the shipment of explosives, and the punishment of those who infringe their provisions, and you are instructed to be diligent in your efforts to prevent the offenses described and to detect and prosecute those who have or may commit them.

A STRANGE CASE.

An Eight-Year-Old Boy Who Lives and Dies Daily.

A wonderful case of suspended animation is reported from Egypt, Penn. The subject is an eight year-old boy, who has lived and died every day during the last month. From sunset to sunrise he enjoys good health, and romps around like all children of his age, but at dusk he becomes entirely unconscious and remains so until morning. Physicians are sorely puzzled by the case. One said: "I pricked him with a pin, and applied a galvanic battery to his most sensitive parts, but without creating the least impression. I forcibly raised one of his arms and it remained in an upright position. The members were like wax, and were covered with indentations which I made with my fingers." The child had just recovered from whooping cough when this strange affliction came upon him. It was proposed to take him to New York, to be examined by the most eminent physicians in the country.

The Laplander.

The Laplander's sledge has no runners, but, like himself, it is covered with reindeer-skin, and is in shape something like a canoe. Harnessed to his sledge, the reindeer starts off with almost the rapidity of the steam-engine, going fifteen or twenty miles an hour. The reindeer is not only the Laplander's horse, but his cow, and, during the time that it gives milk, he is freezing large quantities of it, to be used when no more is to be obtained. Then he breaks off a piece, warms it out, and has again a good article of milk. The deer is also his food, large herds of them being kept in some parts of the country. From its skin the Laplander makes the roof and floor of his house, his bed, his shoes and stockings, his clothes, and cords and strings for his bow. Without this animal, the Laplander would be in a deplorable condition.

Will Read Either Way.

Our young friends have heard of palindromes—words or lines that read and spell the same backward as forward. The following sentences, printed in the London Truth, simply make sense, read word by word either way:

"Solomon had vast treasures—silver and gold—things precious. Happy and rich and wise was he. Faithfully served he God.

"She sits lamenting sadly, dies too much alone.

"Man is noble and generous often, but sometimes vain and cowardly.

"Carefully boiled eggs are good and palatable."—Youth's Companion.

THE JOKER'S BUDGET.

A FEW NOTES ACCIDENTALLY OVERHEARD BY THE PHILADELPHIA "EVENING CALL" HUMORIST.

THE CAT OUT AGAIN.

Young Alphonso—"Do you know how to courtesy?"

Little Nell—"Yes, I knows."

Young Alphonso—"Well, now stand up. I will bow to you and you courtesy to me. I want to see you do it."

Little Nell—"But the dancing-master said we must only courtesy to gentlemen."

Young Alphonso—"Well?"

Little Nell—"Pa and ma both told sister you was no gentleman."

NO DANGER.

Fire Marshal—"I very much fear, sir, that additional means of egress will have to be ordered for your church."

Pastor—"And why so, my dear sir?"

Fire Marshal—"In case of fire it would be utterly impossible to get the congregation out alive."

Pastor—"Oh! You are mistaken—very much mistaken. I could empty this church in three minutes."

Fire Marshal—"In three minutes! How?"

Pastor—"By taking up a collection."

A BAD PIECE OF WORK.

"And you were unable to arrest the man?" said the Judge to the Sheriff.

"Yes, your Honor, he got away from me."

"Did you follow him and shout, 'Stop thief!' and call upon outsiders to help you?"

"Yes, your Honor, I did everything possible. I yelled 'Stop thief!' and threatened to shoot him if he didn't give himself up, but he paid no attention to me."

"H'm," growled the Judge, "Couldn't even arrest his attention."

A SENSATION.

Jane—"Just look at this. Here is an item in the paper saying that a wealthy Milwaukee man has created a sensation by announcing that he is going to marry his servant girl."

Bridget—"I should think it wud make a sensation. The idee of a respectable gurrul givin' up her liberty in that way."

Jane—"Yes, and becoming a mere mistress, to take all the blame and get no pay."

Bridget—"She ought to be contint to stay as she is and draw big wages and boss the whole house."

A GREAT DISCOVERY.

George—"Oh! I have made the blessedest discovery!"

Harry—"Invented a new electric motor?"

George—"No; nothing of that kind. You know that charming Miss Blank that I am so madly in love with?"

Harry—"Yes; and your affection is reciprocated, I understand."

George—"Well, I discovered last night that her father and her mother both snore."

Harry—"Why, what is there particularly blessed about that?"

George—"What could be more so? There is never any doubt about when they are asleep."

A FASHIONABLE LOCALITY.

"You have plenty of houses to rent, I see."

"Oh, yes; I am agent for a great many properties. What would you like?"

Mob in Cincinnati.

On Saturday last a mob attempted to break into the Hamilton county jail, at Cincinnati, Ohio, and take therefrom one Berner, who had killed a man. The avowed purpose of the mob was to hang the criminal. The crime was a brutal one, and the murderer had just a day before been sentenced to twenty years imprisonment. It was found necessary to call out the State military to protect the jail. The mob was not checked until the military fired into it. The result is given in the following telegrams from Cincinnati which were published in Tuesday's daily papers:

CINCINNATI, March 30.—An incomplete list made Sunday night gives the names of 22 killed and 61 wounded in the riots of Saturday night and Saturday. There are six regiments of infantry, two battalions of artillery, and one company of cavalry on hand to keep the peace. Besides this a full force of police and the U. S. troops are guarding government property.

A negro is said to have been the leader of the mob Friday night.

A special to the Atlanta Constitution says:

At midnight Sunday night the crowd closed in on the military, and after an exchange of shots the Gatling guns were brought into service, bringing destruction in untold numbers. The number killed can not be estimated at this writing. Kentuckians have arrived, killing two bridge policemen for their pains trying to delay them. At this writing four volleys have been fired into the crowd, killing at least twenty-five.

The Associated Press of Monday made no reference to this, but it came from a man on the ground.

The whole community feels outraged over the way the criminal laws have been administered of late in this city, and while every good citizen deplores the necessity for mob law, no one can help but admit that the written laws of the land seem to have become inoperative in this community through the power and influence of what are called the criminal classes, and that the temporary elevation of Judge Lynch to the bench seems necessary, and, therefore, justifiable.

CINCINNATI, March 31.—At midday there is no appearance of relaxation of preparations for defense. Barricades of barrels and every other sort of material still remain across all avenues of approach to county buildings and behind them stand militia with fixed bayonets. Police have been sent away to their regular posts and are obtaining some rest. Though the general feeling is that there will be no further outbreak, there are not lacking men who predict otherwise.

COLUMBUS, O., March 31.—Governor Hoadley has ordered troops en route to Cincinnati to return. The 4th and 14th Regiments to be relieved and the rest of the troops to be held in Cincinnati 'till further orders. The city will be guarded until Wednesday, at least.

An Innocent Man Hanged.

N. Y. Herald.

JACKSON, GA., March 22.—Four years ago two negroes were arrested in Hall county charged with assaulting a white woman. They were tried and found guilty. One was hanged and the other sent to the chain gang for life. Since then enough evidence has been found to satisfy the community where the crime was committed that the convicted negroes were innocent. As the negro now in the chain gang was a citizen of Jackson county, the residents of that county placed themselves before the last grand jury, and after an investigation they decided to request the grand jury of Hall county to ask the Governor for the negro's pardon. There is of course no doubt but that he will be freed.

The Jackson county authorities are also believed to be in possession of facts which will lead to the conviction of the criminal who has been living all these years within a few miles of the scene of the crime and the executions. The publicity of the present discovery has caused great excitment, especially among the negroes, and there is little doubt that lynching will follow if the citizens learn the name of the real culprit. The crime was an exceedingly brutal one, the victim making a desperate fight with her assailant. She was finally left for dead in a small patch of woods. The unfortunate negro who was hanged died protesting his innocence, but the circumstantial evidence against him was so strong that his story was not credited. The negro now in the chain gang has always protested his innocence.

Just after the Danville riot, the great and good Deacon Richard Smith, with a "holier than thou" air, filled the columns of his paper, the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette with mourning and prayer for what he was pleased to term the "lawlessness of the South." Just now we can imagine the good Deacon, perched upon the roof of the Commercial-Gazette building as a place of refuge to save himself from drowning in the blood that is flooding the streets of the "Paris of America," the haven of Grand Jury Report—Spring Term, 1884.

To the Hon. J. R. Cobb, Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, Presiding:

We, the Grand Jury impanneled for this term of the court, beg leave to make this, our general presentment.

We have examined into the violations of the criminal law, committed in our county, and have preferred indictments in all cases where, in our judgment, the public good would thereby be subserved, and we are glad to report to your honor and to the people of the county through this presentment that crime is decreasing in our county. We have found a few persons who have been guilty of the offence of carrying concealed weapons, notwithstanding the severity of the law now in force for the punishment of this crime. We have examined the public buildings of the county, and we find the jail as well kept as circumstances would allow. We find that the jail is very poorly ventilated. We find the heating aparatus to be out of repair and of no service. Prisoners complain of almost freezing during the very cold weather of the past winter. We find from examination of the court house that it is in good condition, except the upper story, where some repairs are needed in the way of plastering. We recommend a carpet to be placed upon the floor in front of the stand to the bar.

We have examined the offices and find them all properly furnished except the circuit clerks office, which we recommend to be furnished with an iron safe for the preservation of the books and papers, and a properly arranged secretary or desk for the keeping of blanks, &c. We have carefully examined the books of the various county officers, and find them all neatly and properly kept.

We have examined into the public school system of the county, and are pleased to report that our examination discloses that the same is properly managed and the funds carefully disbursed.

We find the public roads to be in as good condition as circumstances would admit, except in cases where we have indicted. We find the roads covered by the said to be corporate limits of Clanton to be in an almost impassible condition, and recommend that some means be devised by which they can be put in order.

The bonds of the county officers we find to be secure.

We recommend a semi-annual publication of the Treasurer's report in the county paper.

We have found as the result of our labors, 22 indictments.

We desire to express to your honor our thanks and appreciation for the clear and intelligent charge delivered to us, and to express to the solicitor our appreciation of the able manner he has discharged his duty to our body.

Having now completed our labors, we respectfully ask that we be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
J. L. WILLIAMS, Foreman.

List of Cases.

The following criminal cases were disposed of during the term of the circuit court held last week:

STATE VS.

Henry Bearden. Violating revenue law. Guilty and fined $90.

Son Mims. Assault with weapon. Fined five dollars.

Alonzo Bland. Murder. Guilty in first degree and sentenced to penitentiary for life.

C. C. Gibson. Assault to murder. Nol. pros.

Davis McGee. Carrying concealed weapons. Guilty and fined fifty dollars.

Wiley Cook, col. Grand larceny. One year hard labor for the county.

James D. Higginbotham. Grand larceny. Not guilty.

Alfred Mullins Carrying concealed weapons. Not guilty.

Dan Weaver, col. Carrying concealed weapons. Guilty. Fined fifty dollars.

John Williams. Disturbing public worship. Fined twenty dollars.

Sam Nettles and Lewis Price, col. Breaking railroad switch. Sentenced to six months hard labor for county.

Frank Smith, col. Grand larceny. Two years hard labor for county.

Among the new enterprises now under way in the South is a newly organized company to build a $200,000 mill in Durham, North Carolina, by J. S. Carr and Odell Brothers; a $50,000 mill for Trenton, Tennessee; a $200,000 mill in Dalton, Georgia; one to cost $84,000 in Griffin, Georgia; a $300,000 mill in Roanoke, Virginia; and an additional mill to cost about $100,000 by the Rome, Georgia, Cotton Factory company. The lately organized Darlington Cotton Mills Company will build a $300,000 mill at Darlington, South Carolina, to be finished in the fall, and another of equal cost is under construction at Newberry, in the same State, while Fayetteville, North Carolina, and one or two other places in that State will also soon have new cotton mills. These mills will add

Mr. Vanderbilt said to a New York reporter the other day: "I believe I am the richest man in the world. In England the Duke of Westminster is said to be worth $200,000,000, but it is mostly in lands and houses. It does not yield him 2 per cent. A year from now I shall be worth more than $200,000,000, and will have an income equal to 6 per cent on that amount." He owns 380,840 shares of railroad stock, valued at $88,750,000; his railway bonds amount to $26,357,420; he holds $70,580,000 in Government bonds, and a trifle of $5,000,000 in other securities—the aggregate wealth of this Midas being $201,332,418. And the snow ball rolls on.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD
WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Bring us the news, or write of it when you can't bring it.

Miss Hallie Ray, of Montgomery, is visiting Miss Mollie Hannon.

The Spring term of Chilton Chancery Court convenes Friday, April the 11th.

Mr. James Bell is having the lumber placed upon his lot preparatory to building a dwelling house.

The prohibition election will be held in Benson beat on next Tuesday. The Prohibitionists are confident that the result will be "dry."

Wellman & Co., the Birmingham clothiers, are always doing a staving business. They handle none but the best goods, and sell at low prices.

John Leach is a darkey who undertook to chastise a colored sister on Monday night last. John used his pommeling powers with too great an effect, and he will probably soon be at work for the county.

Sheriff Garner arrested seven parties Monday, charged as follows: One for felony, one for carrying concealed weapon, three for selling liquor to minor, one for assault and battery, and one for failure to work public road.

A difficulty occured at Hall's mill on Monday evening, between Robert Hall and another employee, whose name we did not learn. Hall was cut in several places, but was not seriously hurt. The party who did the cutting fled and has not been heard from.

Mr. E. H. Lowe, has established a first-class saw mill three miles northeast of Clanton, and is now at work with the very best machinery, sawing 10,000 feet of lumber per day. Another enterprise for our section, and we wish it much success.

At a meeting of the newly selected county Democratic Executive Committee, held at Clanton, on the 25th ult., Mr. S. T. Brittle was elected Chairman. A call for a county convention to select delegates to the State Convention will be made in due time.

We inquired around during court as to a probable candidate for State Senator. None of those who are fitted for the position care to have the honor shouldered upon them, and we have some fears that Chilton will not be able to prevail upon a good man to take the place.

Dr. T. E. Callier announces himself as a candidate for representative in the Lower House of the Legislature. Dr. Callier is so well known that any commendation on our part would be unnecessary. He makes his candidacy subject to the action of the nominating convention of the Democratic and Conservative party, should the party decide to make nominations for county offices. Dr. C., after having been prevailed upon to make the race, shows honesty of purpose, in coming boldly out and announcing to the people that he is a candidate for their suffrages.

Sentenced for Life.

The trial of Alonzo Bland, charged with the murder of his mother, occupied two days of the circuit court last week. Our readers are already familiar with the principal points of the evidence in the case. About the last of December, 1882, Mrs. Bland was found one morning, by neighbors, lying upon the floor of her room, cold in death, with a wound, resembling one caused by a pistol ball, extending from near the right temple to the back of her head. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that the deceased "came to her death at the hands of some person or persons unknown." Circumstances immediately following the death of Mrs. Bland, threw suspicion upon her son, Alonzo Bland, as having committed the crime. Alonzo Bland was living with his mother at the time of her unfortunate taking off, and his statement was that she died from a fit or spasm and that falling, she might have struck her head upon something to cause the wound before mentioned. No pistol or weapon of any kind was found in the possession of the accused or anywhere upon the premises. The testimony of physicians who examined the body of Mrs. Bland, was to the effect that the wound was caused by a leaden ball which entered the fore part of the head and made its exit at the lower back portion of the skull. The prisoner appeared calm, and even indifferent during the trial, and was, to all outward appearances, very little affected up to the time sentence was passed, when he showed some emotion. The verdict was murder in the first degree and a sentence to the penitentiary for life. The prisoner protests his innocence. The jury was out about twelve hours before agreeing upon a verdict. An appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court. Bland was carried to Montgomery and placed in the jail of that county—the jail here not being considered secure.

Verbena Views.

One week of smiling weather cheers the farmer as he "homeward plods his weary way."

Corn planting is progressing finely. Farmers are fertilizing the crop largely with guano.

The public road between here and the Pratt mill required immediate attention. The overseer has certainly neglected his duty.

Miss Fannie Wainwright has returned to Prattville.

New crop Spring eggs now selling for twelve and a half cents a dozen.

Mr. John A. Strock is now the happy father of a nine pound boy.

Singing every Monday night at the Baptist church. Our vocalists believe in practice.

Prof. Haralson's new dwelling is rapidly approaching completion. It is a neat and pretty cottage, and will add much to the general appearance of our town. Mr. Humes has just finished putting on a fine coat of paint.

Mr. F. H. Cobb, who has been in charge of the Clifton House since last December, has removed his family to Wadsworth's, and will take charge of the commissary at that place.

Mr. Sam Strock has closed his school in lower Chilton, and is now a student at our Academy.

Mr. A. P. DeBardeleben has resumed charge of the Clifton House, and attends to the wants of the commercial pilgrim with his accustomed geniality.

The conviction and sentence of Alonzo Bland, charged with murdering his mother near this place something over a year ago, has created considerable surprise among the young man's acquaintances. The result of the trial last week proves the weakness of the preliminary examination. The general opinion in regard to Bland is that there is something wrong in his mental make-up. On his way down to Montgomery Saturday evening, he waved an adieu to some of his old friends, and appeared to be in good spirits, as if unconscious of the hard life before him.

BIJOU.

The Tax Collector of Hale county defaulted to the amount of $20,000. The investigation which followed developed the fact that the Commissioner's court had failed to publish a report of receipts and expenditures of county funds, as the Code directs. The Commissioners' court claimed that economy was the object in not publishing such report. Economy with a vengeance.

Malberry Dots.

LITTLE MULBERRY, Mar. 29.

MR. EDITOR—If it is in order, we would like to furnish the readers of the VIEW a few dots from our part of the county.

To begin, we will tell them where we live and what we do for a living. We are in the southwest part of the county, and our people are mostly farmers. A few of the citizens get shingles which they sell to the merchants at Dixie. Of our farmers we would say they are business men. Mr. W. H. Mills, with three horses, makes fifteen and sixteen bales of cotton a year, and corn and other farm products in proportion. Who can head that?

Our people are badly behind with their work, and are just now in a good way planting. Being energetic as they are they will not stay behind.

There are in our community some of the oldest people in the county. Mrs. Rizor, who has just recovered from a severe cold is between ninety and one hundred years of age. Mr. Hairl and Uncle Roper are each upward of eighty. Rev. Mr. Patrick is nearing eighty. Mr. William Mills, Sr., is seventy-eight. Old age agrees with Mr. Mills, he weighs over two hundred pounds.

Notwithstanding the severe winter, cupid has found several victims in this part of the moral vinyard, the last of whom were Col. John Presley, of Tallapoosa county, and Miss Fannie J. Sauls, of Chilton. Rev. Mr. Patrick pronounced them man and wife, on the evening of March 23d. May his be a happy lot, and hers a joyous life, is the wish of many friends.

The bridge over Mulberry Creek, on the Dixie and Cooper's Station road is now complete. It is a good bridge.

Wishing the VIEW and its readers a prosperous year, we are

THEIR FRIEND.

The handsome residence of Mr. J. P. Vanderveer, at Clear Creek, was burned on Monday afternoon last. The entire building was destroyed but the greater portion of the contents, we are glad to learn, were saved. It was reported here that a negro was killed during the fire—falling from the roof of the house while attempting to subdue the flames.

People Will Talk.

You may get through the world, but 'twill be very slow,
If you listen to all that is said as you go;
You'll be worried and fretted and kept in a stew—
For meddlesome tongues must have something to do.
And people will talk.

If quiet and modest, you'll have it presumed
That your humble position is only assumed
You're a wolf in sheep's clothing or else you're a fool;
But don't get excited—keep perfectly cool—
For people will talk.

And then if you show the least boldness of heart,
Or a slight inclination to take your own part,
They will call you an upstart, conceited and vain;
But keep straight ahead—don't stop to explain—
For people will talk.

If threadbare your dress or old-fashioned your hat,
Some one will surely take notice of that,
And hint very strong that you can't pay your way;
But don't get excited whatever they say,
For people will talk.

If your dress is the fashion, don't think to escape,
For they criticise then in a different shape;
You're ahead of your means, or your tailor's unpaid,
But mind your own business, there's naught to be made,
For people will talk.

Now the best way to do is to do as you please,
For your mind if, you have one, will then be at ease;
Of course you'll meet with all sorts of abuse;
But don't think to stop them, it ain't any use,
For people will talk.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.
The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:
1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other place without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Averse to exertion of body or mind, Reputation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

THE BLIND CANARY.

Dead singer in my dooms,
My blind canary,
I dwell upon the liquid note
That fills thy little breast and throat,
And comes forth piping, full and airy,
Reaching far and far away
To warn dreamy twilight sky,
Whose virgin star with coldness beams
On fairy dell and fairy.

Dost sing the joys of summer climes,
My little stranger?
Those changeless groves from Canary Isles,
Where ever long the summer smiles
On tamarind and forest ranger!
On those green isles lapped by the sea
Perennial blooms thy parent tree,
Far from man's sins, far from his crimes,
And far from danger.

The Tuscs and the citron tree,
Thou knowest no more;
The guavas sweet and mangosteen
Will never more by thee be seen:
Thy treble note no more will pour
O'er mango, palm, and asphodel
And pomgranate and sarcasto bell,
No more, my bird, thy vision's free
To see thy native shore.

When lo, the plume of awful death
In dusk descends
Upon the couch where life is run,
And cold oblivion's night begun,
E'er yet the soul its casement rends,
The lights of heaven pass in review,
And waning hopes their pulse renew;
Such scenes are thine, to which thy breath
Its sweetness lends.

McDERMOTT.

A PERFECT TREASURE.

STORY OF A DETECTIVE.

I am not the man to have hobbies, but what I like is plate, good serviceable gold and silver. It is whispered by malignant persons that I would not give so many dinner-parties, if it were not to exhibit these costly articles. I am not conscious of such a motive for my hospitality, but if it exists it need not surely be objected to; it is I who have to pay for the weakness, and not my friends.

It was not looking at my gold and silver plate, I suppose, which made my mother-in-law bilious; she might have stopped a long time at some other houses I could name, without getting the quality, or even the quantity, of food that would produce an indisposition of that kind. Mind, I don't blame her; she gave way to an amiable weakness (it was truffles).

Last Wednesday we happened to have rather a large dinner party; I had been dining out a good deal at various clubs lately, and of course it was necessary to invite my entertainers in return.

The dinner had gone off uncommonly well. The shield-shaped salvers had been very much admired, and so had my new tureen. The ladies had retired to the drawing-room, and I had just passed the vine-leaf claret-jug to Col. Twankay, when Bowles stooped down and whispered in my ear that a person wished to see me in the hall upon very important business.

"Ask him what it is," said I. "It is impossible that I can leave my guests."

"I did ask him, sir, but he refuses to state," replied Bowles, confidentially. "It is my opinion he's a begging-letter imposter; but he says he must see you in person."

I was upon the point of saying, "Tell him to leave the house," when something or other in Bowles' manner struck me so decidedly that I resolved not to do so. Perhaps I placed rather too much confidence in my butler. Actuated by a vague presentiment of distrust and danger, I rose from the table, made a hasty apology to my friends, and went with Bowles into the hall. A shabby-genteel sort of person was standing by the umbrella stall.

"What is it you want with me, sir?" said I, in a magisterial tone.

"One minute's private conversation with you," he replied, with a glance at the butler.

"You may leave us, Bowles," said I; and he withdrew accordingly, although, I am bound say, very unwillingly. The thought flashed across me like lightning. "Bowles has something to fear from this man's disclosure," and the next words of my visitor confirmed me in the suspicion.

"I am a member of the detective police force," said he, and I come to warn you that there is something wrong in your house."

"Nothing to do with my plate, I hope?" said I, with considerable anxiety.

"Very much to do with it, sir," returned he, grimly. "There is a thief harbored here; and by this time to-morrow you will not have a silver spoon in your possession, unless I find him out. I must see every soul you have got under your roof."

"A thief!" said I; "impossible! I never have even so much as a strange waiter. That butler has lived with me for ten years, and my two footmen, even longer. I will answer for their honesty."

"Let me see 'em, sir; that's all I want," was the decisive reply.

"It is not Bowles?" said I, appealingly; "don't say it's Bowles;" but, although it agitated me beyond measure to think that I should have to trust a new butler with all my plate, I confess that I had a horrible idea that it was Bowles.

"I think not," said the detective, quietly. "Let me see the other men."

I turned the gaslight over the door as high as it would go, and called them both into the hall.

"It is not them," he said. "What other men have you in the house?"

"None but my guests," said I; "here in the dining-room."

"Do you know them all very well, sir? Are none of them mere acquaintances or neighbors?"

"Well," returned I, with hesitation, and feeling glad that Mrs. Matcham was not a third party to this interview, "I know some, of course, better than others."

"Just so," said the detective, quietly; "then I must see them."

This was a shocking proposal, and made me feel hot all over; but still I was not going to run any risk with those shield-shaped salvers. Major Pinkey, I now remembered, had expressed a great wish to examine them, and perhaps that shot had had some weight in my inviting him to dinner. Who the deuce Major Pinkey was—except that he belonged to my club—I certainly knew no more than the detective, and perhaps a great deal less. Still, it seemed a very base thing to open the dining-room door and let this fellow scrutinize my guests, in hopes to find a scoundrel among them.

"Upon my life," said I, "Mr. Detective, I can't do it."

"Very right, sir—very natural," replied he, smiling in his quiet way. "It would never do, would it? But look you, sir; I'm a waiter, a hired waiter. Who is to know that I have not business at your side-board? In one minute I could run my eye over the whole lot, and spot my man, if he's there, as sure as fate."

I did not like even this arrangement; but still it seemed the only thing to be done. So, sending for Bowles, I arranged with him the plan of proceeding, and then returned to the dining-room. After a period of anxiety no measure of time could indicate, the supposed waiter took his departure.

"You've got a new man, I see," said Dr. Twistle, carelessly, "with so much plate about, I hope you are satisfied about his honesty."

I was exceedingly glad to find old Twistie was honest, and had not been taken by the shirt frill, and walked off to Bow street, but of course I did not tell him that.

"Please, sir, you're wanted again," whispered Bowles, as he brought in another bottle of claret.

"If the kitchen chimney is on fire, I am glad we have dined," observed the Major, good-humoredly. "If I can be of any service, pray command me."

I did not inform him what a relief it was to me that he was not wanted, but remarking that it was only a little domestic matter, I once more sought the inspector.

"The one I'm after is not among them, sir, so far as I know," observed this official, jerking his thumb in the direction of the dining-room. "Are you sure there are no more men in your house besides those I have seen?"

"Yes," said I; "there are no more."

"Then now I must have a look at the ladies."

"The ladies-!" cried I, aghast at this proposal. "You don't want to go into the drawing-room?"

"It would be more satisfactory," observed the detective, coolly. "My information is very reliable. But, at all events, who is there?"

"Well," said I, "my wife is there for one; you have no information against her, I suppose?"

He nodded satisfaction so far.

"Then there's the Honorable Mrs. Matcham and her daughter."

"Safe," rejoined the detective checking them off on his fingers.

"Mrs. Twistie, of Regalia square, and Lady Bobbington."

"I suppose they're all right," remarked my inquisitor, doubtfully. "Are you sure there are no more?"

"There's my mother-in-law, but she's in her own room, and exceedingly unwell."

"Very good," observed the detective inconsequentially. "There's a plant somewhere in this house, however; you may take your oath on that, and in the last place you would ever look for it; so now I must see the maids."

I was full of suspicions that the detective himself was a "Plant" that would presently blossom into a burglar; but my overtaxed mind refused to bear this burden. If it was so, I would trust to his clemency, to leave me a silver fork or two to carry on the business of life. If this man turned out to be anything less than what he described himself to be, all authority would henceforth lose its effect with me. He had to repeat, 'So now I must see the maids," in his undeniable manner, before I could collect myself sufficiently to lead the way to the kitchen. To say the cook and the kitchen-maid stared at the phenomena of our presence, is to underrate their powers of vision.

"Now, I dare say you have no charwoman nor any temporary assistant, my good lady, even on an occasion like the present," observed my companion urbanely; "but you and this woman do all the work yourselves."

"That's true, sir; we don't mind hard work now and then," returned the cook, tossing her head; "and besides, I don't like strangers in my kitchen," added she with meaning, "especially when I'm busy, and would rather have their room than their company."

I could have given that woman five shillings upon the spot for that rapid discharge of words. The detective's tongue was silenced by my domestic needle-gun, and he retired much discomfited.

"Now, if I had been an ordinary policeman, and in uniform," whispered he to me, as we reached the hall again, "I could have come over that cook in no time."

Without remarking upon this confession of defeat, I led the way to the nursery. He walked admiringly from cot to cot, as though he were a connoisseur in babes.

"Charming children, and well taken care of, I can see," observed he, with a nod (I thought) toward the under-nurse.

"It's neither of them," he added in a low whisper. "You have a housemaid or two I suppose?"

The housemaids were inspected, and pronounced to be free from suspicion. "But I cannot have seen everybody," he said decisively.

"Yes," said I, "everybody, except Mrs. Maqueechy."

"Friend of the family?" inquired the detective, with a disappointed air.

"Well," said I, "I might almost say so. She came to us not only with the best of written characters, but my wife had an interview with her late mistress, a Mrs. Ogilvie, who pronounced her a perfect treasure; and we ourselves have found her all that could be wished."

"I should like to see the 'perfect treasure,'" quoth the detective, smiling grimly; "we often find them to be the very people we want."

"Nay," said I, "but in this case your suspicions are quite groundless; Mrs. Maqueechy is a superior person, and takes an interest in us which you seldom find in a domestic except after years of service. Besides, she is my mother-in-law's sick nurse, and most likely they have already made their arrangements for the night. It would be a pity to disturb them."

"I must see Mrs. Maqueechy," returned my companion, gravely. "She seems altogether too charming to be missed."

"You detectives are clever fellows," replied I with irritation; "but you often spend your time very fruitlessly. It is a pity that a man can't be determined, and yet avoid being obstinate. However, since you have gone so far, you shall go through with the business."

With that I knocked at the door, and, admitted to the sick-room, informed my mother-in-law of what was taking place; while the invaluable Maqueechy retired with her usual delicacy to the dressing-room. Perhaps I spoke a little too loud—for that Mrs. Maqueechy could stoop to eavesdropping, it is hard to believe—but at all events, that intelligent woman must have possessed herself of the substance of what I related, for when I opened the door to admit the officer, I found her already outside, and in his custody. She had endeavored to escape through the second door of the dressing-room—"bolted like a rabbit," said the detective—but had run into the very danger she would have avoided, and there she was with a couple of handcuffs over her neat mittens.

"We know one another very well, ma and Mrs. Maqueechy," observed the detective grimly. "I was told I should find an old friend in this house, although I had no idea who it would be until you mentioned Mrs. Ogilvie. She is very charitable, she is, in getting her fellow-creatures situations in respectable families where there happens to be a good deal of plate. It was this very night that this good lady here had engaged to open your front door to her husband and a friend of his, who keeps a light cart in the mews yonder. Being a sick-nurse, you see, nobody would be surprised at her being about the house at all hours. Wasn't that your little game, Mrs. Maqueechy?"

"Well, I suppose it's a five-year touch?" observed that lady with philosophic coolness.

"Well, I'm afraid it is, ma'am; since that other little business in Carlton Gardens still remains unsettled. Good-by, sir; you will see Mrs. M. again, once or twice, before you have done with her; and in the meantime you take my advice, sir, and in hiring another sick nurse for your mother-in-law, don't you apply to Mrs. Ogilvie."

And off he walked with our "perfect treasure."

WASHINGTON'S FUNERAL.

Ceremonies at the Obsequies of the Nation's First President.

[From the Ulster County (N. Y.) Gazette, Jan. 4, 1800.]

GEORGE TOWN, Dec. 20.

On Wednesday last the mortal part of Washington the Great, the father of his country and the friend of man, was consigned to the tomb with solemn honors and funeral pomp.

A multitude of persons assembled from miles around at Mount Vernon, the choice abode and last residence of the illustrious chief. There were the groves—the spacious avenues, the beautiful and sublime scenes, the noble mansion—but, alas! the august inhabitant was now no more. His mortal part was there, indeed; but ah! how affecting! how awful the spectacle of such worth and greatness, thus, to mortal eyes, fallen! Yea! fallen! fallen!

In the long and lofty portico, where oft the hero walked in all his glory, now lay the shrouded corpse. The countenance, now composed and serene, seemed to express the dignity of the spirit which lately dwelt in that lifeless form. Then those who paid the last sad honors to the benefactor of his country took an impressive, a farewell view.

On the ornament at the head of the coffin was inscribed "Surge ad Judicium," about the middle of the coffin, "Gloria Deo," and on the silver plate:

GENERAL
GEORGE WASHINGTON.
Departed this Life on the 14th December,
1799, Aet. 68.

Between 3 and 4 o'clock the sound of artillery from a vessel in the river firing minute guns awoke afresh our solemn sorrow—the corpse was moved—a band of music with mournful melody melting the soul into all the tenderness of woe.

The procession moved in the following order:

Cavalry and infantry guard, with arms reversed.
Music.
Clergy.
The General's horse, with his saddle, holsters and pistols.

Col. Simms.		Col. Gilpin.
Col. Ramsay.	CORPSE.	Col. Marstellu.
Col. Payne.		Col. Little.

Mourners.
Masonic brethren.
Citizens.

When the procession had arrived at the bottom of the elevated lawn on the banks of the Potomac, where the family vault is placed, the cavalry halted, the infantry marched toward the mound and formed their lines, the clergy, the Masonic brothers and the citizens descended to the vault, and the funeral services of the church were performed. The firing was repeated from the vessel in the river, and the sounds echoed from the woods and fields around.

Three general discharges by the infantry, the cavalry and eleven pieces of artillery, which lined the banks of the Potomac back of the vault, paid the last tribute to the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States and to the departed hero.

The sun was now setting. Alas! The son of glory was set forever. But no! The name of Washington, the American General and President, shall triumph over death! The unclouded brightness of his glory will illumine the future ages!

Soul Burying.

Whenever an Abchasian is drowned his friends search carefully for the body, but, if this is not found, they proceed to capture the soul of the deceased, a measure which then has become a matter of importance.

A goatskin bag is sprinkled with water and placed with its mouth, which is stretched open over a hoop, looking toward the river, near the place where the man is supposed to have been drowned. Two cords are stretched from the spot across the river, as a bridge on which the soul can come over. Vessels containing food and drink are set around the skin, and the friends of the deceased come and eat quietly, while a song is sung with instrumental accompaniments.

The soul, it is believed, is attracted by the ceremonies, comes over on the bridge that is laid for it, and goes into the trap. As soon as it has entered—that is, when the bag is inflated by the breeze—the opening is quietly closed, and the bag is taken up to the burial place, where a grave has already been prepared. The bag is held with the opening to the grave, the strings are untied, and the bag is squeezed into the grave, and the burial is afterward completed.

This rite is considered of equivalent value with the burial of the body, and the grave is treated with the same honor as if the body were really within it.—Popular Science Monthly.

"STAY EASY, YOUNG MAN."—A Bangor correspondent says: "A former Bangor young man, now farming in Central Minnesota, writes to his cousin here in Bangor to stay at home and be content with Maine. He says that he has, after a hard year's work, but two-thirds of a crop of wheat and less than half a crop of corn, the grain having been injured to that extent by frost, weevils, etc. There is very little lumbering going on this winter, and many men are idle. The inducements to immigrants, it will be inferred, are not very great. This state of affairs prevails over a large area of Minnesota. But it is just so in Maine; people are making a living here, as coal-

HEREDITARY TAINTS.

Some Revelations of Science Which Open the Eyes of the Layman.

To any one who has studied the laws of life, and especially those which relate to reproduction, an experience such as we are about to relate, will come with special force and interest. The transmission of certain mental traits of prominence, and of certain physical traits of equal prominence, are facts which all acknowledge, but which none can understand. The father may be distinguished—the son, an imbecile; or, the parent may be decrepit and unknown, and the child achieve the highest place possible to humanity. But through it all, there will be certain characteristics, which mark the individual as deseending from certain ancestors. Too often, indeed, these characteristics are infirmities, and often of a physical nature.

These facts were strikingly brought out during a conversation, which a representative of this paper recently had with Mrs. Carrie D. ... Swift, who is the wife of one of our prominent citizens. This lady related that she inherited from her parents certain tendencies, over which she had no control, and which were in the nature of blood difficulties, assuming the form of rheumatism. Her experience can best be described in her own words. To the writer she said:

"I felt the beginning of this hereditary taint many years ago, in vague pains, which seemed to come unaccountably and at uncalled for times. They were annoying, exhausting, and interfered not only with my duties, but also totally destroyed my happiness. At first, they would be only transient, appearing for a day or two, and then disappearing; then again they would come in such violent forms that it was impossible for me to lift a cup to my mouth. Afterward, my feet and hands swelled so that it was impossible for me to draw on my shoes or gloves without the greatest effort. I realized what the difficulty was, but seemed powerless to avert it. I finally became so bad that I was confined to the house and to my bed most of the time. My joints pained me continuously and my feet swelled to enormous proportions. Knowing that I inherited this tendency, I had about abandoned hope, when I began the use of a remedy, which was recommended to me by a friend as being specially efficient in cases of a similar kind. To my great gratitude, I found that it relieved me, restored my appetite, and I am able to say that now I have gained forty pounds in weight, feel perfectly well, and am in the best possible condition, owing, wholly, to Warner's Safe Rheumatic cure, which was the remedy I used."

"No one would ever suspect you had suffered so, Mrs. Swift to see you now," remarked the reporter.

"That is what all my friends say. Only yesterday, an acquaintance of mine, whom I had not seen for some time, hesitated, before speaking, and apologized by saying, 'Why, I really did not know you, you have changed so for the better since I last met you, how well you do look.'"

"Have you any objection to giving the name of the party who first mentioned this remedy to you?"

"Not the slightest. It was Mr. R. H. Furman, the photographer."

The newspaper man, after bidding Mrs. Swift good-bye, repaired to the photographic rooms of Mr. Furman, when the following conversation ensued:

"Have you been a sufferer from rheumatism, Mr. Furman?"

"Well, I should think I had."

"For how many years?"

"Twelve or fifteen."

"Did you try to cure it?"

"Yes, I tried everything, and at last, went to the Hot Springs of Arkansas, and nothing seemed to do me any good until I tried Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure."

"And it cured you, did it?"

"Yes, completely."

"And you can cordially recommend it?"

"Yes, indeed, more cordially than anything I have ever known of. It is simply a wonderful medicine. I believe that two-thirds of all cases, both acute and chronic, could be cured as I was cured by the use of this remedy. In fact, I know a number of persons who have been in the worst possible condition, and are now completely well, wholly through its use."

The statements above made are from sources, the authority of which cannot be questioned. They conclusively prove the value of the preparation named and show that even hereditary traits can be removed by the use of the proper means.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

The Miseries of a Mean Man.

Sometimes I wonder what a mean man thinks about when he goes to bed. When he turns down the light and lies down. When the darkness closes in about him and he is alone, and compelled to be honest with himself. And not a bright thought, not a generous impulse, not a manly impulse, not a word of blessing, not a grateful look comes to bless him again. Not a penny dropped into the outstretched palm of poverty, nor the balm of a loving word dropped into an aching heart; no sunbeam of encouragement cast upon a struggling life, the strong right hand of fellowship reached out to help some fallen man to his feet—when none of these things come to him as the "God bless you" of the departed day, how he must hate himself! How he must try to roll away from himself and sleep on the other side of the bed! When the only victory he can think of is some mean victory, in in which he has wronged a neighbor. No wonder he always sneers when he tries to smile. How pure and fair and good all the rest of the world must look to him, and how cheerless and dreary must his own path appear. Why, even one long isolated act of meanness is enough to scatter cracker crumbs in the bed of the average ordinary man, and what must be the feelings of a man whose life is given up to mean acts? When there is so much suffering and headache and misery in the world, anyhow, why should you add one pound of wickedness or sadness to the general burden? Don't be mean, my boy. Suffer injustice a thousand times rather than commit it once. R. J. BURDETTE.

Dishes Made of Paper.

The latest application of paper is the adoption of paper plates by some of the great restaurants and cafes in Berlin. The innovation was first introduced during the summer of last year by the adventurous landlord of a much-frequented open-air restaurant. Every customer who ordered bread and butter, rolls, cakes, buns or similar articles, had them served to him on a little paper plate, made of light papier mache, adorned with a pretty border in relief, and having, at the first glance, a great similarity to porcelain. Guests, waiters and hosts were all pleased with the novelty. It saved the waiters many a deduction from their wages on account of breakages, which the very deftest and cleverest can scarcely avoid when he handles hundreds of pieces of crockery during a single afternoon and evening. The paper plates were so cheap that the landlord did not care to assert his ownership over them and his customers were allowed to carry them away like the pretty serviettes of thin paper used in so many restaurants in Holland. There was also a considerable saving on the time lost and the chance of accident incurred in the cleansing of earthenware pottery. The success of the experiment has been so marked that the new species of plates is likely to be introduced into a great number of restaurants.—Paper World.

A DISCERN.—An old friend of Archbishop Whateley, who was with him at Oxford, went, after many years' absence, to visit him at the palace, in Dublin. On entering the grounds he espied an old man digging, despite a pitiless storm of sleet. "I shall venture to rebuke the aloe Archbishop for this," said the visitor to himself; "he should show more consideration for his servants." Presently, on going into the house, he found the diligent old digger was the Archbishop himself.

What combination of four letters in the English tongue awakens such sweet and tender recollections as "home." Some persons may answer "here," but they have no home.—Norristown Herald.

THE OLD GRANDMOTHER

Visiting the mother of her little grand-child as gradually and pitifully wasting away by the drainage upon its system from the effects of teething, sends the nurse at once to the druggist, procures a bottle of Dr. Bigger's Southern Remedy, administering it, soon restores rest to the mother and health to the little one. It will cure cramp colic, diarrhœa, dysentery and all bowel affections. This, with a bottle of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, combining the stimulating expectorant principle of the sweet gum with the demulcent healing one of the mullein for the cure of croup, whooping cough, colds and consumption, presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. Ask your druggist for them. Manufactured by Walter A. Taylor, proprietor Taylor's Premium Cologne, Atlanta, Ga.

The Professor a Unit.

Mr. C. H. Draper, of No. 223 Main street, Worcester, Mass., volunteers the following:

"Having occasion recently to use a remedy for kidney disease, I applied to my druggist, Mr. D. E. Williams, of Lincoln Square, this city, and requested him to furnish me the best kidney medicine that he knew of, and he handed me a bottle of Hunt's Remedy, stating that it was considered the best because he had sold many bottles of it to his customers in Worcester, and they all speak of it in the highest terms, and pronounce it always reliable. I took the bottle home and commenced taking it, and find that it does the work effectually; and I am pleased to recommend to all who have kidney or liver disease the use of Hunt's Remedy, the sure cure."

We All Say So.

Mr. George A. Burdett, No. 165 Front street, Worcester, Mass., has just sent us the following, directly to the point:

"Being afflicted with ailments to which all humanity is subject sooner or later, I read carefully the advertisement regarding the remarkable curative powers of Hunt's Remedy, and as it seemed to apply to my case exactly, I purchased a bottle of the medicine at Jannery's drug store in this city, and having used it with most beneficial results in my own case, my wife and son also commenced its use, and it has most decidedly improved their health, and we shall continue its use in our family under such favorable results."

Druggist's Evidence.

Mr. George W. Holcomb, druggist, 129 and 131 Congress street, Troy, N. Y., writes April 7, 1883:

"I am constantly selling Hunt's Remedy for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bladder, and urinary organs, to my trade and friends, and find that it gives general satisfaction to all who use it."

Is Your Blood Pure?

For impure blood the best medicine known, Scovill's Sarsaparilla, or Blood and Liver Syrup, may be implicitly relied on when everything else fails. Take it in the spring-time, especially for the impure secretions of the blood incident to that season of the year; and take it at all times for cancer, scrofula, liver complaints, weakness, boils, tumors, swellings, skin diseases, malaria, and the thousand ills that come from impure blood. To insure a cheerful disposition take Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup, which will restore the mind to its natural equilibrium.

"THE MINISTER WHO FAILS to interest his congregation and build up his church is generally accused of being a poor preacher, or of not studying hard enough. That is not always where the trouble comes from. Dyspepsia and liver disorders are responsible for many a dull sermon and many a vacant pulpit. When the Dominie's digestive apparatus is working wrong and his nerves are giving him pain, and his brain refuses to do its duty, it is almost impossible to make or to preach a good sermon. Give your suffering minister a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. You will see its effect on next Sunday's preaching. The Rev. Mr. Zehring, of Codorus, Pa., was paralyzed, and could not walk except with crutches, until Brown's Iron Bitters made a new man of him. The Rev. Mr. White, of Rock Hill, S. C., says: "It restored me to strength and vigor." Brown's Iron Bitters is not only for the minister, but for all people.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

A BILL introduced in the Kentucky House of Representatives, making pool-selling or betting on horse races punishable by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $500.

KANSAS CITY looms up second in winter hog packing. Chicago packers slaughtered and packed 2,025,000 head; Kansas City packed 425,000 head; Cincinnati, 270,000; St. Louis, 365,000 head; Indianapolis, 274,000 head; Milwaukee, 255,000 head and Louisville 141,000 head. The total shortness at the points named aggregates about 750,000. As the falling off in weight is large, it would seem that people must eat much less pork or prices must go up.

THE millionaires of New York are making ample provision for a dazzling show in the shade of costly monuments and mausoleums. In the woodlawn cemetery stands a model of the Pantheon. The lot on which it stands cost $60,000, and the structure is 37x39 feet, constructed of Westerly granite, surrounded by thirty Doric pillars. The bronze door cost $3,000. Inside are twelve catacombs, and through the stained glass windows a soft, mellow light plays over the interior. This is the elaborate temple which is to receive the dust of Jay Gould.

THE Legislature of Kansas, which has been called in session to consider the prevailing cattle plague, has already inaugurated steps for its suppression. The number of cattle now in the state is nearly two million head, which has been increased during the year 1883 nearly two hundred thousand head, valued at nine million dollars, with a total value of at least $60,000,000, there are at least $10,000,000 worth of fatted cattle ready for the market, and a large sum of money will be lost to the cattle growers if their cattle are quarantined against by other states and countries on account of the prevailing disease.

A POTTSTOWN, Pa., dispatch says: "Another colony of nailers, and employees of the Pottstown iron company have left here. These men have gone to Lynchburg, Va., where they have secured lucrative positions. Altogether some eighty skilled workmen have left here since the strike of the Pottstown Iron company's nailers was inaugurated last December." These movements of iron workers are significant. They point the way in which the iron business is traveling. Both the cotton business and the iron business are moving southward and westward. Dear coals and dear ores are driving iron makers away from Pennsylvania to the neighborhood of cheaper raw material.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from Salt Lake City, says that he never saw a Mormon wife with a smile on her face. The favorite wife in a family may look happy during her brief reign, but the others are in the depths of gloom. Bad pleeling reveals all the time. Even Brigham was always in trouble. At one time he had so much trouble with his wives that he threatened to divorce the entire lot, but this had no effect. Mormon wives feel their absolute degradation, and are wholly miserable. Nearly every Mormon girl seeks to marry a Gentile. All women who have seen anything of the horrors of polygamy desire to escape from its bondage.

THE president of the Eagle and Phenix company says that the southern mills now control the markets of the country in coarse cotton goods, and he predicts that the south will eventually control the cotton goods markets of the world, because she has as many advantages over New England as the latter has over old England. And what is true of cotton is true of iron, at least so far as this country is concerned. That the pig iron of the future will be made in the south is plain at a glance. The cost of making a ton of pig iron in Pennsylvania is thus stated by the American Manufacturer of Pittsburg:

One and one-half tons of ore, $8.50	$12 75
One and one-quarter tons coke, $2	2 50
Lime	85
Labor	1 50
Incidentals, repairs, taxes, etc.	1 00
Total	$18 60

The freest of calculations on a similar basis made a ton of iron in Alabama, Georgia or Tennessee cost as follows:

2 tons ore, $1	$2 00
1½ tons coke, $2	3 00
Lime	85
Labor	1 00
Incidentals	1 00
Total	$8 51

AT Fort Hamilton, New York, experiments have been tried the past week or two with a long brass tube invented by a Mr. Milford. This tube is a gun twenty-eight feet long with a two inch bore. The motor is compressed air, and it is proposed to experiment at 600 and 850 pounds pressure. The missiles are of light pine wood 31, 40 and 43 inches in length, and are headed with brass cases charged with dynamite. When in position the gun is mounted on a tripod, and has the appearance of a long, slender telescope. The small tube connects with a receiver, which in turn connects with a twenty-five horse power engine with a long base. The engine and forter are located in the fort. It is believed that the gun will prove a very effective weapon.

THE hot water cure has attracted its share of attention, but other popular cures fully as remarkable have enjoyed their run during the past few years. About ten years ago the blood cure started and for a time everyone troubled with weak lungs became consort, that is, in our Lycurgium. Then came the mud bath. People flocked to a certain spa in Germany to try the virtues of a sticky black mud, which was said to cure rheumatism. To bathe in it meant to simply be buried in it up to the chin for about two hours, and then to spend several hours in a tub of water getting rid of the remembrance. The blue grass cure will be remembered by all. The sea bath cure, the fish oil cure for consumptives, the simple diet cure, the celery cure for nervousness, and many others, started out as cures, but their best points have found their way into orthodox remedies.

THE Indian appropriation bill, as reported to the house appropriates $4,597,625, a decrease of $13,199,156 from the estimates. The appropriation for the support of schools is $1,100,000, an increase from last year of $138,000. The amount appropriated under the treaty stipulations for school buildings and the support of teachers, is also increased $5,000. An appropriation of $1,500 is made for the Indians in Alaska. New legislation, proposed by the committee, prohibits the war department from introducing liquor into the Indian reservations under any circumstances, and appropriates $5,000 for the detection and prosecution of persons attempting to do this. The census of the Indians is also provided for. The principal reductions made by the present bill, as compared with that of last year are in the amounts appropriated for rations and clothing. The committee taking the view that as the Indians became more and more civilized, they should depend less and less upon the government for support.

BUSCH, the Boswellian, biographer of Bismarck, has produced an interesting book. His description of the prince as a humorist is good. Most of Bismark's humor, however, is of the Rabelaisian kind and will not bear printing. His account of himself is pathetically amusing: "In point of health I am a mere drum, only skin and sound." Speaking of his interview with Louis Napoleon after Sedan, he said: "Sitting for an hour opposite the Emperor Napoleon, I felt for all the world like a young man at a ball who had engaged a young lady for a cotillion, but could not find a word to say to her, and wished some one would come and take her away." The natural good humor of the prince was sorely disturbed on many occasions by the late Herr Lasker. The impertinent interruptions of politicians like Lasker or Dr. Gueist generally drove him into an ungovernable passion. In one of these outbreaks he turned aside from the matter in hand to thunder out: "I tell you I'm no orator. I can not play with words so as to work on your feelings and thereby darken facts. I am a man of plain speech."

SUMMARY OF CONGRESS.

Senate.

Mr. Allison reported with amendments the deficiency appropriation bill received from the House.... A bill was reported favorably to provide for refunding excess of imposts on raw sugar.... The Senate debated, at length and without action, the bill to fix the salaries of United States District judges at $5,000, and the Blair education bill.

The bill increasing the salaries of United States district judges to $5,000, and Mr. Blair's bill to give government aid to education were again under consideration, but no action was taken upon them, except to reject some proposed amendments to the former.... The deficiency appropriation bill was passed.... A bill was introduced for the admission into the Union of the State of Tacoma, to be composed of the present Territory of Washington and a part of Idaho.

House.

On motion of Mr. Randall the House suspended the rules and passed a special deficiency bill appropriating $1,619,000.... The sum of $5,000 was appropriated from the contingent fund to enable the committee on naval affairs to proceed with the Jeannette investigation.... Among the bills introduced were these: By Mr. Hewitt—To suspend for two years the coinage of the silver dollar, and to make it an awful for the secretary of the treasury to print and issue treasury notes of the denomination of $1 and $2.... By Mr. Budd—Prohibiting the importation and sale of opium except as aqueous extracts for medicinal use; by Mr. Slocum—To provide for the enrollment of every able-bodied male citizen between eighteen and forty-two years of age in the militia, the enlistment to be for at least three years. The bill provides for drilling and equipping the militia and for instruction in rifle practice.

Bills were reported making an appropriation to construct revenue marine vessels for use in Alaskan waters, authorizing the construction of bridges over the Niagara and Hudson rivers, and reducing the number of naval cadets one-half.... The House passed the postoffice appropriation bill, with all the amendments adopted in committee of the whole except one. The amendment increasing by $400,000 the appropriation for the free delivery system was rejected.... Mr. Rogers reported a bill to prohibit the mailing of lottery circulars or of newspapers containing lottery advertisements.

Mr. Curtin, of the foreign affairs committee, submitted a report on the Lasker affair, saying that while the committee thought the resolutions of the House on the death of Herr Lasker should have been received and transmitted in the same spirit of cordiality and good will by which they were prompted, it refrains from expressing an opinion as to whether the course pursued by the authorities of the German empire in regard to them was or was not in accordance with the proprieties governing the internal regulations of the empire as a matter not within its province of consideration. Mr. Hiscock's recent resolutions were reported adversely, and new resolutions declaring that the resolutions of the House about Lasker's death were intended as a tribute of respect to the memory of an eminent foreign statesman who had died within the United States, and an expression of sympathy with the German people, for whom he had been an honorable representative, and that the House, having no official concern with the relations between the executive and legislative branches of the German government, does not deem it requisite to its dignity to criticise the manner of the reception of the resolutions or the circumstances which prevented their reaching their destination after they had been communicated through the proper channels to the German government, were offered. Mr. Curtin immediately demanded the previous question. Mr. Cox, of New York, moved to table the whole matter. That was the way, he said, to treat the German chancellor. Lost, 83 to 123. Mr. Ochiltree, of Texas, declared it was not becoming the dignity of this body to enter into explanations of the meaning of the original resolutions. After a eulogy upon Lasker, Mr. Ochiltree said some laughter, read an extract from a letter written by Mr. Lasker some days before his death, in which he refers to Mr. Ochiltree as having introduced him to the President, members of the cabinet, and foreign ministers. After further discussion Mr. Curtin's resolutions were adopted, as were also resolutions reciprocating the wishes of the liberal union of the members of the German parliament for the closer union of the two nations, and accepting the resolutions sent by the liberal union, and directing that they be turned on the journal.

Mr. Turner called up the Virginia contested election case of Garrison against Mayo, the report declaring the contestant, Garrison, entitled to a seat. Mr. Mayo, the sitting member, was heard in his own behalf. He admitted that if the act of the general assembly of Virginia requiring the prepayment of a capitation tax constitutional, the report of the committee was absolutely correct. But he believed that the act was unconstitutional and void; that if the votes of the persons who had been rejected for not having complied with that law were counted he would be found to be entitled to the seat. After some debate, political in character, the resolution declaring Garrison entitled to the seat was unanimously adopted, and that gentleman appeared and took the oath of office.

The House adopted a resolution, declaring all the charges made in Star route documents recently published, reflecting on Representatives Ellis, of Louisiana, in connection with the Star route frauds are untrue.... Mr. E. H. Funston was sworn in as the successor of the late Mr. D. C. Haskell, of the Second district of Kansas.... There was a long discussion over the bill to retire William H. Averill with the rank and pay of colonel, which was finally passed.

A WEEK'S NEWS.

Eastern and Middle States.

THE strike at the Montour Iron and Steel mill, Danville, Penn., inaugurated January 1, has assumed serious proportions. Five hundred men are out of employment and destitution prevails in a large number of families. The wife of one of the laboring men fell sick, and failing to get proper nourishment, died in absolute penury.

Two three-year-old Holstein heifers, Jamaica and Etelka, owned by John Mantell, a farmer near Newburg, N. Y., have shown themselves the greatest milk producers in the world. Jamaica recently produced 119½ pounds of milk in one day, and Etelka 101 pounds. During thirty-one days the former gave 6,695¾ pounds, and the latter 5,486 pounds ten ounces, beating all records to date. The owner has been offered $20,000 for Jamaica and her calf, or $10,000 for the calf only, but declined both offers.

H. M. RICHMOND, a young lawyer of Meadville, Penn., son of a prominent lawyer of that city, shot himself through the heart in a New York hotel. He had long suffered severely from dyspepsia.

A LATROBE (Penn.) dispatch says that a German family—Mr. Shulthers, wife and two brothers, at the Loyalhanna coal mine—have been affected with trichinosis, as a result of eating fresh pork, raw, with no condiment but a little salt. They had been reduced to great poverty by the recent floods. The women died, and was buried, and her husband's death was hourly expected. The two brothers were also reported as gradually getting worse.

THE Rhode Island Democratic State convention at Providence was the most exciting political gathering held in that State for many years. George H. Corliss, Republican, and nominee of the Independent Republicans for governor, was put in nomination, and received forty-four votes upon the first ballot, to twenty six for Amasa Sprague and twenty-three for Thomas W. Segar. Mr. Corliss was thereupon made the nominee for governor, but declined the nomination upon the score of ill health. Segar was then nominated for governor and Sprague for lieutenant-governor, together with the remainder of the State ticket. Eight delegates to the Chicago national convention were also elected.

A BILL making it mandatory, instead of optional, with the mayors of cities to enforce the civil service reform law passed the New York assembly by 84 yeas to 32 nays.

MADAME ANNA BISHOP, the once famous singer, died a few days since in New York of apoplexy. She was born in London in 1814, and had a long and remarkable professional career, appearing in either concert or opera in nearly every country in the world and singing in a dozen different languages.

AT the Rhode Island Republican State convention, held in Providence, all the present State officers, from governor down, were renominated, and a resolution was adopted congratulating United States Senator Anthony upon his return to health.

PROMINENT New York German business men are raising a fund of $100,000 for ex-Senator and ex-Secretary Carl Schurz.

PETER EDWARDS, seventy-five years old, a well-to-do farmer of Albany county, N. Y., but addicted to opium eating, killed his aged wife with a hammer and then made an unsuccessful attempt to cut his own throat.

CHARLES LANGHEIMER, better known as "Dickens' Dutchman," died a few days ago in the Eastern penitentiary, Philadelphia, where he had spent the better part of his life. He was eighty-two years old and was buried in Potter's Field. He was first sentenced to the penitentiary in 1840 and was released from time to time only to be returned for thefts. His notoriety was gained by Dickens' reference to him in the American Notes, in a chapter describing the system of solitary confinement, and speaking of Langheimer in pathetic terms. Langheimer, however, seems only passed through all the miseries pathetically pictured by Dickens and lived to hear of the novelist's death.

THIS country is to have an invasion of white elephants, the first of his kind arriving in New York a few days since on an ocean steamer. His color is described as "a light gray, a shade lighter, perhaps, than cigar ashes."

AT a meeting of New England milk producers in Boston they voted that the State board of health ought to regulate the sale of milk to insure purity, and arranged with the city contractors to deliver milk to the latter for thirty-four cents a can of eight and a half quarts.

AS a result of the recent investigation by a committee of the New York assembly, the New York city grand jury have indicted Sheriff Davidson and several minor officials for corrupt action in office.

South and West.

A CALL has been issued for a national convention of Anti-Monopolists, to be held in Chicago on May 14, to nominate a presidential ticket. The quota of representation will be four delegates from each congressional district, four from each Territory and four from the District of Columbia.

LATER reports put the number of lives lost by the explosion in the Pocahontas (Va.) mines at 112.

SEVERAL large plantations were inundated by a break in the levee on the Mississippi at Baton Rouge, La.

WHILE a colored man and his wife were at work in a field not far from McBean, Ga., their four children were murdered.

A DISPUTE between three men playing cards near Hutchinson, Tenn., ended by one of the players shooting his companions dead.

JOSEPH F. SANDERS, bookkeeper for a St. Louis wholesale grocer, stole $16,000 of his employer's money and spent it in speculation.

AN affecting scene occurred the other day at a [illegible], Chicago. Mrs. Georgiana [illegible], widow, remained on her knees in the attitude of prayer, while the rest of the worshipers slowly left the hall. Examination showed that Mrs. Miller was dead.

FIVE miners in Colorado were killed by a snow-slide the first days.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH, coadjutor bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, died at Columbus, Miss., after a protracted illness.

THE Virginia senate before final adjournment authorized the transmission to the president of the United States Senate of a copy of the resolution recently adopted by the Senator Johnson to resign.

BY the explosion of an oil still in Cleveland, Ohio, three employes were surrounded by escaping oil, which had caught fire, and were burned to death in sight of a helpless crowd.

A TRAIN of forty cars, handsomely decorated and loaded with corn valued at $11,000, has been sent to the Ohio flood sufferers by the people of Sedgwick county, Kan., in grateful remembrance of charity extended when they were suffering from the grasshopper plague in 1874.

MRS. JOHN SEITZ, [illegible] county, Ga., filled a pot [illegible] on the fire and when the water began to boil she plunged her head into it and died.

A PHILADELPHIA [illegible] three children were instantly killed by the explosion of the boiler attached to a new mill at Newport, Ark.

TWO brothers—Rudolph and Champ Fitzgarrel—were hanged at Columbia, Ky., for the murder of Miller Breeden last August. All three men were farm hands, and the murderers made away with their victim because he was bitter liked by the employer than they.

Washington.

THE Senate confirmed the nominations of Joseph E. Irish, of Wisconsin, to be consul of the United States at Cognac; Leonard B. Wales, of Delaware, to be United States district judge for the District of Delaware; James N. Kerns, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

BOTH the Senate and House having accepted the conference report on the military academy appropriation bill, it went to the President.

MR. BLISS, late counsel for the government, appeared before the Springer committee of investigation and explained his connection with the star route prosecutions. He stated that in his opinion the Dorsey case was the strongest of all with which to go before a jury.

THE number of postoffices in the United States on March 20 was 58,993, an increase of 1,135 in less than nine months. If the same rate of increase is maintained during the remainder of the fiscal year it is estimated that the postoffices will number 60,000 on July 1 next.

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMAN thinks Congress will be unable to adjourn before August.

THE President sent the following nomination to the Senate: Sumner Howard, of Michigan, to be chief justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Arizona; Case Broderick, of Kansas, associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Idaho; Jacob B. Blair, of Wyoming, associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Wyoming.

SENATOR HAWLEY having introduced a bill in the Senate authorizing the secretary of the navy to offer a reward of $25,000 for the rescue or discovery of the Greely expedition in the Arctic regions, Secretaries Chandler and Lincoln wrote to the President opposing any such action.

SECRETARY CHANDLER has written to Mr. S. S. Cox, chairman of the committee on naval affairs, opposing the recent resolution of the House providing for another investigation of the Jeannette expedition. He says the allegations made against Lieutenant DeLong, Engineer Melville, the members of the court of inquiry, and the navy department, in behalf of Jerome J. Collins, meteorologist of the expedition, are untrue and unjust, and objects to reopening the inquiry into what, he says, the court of inquiry correctly termed "trivial difficulties, such as occur on shipboard even under the most favorable circumstances."

THE Indian appropriation bill as agreed upon by the House appropriation committee, appropriates $5,347,653, a decrease of $13,002 from the appropriation of last year and $3,199,156 from the estimates.

Foreign.

HENRY BROWN, a colored man, died a few days ago in Niagara, Ontario, at the alleged age of 131 years. He claimed to remember George Washington, and said that on one occasion he drove that gentleman from his master's plantation to Washington.

ADMIRAL HEWITT issued a proclamation offering a reward of £2,000 for the head of Osman Digna, the rebel chief in the Soudan; but the English war secretary ordered the proclamation to be withdrawn. Osman Digna was reported to be still defiant, and returned with 2,000 followers to his former encampment. He exhorted the people to a religious war, promised them success in a third battle, and used stern measures toward his disaffected followers.

THE alleged kidnapping of an Indian from British Columbia, and his summary execution by a party of masked men from the adjacent United States territory, has been the subject of indignant comment in the Dominion parliament.

MADAME ANNA BISHOP.

The Long and Remarkable Career of a Once Famous Singer.

Madame Anna Bishop, who died a few days ago in New York of apoplexy, in her seventieth year, was once famous in the world of song, and had a most eventful career. In the course of her long professional life, she appeared as either concert or opera in almost every country in the world. It is believed that, from first to last, Madame Bishop sang before a greater number of people than any other singer who ever lived. She has sung in from ten to fifteen different languages on one occasion, while in Moscow, successfully taking the part of Alice, in "Robert le Diable, in the Russian language. Calcutta and India are among the countries in which she has given concerts, and in 1873 she was accorded the unusual privilege of singing in the tabernacle in Salt Lake city, which was filled by an immense audience.

In 1866, while on the voyage from Honolulu to Hong Kong, she and her party were shipwrecked on a barren coral island, where they remained for twenty-one days. In the wreck they lost all their personal effects. Finally they set out in a boat twenty-two feet long for one of the Ladrone islands, 1,400 miles distant, and accomplished the journey in thirteen days. They had but a scanty supply of food and water, which was exhausted before they reached their journey's end. While they were almost starving, a large fish leaped from the water and fell into the boat. There were twenty-two persons in the party, and the fish was cut into twenty-two pieces, which were eaten raw. Madame Bishop has referred to her share on that occasion as one of the most delicious tastings meals she ever ate.

She started on her last tour around the world in 1873. Since its completion she has lived for most of the time in New York, with her husband, Mr. Martin Schultz, whom she married in 1859, a few years after the death of her first husband. Her last appearance in public was at a concert in New York about a year ago. Her voice was wonderfully well preserved in her latter years, and in her personal appearance and manners she was also remarkably youthful. Her conversation was highly entertaining, being enriched by a fund of curious anecdote, although she was singularly modest in speaking of her own artistic triumphs.

BOGUS BUTTER.

Report of a New York State Senate Committee.

Alarming Wholesale Adulterations of Food Discovered.

The New York State senate committee which has been investigating adulterations of food, says in its report that it has discovered alarming wholesale adulterations, which are dangerous to the consumer and which are depreciating property in the rural districts. The adulteration of butter by tallow oil, bone oil, and lard oil was found in almost every town and city in the State and in an amount which equals half the production of the natural article. The imitation is so disguised that often it can only be detected by chemical analysis. Out of thirty samples of alleged butter purchased by the committee in New York only ten were genuine.

No labels to distinguish the pure from the bogus butter are displayed, as required by the existing law. Bogus butter is largely purchased by saloons, boarding houses, and second-class hotels. The poorer qualities of bogus butter sell for from twenty cents to thirty cents to laboring men, and the better grades at forty or forty five cents. The cost of manufacture ranges from twelve to eighteen cents, the average being four teen cents. The manufacture in New York State is chiefly carried on in New York and Brooklyn, several concerns manufacturing over 3,000,000 pounds each out of fat brought from the West, from France, and from Italy. The bulk of the bogus butter is manufactured in the West and sold in New York to the detriment of the State's dairy interests. Many dairy farmers have been driven out of business in consequence. The loss to the State is estimated at from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 yearly. The committee estimates that 40,000,000 pounds of the product are sold annually in the State, and the illegitimate business is breaking our export butter trade. The effect of the deception in the trade is deleterious to business morals. Butterine can be sold at eighteen cents less than natural butter.

The committee quotes extensively from the evidence obtained to show the evil moral, commercial and sanitary effects of adulterations. The use of nitric and sulphuric acids in deodorizing adulterated butter is particularly condemned. The committee recommends the total prohibition, after a given time, of the manufacture and sale of all butter adulterations. The living cow, the committee asserts, cannot compete with the dead hog. The committee also finds that 200,000 out of the 500,000 quarts of milk furnished to New York daily in 1883 were water or skim milk. The committee recommends the appointment of a State inspector of milk, and also recommends that the officials to be chosen to enforce anti-adulteration laws be selected from and represent dairy interests.

Accompanying the report was a bill by the committee. It prohibits under penalty of $200 fine, or six months' imprisonment, the sale of adulterated milk, the keeping of cows for the production of milk in an unhealthy condition, and the diluting of milk with water. It provides that every manufacturer of butter shall brand his name and the weight of the butter on the package. Cans for the sale of milk shall be stamped with the name of the county where the milk is produced, unless sold exclusively in the county. A penalty of from $500 to $1,000 and imprisonment for one year is imposed on the sale or manufacture of bogus butter or cheese. The State Dairymen's association is appointed a commission to enforce the provisions of the bill, and $30,000 is appropriated for the purpose.

SOME BIG THINGS.

AN Iowa man drank three quarts of cider in three minutes.

A TEN-FOOT alligator was captured recently near Waxahatchie, Texas.

THE government envelope factory at Hartford, Conn., uses a ton of gum a week.

A PARTY of Baton Rouge, La., bird hunters recently killed 1,400 robins with sticks.

A SEA DOG was killed on the beach near Long Branch, N. J., not long ago. It weighed 143 pounds.

WHILE trapping near Bridgman, Mich., William Williams caught an eagle that measured nine feet.

AN owl measuring four feet and two inches from tip to tip was recently captured in Franklin county, Ga.

MISSISSIPPIANS feel very proud of their State library in the capitol at Jackson. It comprises 38,000 volumes.

A COW HORN four feet eleven inches long and eighteen inches in diameter at the base is on exhibition at Monticello, Fla.

ROBINS are found in flocks of 10,000 in the neighborhood of Powhatan, Va. A man recently killed 480 of the birds.

THE highest rate of postage from this country is to Patagonia and the island of St. Helena—fifty-four cents an ounce.

A STRANGE fish was recently captured off Block Island, Newport. It was four feet long, and it had a mouth ten inches wide. It weighs 200 pounds.

A LADY sixty years old, residing in Rochester, N. Y., skated from that city to Brockport, twenty miles, in an hour and twenty-five minutes.

NEW ORLEANS recently had a baby show, with ninety-nine infants on exhibition. The first prize was won by a seven months old baby that weighed thirty-one pounds.

It lies in the lobby of the [illegible] floor at the four flights of stairs [illegible] and is the various stories, and accommodates the government employes and others.

J. B. KNOX, of Stokes county, N. C., went there from Pittsburgh, Pa., four years ago. In that time six children have been added to his family. He has been married to the same wife eighteen years, and has twenty-three children living. Seventeen of them are boys and six girls. His wife is forty-six and he forty-eight.

A Suggestion.

Charles Delmonico, thirty years ago, when a mere lad, suggested to his uncle that men who patronized a restaurant of the kind the firm had just opened, were not the men to dun, and at his request, the rule was established, never, under any circumstances, to present a bill or ask the payment of a check, until such action was requested by the debtor.

"Why isn't that the best place to go and board when a man visits New York?" asks the editor of a Western paper. "A place where they don't present bills till a boarder asks for them would seem to fill a want long felt."

COMMERCE.—A Chicago company are building machines for consolidating various waste products into compact blocks for use as fuel. Sawdust, shavings, etc., are pressed into moulds so that 40 to 200 cubic feet of the loose material are compacted into less than 40 cubic feet of blocks of convenient size and form to be used as fuel.

LAW WASTE.—Hon. William L. Bowditch, in a recent speech at a Women suffrage meeting, said that the average pay of working women in Boston was $284 a year, which, after subtracting the expenditure of life, left a surplus of all

A JAPANESE young man in New York wants to open a Japanese theatre there. He says he can obtain plenty of talent, but must have capital.

GAYARRE, the Spanish tenor, continues to be the wonder of Paris, France. It is said that he can hold a note twenty-five or even twenty-six seconds.

DENMAN THOMPSON has been playing Uncle Josh in "Joshua Whitcomb" for over five years and he says he has made more money this season than ever before.

R. M. FIELD, manager of the Boston museum, will manage Edwin Booth next season. Mr. Booth will play principally in Boston, as he dislikes to travel.

EMMA ABBOTT'S San Francisco engagement was the largest ever played in that city by any attraction. Her receipts were more than $50,000 in four weeks.

NO actor has ever been entertained in Washington in such a distinguished manner as Mr. Henry Irving. This is as great a tribute to his genius as to his social qualities.

ANOTHER American prima donna has appeared in Paris, named Miss Ader. She made her debut at the Opera Comique, in Gounod's "Mireille." Her success was encouraging.

OLE BULL'S twelve-year-old daughter Olea is said to inherit a good deal of her father's musical ability. Her mother will take her to Norway this summer, and the child will give concerts in the chief towns of that country.

MR. MAURICE GRAU has retired from the position of acting manager of Abbey's opera company. He has left for Havana to join his opera bouffe company, which includes Aimee and Angela. Next season Mr. Grau will have Theo as his star.

ANNA BISHOP, who died recently in New York, was in her time a remarkable artist. Although not gifted with a phenomenal voice, she acquired the art of vocalism to a degree that made her honored among musicians. She was a most persistent traveler, and had sung in every clime on earth. She was shipwrecked several times, and on one occasion got up a concert on a barren island.

Deacon Podson's Wooing.

"How long is it since Sister Podson passed away?" asked Becky, with quivering tenderness of tone.

"It's nigh on sixteen year now," replied the deacon, with a heavy sigh, which was echoed by Aunt Becky.

"Sister Podson was such a dear good soul," said Aunt Becky, softly, "it seemed a pity we couldn't a'kept her always. But God's will be done."

"Yes, God's will be done," repeated Deacon Podson, with another deep-drawn sigh.

"She was so lovin'-like, and good!" said the dear old woman, with a shade of that jealousy which shrivels the heartless compliments of younger women under such conditions.

"Yes, Sister Boggs, she was——"

"Call me Becky, Deacon Podson."

"An' you'll call me Josh."

"Yes, J—J—Joshua," and I know Aunt Becky put her gingham apron up to her face. Ten years of courtship and I doubt not this was the first time she had addressed him by his Christian name. I thought surely the deacon would see his chance and throw both arms around her neck, fold her to his big breast and say: "My Becky, my own, own Becky." That is about what I should have done, but Deacon Podson is older than I, and has passed the gushing time of life.

"I hev been a-thinkin' about somethin' a big, long time, Sister Bo—that is, B—Becky. I've been a-thinkin' that—"

What on earth could the man be waiting for? Had he fainted? Had his tongue been paralyzed by the burden thrown upon it? I strained my ear, but could catch no sound. Long, long, oh, how provokingly long the silence dragged! At last I heard a kiss—yes, I could not be mistaken, it must have been a kiss—and then a few soft sobs and that told of tears of joy in Aunt Becky's eyes. Had their souls read each other in the darkness, and flowed together in eloquent silence as their cheeks lay close against each other? It must have been so, for after Deacon Podson had gone away, Aunt Becky stood and looked out of the window a long time; and when she turned back and lighted the lamp to put Bobby to bed there were tears in her eyes and a happy smile on her lips that plainly said a blessing from the god of love had fallen on her heart.—BEN WILDE.

A Tale of the Cold Snap.

"When the water wouldn't run, you know," he said, "I tinkered around the sub-basement until I caught the rheumatism. The plumber couldn't, or didn't, come, and the next day there was incidentally some confusion. I got my temper up finally, and conducted to carry water from a neighbor's and fill the bath-tub upstairs. This was not a pleasant job, as it hurt my stiff knee and my dignity, but I stuck to it, and made several trips. On every trip I was much encouraged by the sympathetic attitude of my little three-year-old boy. He labored upstairs after me every time, and on my return trotted down at my heels, waiting for me at the basement door. On my last trip the little fellow seemed taken with a new idea, and remained upstairs. When I toiled up with my last bucketful I was thunderstruck at the appearance of the bath-tub. The stopper had been pulled out, and the last of the water was disappearing with a swish. My sympathetic three-year-old had tried an experiment on his own hook, and had made all my labor in vain. I looked above for the little culprit, and found him peeping out of the hall bedroom to see how I would take it. I was at the end of my string, and I couldn't bear to say a word. I came down street, leaving the house without explanation, and I naturally felt a little discouraged."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

HIS PAPA'S RELIGION.

"So, my little boy, you would like to join our Sunday-school, would you?" said the superintendent, kindly.

"Yes, sir," replied the little boy.

"What is your name, did you say?"

"Oh, yes, you are the son of Mr. Simpson. Let me see, is your papa a Presbyterian or an Episcopalian?"

"No, sir; he isn't either; he's a newspaper man."

OVER THE GARDEN WALL.

An exceedingly bright and pretty little East Third street girl received a New Year's card from a small admirer, and it created more or less comment in the family.

"Why, child, I didn't know you knew him," said the mother.

"Oh, yes," mamma," she replied, with a coquettish smile; "I have met him."

"Indeed? How did it happen?"

"Well, you see, we first became acquainted by throwing mud at each other over the alley fence, and then several days afterward Uncle Frank presented him, and since then we have been quite good friends indeed."—Merchant Traveler.

ESTIMATING WEALTH.

"Ma, you know those Newcomers across the way that we have all been afraid to call on because their furniture arrived at night, and we couldn't tell whether it was nice or not?"

"Yes, and they always keep the curtains so near closed that not a soul has been able to get a glimpse of the rooms."

"None of the neighbors have called on them yet, have they?"

"No."

"Well, we better go over, because if we keep on snubbing them they may turn around and snub us."

"But why do you think so?"

"Their servant girl was in Cash & Co.'s tea store this morning. She bought a pound of tea, and when the clerk handed her a glorious chromo, she turned up her nose at it."

MUCH TO BE THANKFUL FOR.

"Yes, wife, we have much to be thankful for. Let us not complain."

"Oh, you provoking man. No matter how miserably we are situated, you always lay back and say, 'We have much to be thankful for;' just as if that put coal in the stove or food in the pot."

"But think of the thousands who have not the blessings we enjoy."

"Blessings! Are you crazy? There is not a stick of wood or a piece of coal in the house, and the thermometer is below zero. There is not so much as a crumb in the cupboard. The windows are broken, and we have not a blanket left. Now, where do you find anything to be thankful for?"

"Think of the thousands, nay millions, in India and Africa, blistered by a broiling sun, and suffering night and day for what we have in such abundance."

"Suffering for what, pray?"

"Ice!"—*The Call.

Alfred Chadwick yoked his wife to a plough with a steer, for which Judge Jennison of Detroit, gave her a divorce. He insisted that he only followed the general usage among the market gardeners of western Canada.

Now that the Sherman investigating committee will set up on the Danville riot for the purpose of looking into the Cincinnati trouble, we may expect to hear a howl in unison from the good Deacon Richard and Murat the Great. Perhaps when these two worthies feel Uncle Sam treading upon their own corns they may then realize what a very weighty chap the old man is

The battle of Cincinnati is now a thing of the past. About thirty killed and a hundred or more wounded was the result of the collision between the mob and the militia. This will be enough to insure the hanging of some of the twenty-eight murderers now confined in the Cincinnati jail, it is to be hoped. But the lives of every one of these twenty-eight murderers would not compensate for one of the lives of good citizens lost to the city, by being shot down while looking on at the maddened mob.

The Philadelphia Times takes the following view of Alabama politics of the republican sort: "The story told by Henry Booth, late Postoffice inspector in Alabama, is another indictment of President Arthur. It shows him to be under the influence of the Alabama ring of plunderers headed by George Turner and Paul Strobach, and sustained at Washington by Secretary Chandler. Good men in the public service have been sacrificed by President Arthur to enable dishonest men to continue in office and get a solid Alabama delegation for Arthur's nomination."

The widow of Salmi Morse is keeping a candy store in San Francisco for school children. According to her he was never nearer the Holy Land than Smyrna, where he acted as clerk for her father, and wooed and won her. All the time he claimed to have been in a monastery or in Jerusalem getting inspiration for the Passion, he was running a ranch in California. As for the Passion itself, he got the idea from an article in an Edinburgh magazine which she gave him to read when he made a trip to San Domingo. His stories about service in the English army, acquaintanceship and collaboration with Dickens, and so on, she denounces as lies.

Nottingham (formerly Calera) is just now on a substantial boom. The Nottingham Iron Works, recently inaugurated, began operations on Thursday last, under the Superintendency of Mr. E. R. Jones, an experienced iron manufacturer. While on a recent visit to the place we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Jones and found him a most affable and agreeable gentleman, though just now one half of his head is full of business and the other half full of Nottingham and her great boom. Mr. Thos. Francis is the foreman of the works, and with such men as managers, with plenty of capital behind them and a fine field before them, the Nottingham Iron Works are destined to be one of the great enterprises of the mineral district. The world must needs now bid Calera a long farewell, but says "Gluck auf to Nottingham."

The handsomest girl in Sylvania county, Ga., became engaged, nearly forty years ago, to John Gross, the son of a wealthy planter. Shortly after the engagement was announced, Gross went to New Orleans on business, forgot his lady love, settled in Texas, and did not return home until two years later. Though the lady had not heard a word from him in all that time, she was still true. They renewed the engagement, then quarrelled, and Gross went off again. He remained away until a few days ago, when he returned to the old homestead to celebrate his sixtieth birthday. He found his fiance still waiting, and promptly married her. She had refused many offers of marriage during his absence. Three men whom she had refused became respectively a Congressman, a Senator, and a Governor.

On the Big Riot.

The Raleigh News says:

"We should learn some things from the Cincinnati riot—first that jurors should find according to the law and evidence; but secondly, if they do not, the people must not resort to acts of violence. Certainly the law must be vindicated, but riots, and lynching, and mobs, do not vindicate the law; they are themselves violations of the law. Good citizens must not be misled into committing such acts of violence. The remedy for the evil is not to be found in lawlessness, but in a sound, wholesome public opinion demanding the enforcement of the law at the hands of the juries. Speedy trials, prompt punishment—let that be the tone of public sentiment."

Says the same paper very pertinently:

"Senator Sherman, it seems, can now have a Senatorial examination of a riot nearer his home than the Danville affair. To be sure all disturbances are to be greatly regretted, and they are not to be made the subjects of jest, but it is not inappropriate to call the attention of Senator Sherman to the fact that the Cincinnati people have human nature as well as the people of Danville."

The Cincinnati Riot—The Morrison Bill.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Mr. Nicholl's joint resolution for the investigation of the Cincinnati riots will probably be introduced in the senate to-morrow. The resolution describes the terrible condition of affairs in Cincinnati and characterizes the mob as a kuklux organization, which has outraged law and order and violated the right of a citizen to trial by jury. A full investigation of the Sherman-Danville committee is provided for in the resolution. To-night I hear that Mr. Cabell, of Virginia, will to-morrow offer an exact copy of Sherman's investigation resolution, except that Cincinnati will be inserted instead of Danville. This unfortunate affair has shown that the investigations of the alleged southern outrages are mere political mills.

Mr. Morrison said to-day it might be two or three weeks before the tariff bill is offered to the house. He wants to give time to pass some appropriation bills, so as to keep the senate busy while the house is on the tariff. The plan is to call the previous question on the bill about the first of May. Then amendments will begin, and they will take much more time than the general discussion. How far Mr. Randall and his friends will antagonize the consideration of the bill is uncertain, but the prospect of passing any tariff bill does not brighten.

Birmingham Enterprise.

From the Age.]

A telegram from Dr. H. M. Caldwell to the Age announces the final settlement in Louisville yesterday afternoon, of the details for the building of the big hotel and passenger depot, thus sustaining the forecast in yesterday morning's Age. The modest conclusion of the telegram, after stating the particulars, is that the building will be "creditable alike to the proprietors and the Magic City." As stated in yesterday's Age, the capital stock of the company will be $225,000 and the Louisville & Nashville railroad company the principal stockholder. Dr. Caldwell signed for $50,000 of stock for the Elyton Land Company. Mr. Walters of Louisville, is the architect who planned the buildings. It was he who was in Birmingham last fall with plans for the hotel, and the new plans are based upon those. Changes have been made wherever the canvass of the matter for the last six months has suggested their expediency. The building will be amply adequate in capacity and appointments to their purpose, and, architecturally, will be among the handsomest and most striking structures in the South. In the hotel there will be 142 sleeping rooms, besides parlors, dining room and every modern requirement in the way of office, bar room, billiard room, etc. On the ground floor there will be a number of fine stores 25 by 60 feet. Beauty and convenience are not more to be consulted than safety. The walls between the stores will be carried to the roof as fire walls and will extend the whole depth of the building. Pressed brick will be the principal material, but stone and terra cotta will also be liberally used.

How is it that we do not read of Field Marshal Halstead leading any of the legions against the mob? It would seem that a warrior who has fought as many brilliant battles on paper and slain as many Southern negroes with his red left hand as he has, could have routed even a Cincinnati mob with a force hardly larger than a corporal's guard.

Nearly every county in the State has more candidates announced than Chilton. How is this for Chilton, fortunate or unfortunate?

The boys are of good families, and no other reason can be assigned for their conduct than a boyish freak of running away from home.

The past two weeks of dry weather has enabled the farmers to push their work rapidly. They are still behind, and must keep on their work while the weather favors them.

We regret the small number of Legislative aspirants. Our debating society is hard at work trying to develop some political timber. Send the boys down here We'll drill them in mathematics, and give them a chance to exercise their lungs.

In the old days no woman was allowed to desecrate the monastery at San Augustin, Mexico, by so much as putting her foot within its walls. A noble lady of Spain, wife of the reigning viceroy, was bent on visiting it. Nothing could stop her, and in she came. But she found only empty cloisters, for each virtuous monk locked himself securely in his cell, and afterward every stone in the floor which her sacrilegious feet had touched was carefully replaced by new ones fresh from the mountain top before the pollution of her presence was considered removed. But times are sadly changed, and the house has been turned into a common hostelry.

A Compromise.

Marion Democrat.]

As a compromise between all shades of tariff reform, and to mellow down all the asperities of brother Democrats let us name a winning ticket for 1884: Randall for President, and Carlisle for Vice-President. Pennsylvania as the fulcrum, Kentucky as the lever, and we'll turn the country over from Main to Texas.

A large number of the citizens of Cincinnati seems to have reached the conclusion that a jury, as defined in the old play, "is a body of men brought together for the purpose of determining which side of a case has the smartest lawyer."

Call for a County Convention.

The voters of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county are requested to meet at the places of voting in their respective beats on Saturday, the 10th day of May next, to select by ballot delegates to a county convention to be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884.

The business of said convention will be to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before it.

The representation in said county convention, fixed upon the basis of the Gubernatorial vote of 1878, will entitle each beat to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

Beat 1—Mims X Roads	2
Beat 2—Providence and Jemison	6
Beat 3—Benson and Macedonia	4
Beat 4—Clanton	12
Beat 5—Verbena and Coopers	10
Beat 6—Kinchcon	1
Beat 7—Maplesville	5
Beat 8—Dixie	5

The following named persons have been appointed as beat committees in their respective beats, to-wit:

Beat 1—James A. Mullins, W. H. Marcus, D. H. Mullins.

Beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer, Chas. H. Smith, R. A. Miears.

Beat 3—J. L. Williams, David White, Seaborn Jones.

Beat 4—W. E. Stewart, J. M. Bivings, J. R. Jones.

Beat 5—G. L. Zimmerman, W. R. Scott, L. Moore.

Beat 6—J. A. Hathcock, J. R. Kemp, W. H. Mills.

Beat 7—Noah W. Foshee, W. S. Lawrence, W. J. Atchinson.

Beat 8—J. W. Broadhead, Thomas Parnell, Samuel Keyser.

The beat committees are charged with conducting the elections for delegates to the county convention.

It is suggested that in beats having two places of voting elections be held at each box for one-half the delegates allowed that beat.

It is earnestly requested that the beat committees exert themselves to get the entire vote of the party to attend the beat elections and express their wishes regarding the question of nominating candidates for the House of Representatives and for county offices.

By order of the committee.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD
WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all these secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Failing of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mr. A. K. Evans' new residence is being beautified with a coat of paint.

Sheriff Garner has purchased the corner store house from Gullahorn & Bro.

Mr. E. H. Lowe's new saw mill is only one and three quarter miles from Clanton, and not three miles as was stated last week.

We return thanks to two new correspondents for interesting locals this week. Always glad to hear from you gentlemen.

Receiver H. A. Wilson was in Clanton on Tuesday last. He has purchased a place at Lomax and will take his family there for the Summer.

A call for a county convention is published this week in accordance with the expressed will of the Democrats of Chilton in mass meeting assembled.

The new residence of Mr. James Bell, of the firm of O. R. Bell & Son, is going up. It will have a beautiful site and be an ornament to the village.

The brightest day of the year was Tuesday, when the Spring time reached us in all its glory. And now "the young man's thought's doth turn to love,"—so it is said.

WANTED—A copy of the CHILTON VIEW of date April 3d, to complete our file. Any one having such copy of this paper will confer an especial favor by turning it over to us.

A negro by the name of Richard Johnson, was arrested near Jemison on Friday, charged with assault and battery upon his wife. He was brought to Clanton and lodged in jail. He is an ex-convict.

Mr. B. H. Chesnut left on Tuesday morning for North Alabama. He will visit relatives in Calhoun and St. Clair counties. He goes in hopes of recuperating his health by the change, and we hope that he will return much improved.

Unless you are in favor of sitting on a jury with a fragrant son of Ham at each elbow, you had better attend your best meeting and send Democrats as delegates to your county convention. The promises made by Republican leaders to Sambo could be realized if one half the Democrats sit down and do nothing, until it is too late to do anything but "cuss."

To compose the next board of revenue for the county, the people should bring out such men as J. P. Allen, of Jemison, and W. F. Claughton, of Verbena. These two gentleman, are of the right sort of timber to get our finance committee from, and we hear talk of their being run for the positions. With two other such men, we would have a strong and sound financial board. Messrs. N. W. Foshee, or W. R. Burline, of Maplesville, and Mr. John Parnell, Sr., of Calliervillo, are the proper timber to select the others from.

Miss Wainwright's Concert.

A large audience was at Clanton Academy on Tuesday night, it being the occasion of a most delightful entertainment under the direction of Miss Josie Wainwright assisted by her music pupils and other young ladies and gentlemen of the village. Where all did especially well, considering the time of preparation, it would be impudent to particularly criticise any one or two, though some may have done better than others. It was an entertainment that will be long remembered in Clanton, and it was one that did no little credit to the young lady inaugurating it. Following is the PROGRAMME:

"Wedding Bells March,"
Miss Zelia Collier.

"Kiss in School Recitation."
Miss Eula Sartor.

"Cling to me Little One Ever,"
Chorus.

CHARADE:

"MONEY MAKES THE MAN."

CHARACTERS:

Col. Culpepper, S. J. Brock; Charles Kettering, N. W. Kicker; Mrs. Culpepper, Miss Emma Boykin; Frank Dawson, A. J. Gullahorn; Mr. Oglethorpe, W. H. Sartor; Lucy Maitland, Miss Zelia Collier; Mary Culpepper, Miss Annie Lewis.

"Willowdale Mazourka,"
Miss Jodie Edwards.

"That Young Man Across the Way,"
Miss Inez Collier.

"Sunlight Waltz"
"Whispering Hope"
Mrs. Baker and Mr. Dunnam.

"Forget Me Not Waltz,"
Tommie Edwards.

"Let the Dead and the Beautiful Rest."
Chorus.

"Remember Me,"
Miss Mattie Wright.

CHARADE:

"SILENT PROTECTOR,"

CHARACTERS:

Quickfidget (Gentleman in difficulties), L. H. Stewart; Nat Nobler (Sheriff's officer), A. J. Gullahorn; Twaddleton Lisp, (a dude) C. R. Hannon; Lillian Grey (under an assumed name of Mrs. Arlington), Miss Josie Wainwright; Nancy Slyboots (a servant), Miss Eula Sartor.

"Cabin Philosophy"
J. W. Gullahorn.

With Finale of Minstrel Chorus Songs.

A general desire having been expressed for a repetition of the entertainment, it is probable that we may have occasion to speak of it again.

Jemison Jottings.

Jemison still moving. We notice Mr. J. P. Allen is having the grounds prepared for the erection of several more new buildings.

There is a move on foot to have a Sabbath school convention at Jemison some time this Summer. Every Sunday school in the county is expected to be on hand, and participate in making it a grand affair. Superintendents will take notice.

The "Star Hill" debating society, a few miles north of Jemison, seems to be claiming considerable attention at this time. We learn that the display of talent made by some of the young men in that neighborhood, is drawing out handsome crowds of spectators and hearers. Go ahead boys, a good thing.

Mrs. C. H. Smith is quite sick. Trust it is of short duration.

Mrs. Julia Lankford, who has been so long confined to her room, was seen riding through the streets on Sunday evening.

We were right glad to see the name of Dr. Callier announced as a candidate to represent Chilton county. We believe the Dr. is the coming man of our county, and we feel sanguine that the people will tell him so when the proper time comes.

Mr. James A. Skaggs is certainly the finest looking man in or around Jemison, if not in the county. This is not all, he knows just how to do a fine job of work.

Mr. Joseph Swinford, of S. & N. R. R., and Miss Lula Jeffries, of Jemison, were married at the residence of the bride's parents on Sunday morning, April 6th, by Rev. J. H. Scott. May all the sweet things of time hang profusely on all sides of their pilgrimage through life. ONO.

Receipt for Churning.

The following receipt was prepared by a Clanton dairyman and furnished us to publish for the benefit of butter-makers:

Churn the milk before it clabbers. This will make fully as much butter to the quantity of milk, and a much finer quality if the milk is of the right temperature at the churning, placing it in a pan of warm water to get the proper temperature. It should be a little warmer than when it comes from the cow. For butter made this way you can get from five to eight cents more per pound than for butter made from sour milk. You can afterward let your milk clabber and then churn again. Milk your cows early in the morning and late in the evening, taking all the milk from from them, and if you want to give your calves any of the milk, give it to them after you have taken the butter from it. For a copious quantity and a good quality of milk give your cows a slop made of boiled peas and cotton seed.

Pine Mill Points.

Rain has ceased, and we are having some fine dry weather.

Hand & Callen's tram road is in full blast. They are putting over their road 110 logs daily that will average 225 feet or 24,995 feet in the aggregate. The engine is a perfect little giant, and will wade the branches with her load of logs, when it is necessary.

A wonderful feat of bird eating has been accomplished by the Hon. L. J. Hand, who has eaten 48 quails in 48 successive days, and would have eaten more had the birds not become frightened and taken their departure for some secret and safer quarter, as if objecting to being placed before such a distinguished bird eater, who, as the next thing in order, now declares himself ready to fight John L. Sullivan or any other pugilist. H. J. M.

An old negro was conversing with one of his "colored brethren," at the jail the other day. The latter party happens just now to be fattening on county corn bread inside the bars, and the older darkey had come to make a friendly visit of condolence. He was heard to advise his imprisoned friend to "have his trial postponed as long as possible and then to get his case continued as often as he could, and by no means allow himself to be tried in Chilton county until one half the jury were of his own color; that he expected in time there would be as many colored men as white, on the juries in this county." Now of course this does not amount to anything as a prediction, but only goes to show what vain promises the Republican leaders are holding out to Cuffee—and the poor darkey hangs on to the delusion with a faith not to be dispelled.

They were standing at the front gate.

"Won't you come in the parlor and sit a little while, George, dear?"

"I wish you would," the girl went on. "It's awfully lonesome. Mother has gone out and father is upstairs groaning with rheumatism in the legs."

"Both legs?" asked George.

"Yes, both legs."

"Then I'll come in a little while."

Attention Voters!

Every man in Chilton county is earnestly exhorted to attend the Beat meeting, and see for himself that he is properly represented in the County Convention. Let there be no lagging behind in this matter. Do not fold your hands now and complain afterwards. It is the business of every citizen, every patriot to take a personal part in securing a representative.

Benson Beat Goes Dry.

The election for prohibition or no prohibition on Tuesday, in Beat 3, went for prohibition by a majority of 54. At Benson box the vote was 74 for prohibition and 4 for no prohibition, and at Macedonia 30 for prohibition and 46 for no prohibition.

Two cows belonging to Mr. R. M. Goodgame were knocked off the railroad track near the depot by mail train No. 2, on Monday morning. Both were killed.

The newspaper columns headed "Born," "Married," and "Died" have been variously paraphrased in the West. One paper has it "Hatched, Matched, Despatched," and another "Buds, Blossoms and Cypress."

J. L. Williams has been appointed inspector of the lands in Chilton county belonging to the Alabama Mineral Land Company.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, Jr.

We are authorized to announce

Dr. T. E. CALLIER

as a candidate for Representative from Chilton county in the lower house of the Legislature, subject to the action of the Democratic nominating convention, should one be held.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

THE VALLEY OF TEARS.

FROM "BLACKWOOD," A MAGAZINE OF VERSE.

If I climb to the mountain of gladness,
And bask in the sunshine of bliss,
If unheeding all sorrow and sadness,
Forgetting the good that I miss,
I look out from my splendor of being
Across the broad reach of the year
I grow tenderly sober at seeing
The shadowy Valley of Tears.

It is never quite lost to my vision,
Though often beyond it I see
The green slopes of the summit's elysium
That wait with their blessings for me;
And though often I long for the freedom
That yonder eternally reigns
I remember that each has his Edom
Before the glad Canaan he gains.

When my heart with tumultuous throbbing
Takes up the sad burdens of men,
I go down amid sighing and sobbing,
And walk the dim valley again.
A sober, sepulchral procession
We make as we journey along,
With a grief for our only possession,
A funereal dirge for our song.

There are willows above us low bending,
That weep with us over our woe;
And the mist of the mountain descending,
Bedews all the way as we go.
In the dark of our dubious grieving
We walk as if stars had gone out,
And our souls were grown sick of believing
The morrow were more than a doubt.

There are hearts with their hunger pathetic
That walk in the Valley of Tears;
There are souls, in their sadness, ascetic,
That linger and grieve through the years.
There are loves that come silently hither
To look for some treasure of cost,
And that mourn, as a bairn for its mither,
The wonderful love that is lost.

There are many who wait and who wander
Within the dim valley with me,
And who yearn for the mountain-tops yonder
The sunlight and gladness to see;
But a stranger I look in their faces,
And strangers they look into mine;
And as strangers we group for the places
Where sunlight and gladness may shine.

For who walks in the valley so lonely
Goes there in his sorrow alone;
And who gives friendly greeting gives only
For bread to the hungry a stone.
They may touch us whose yesterday's tender
Made loving and living supreme;
But our grieving refuses surrender,
And friendship was only a dream.

I am far up the mountains of being;
The mists of the morning below
In their beauty shut out from my seeing
The valley where soon I must go:
But I know, though the sun of my hoping
May shine with a gladness that cheers,
That I soon shall be wearily groping
My way in the Valley of Tears.

You may smile on the summits of gladness
Who never have wept at their base;
But in time with the garment of sadness
You closely will cover your face;
And unknown of the many who wander,
Unknowing, as they are unknown,
You shall grope from the radiance yonder,
Across the dark valley, alone.

Amid pitiful sobbing and sighing,
Where willows and cypresses bend;
You shall walk where the shadows are lying,
And see not a sign of the end;
You shall know, by the twilight unbroken
When morn on the mountain appears,
You have come, without warning or token,
At length to the Valley of Tears.

AN EASTERN JUGGLER.

BY A TRAVELER.

While traveling through India, between Surat and Nagpore, my body servant one day informed me that a great juggler and snake charmer wished to have the honor of showing me something of his wonderful skill.

"What can he do?" I asked.

"Almost everything that is marvelous, I've been told," was the answer I received.

"Admit him."

My servant withdrew, and returned with a small, withered old man, about whom I saw nothing very remarkable except his eyes, which were small, black and piercing, and seemed to have lightning imprisoned in them. I do not know that the man could see in the dark like a cat, but there was at times that peculiar fiery appearance of the balls which is so often observed in night-prowling animals.

He wore a white vest, Turkish trousers, a sort of crimson petticoat worked with strange devices, a turban of many colors, and red morocco shoes, pointed and turned up at the toes. His arms and neck were bare, and with the exception of a couple of heavy gold rings in his ears, he displayed no extraneous ornaments. His age I judged to be rising of sixty, and his short mustache was almost white. He made a low salam, and then appeared to wait to be addressed.

"Your name?" said I, in Hindoostanee.

"Paunjar, your excellency."

"I am told you wish to show me some wonders."

"If your excellency wills."

"Well, what can you do?"

He suddenly produced—from where I did not see and cannot tell—a large ball of twine, which he appeared to toss into my lap, keeping hold of one end, so that it unrolled the whole distance between him and me, at least ten feet, saying, as he did so:

"Will your excellency please examine what you see?"

"Now, I honestly aver that I saw that ball of twine when he threw it as plainly as I ever saw anything in my life—saw it come toward me, saw it unroll, and apparently drop into my lap, so that I brought my knees quickly together to catch it—and yet, when I put my hand down to take it, and looked down for it, it was not there—nothing was there—and at the same instant I perceived the juggler balancing it on the end of his finger.

"Pshaw!" said I; "you deceived me by making me believe you threw it toward me."

"Does your excellency think I have it?" he asked; and before I could answer, I saw, in the place of the ball, a large, beautiful rose, which he was balancing by the stem, and yet he had not altered his position and scarcely stirred a finger.

I began to be astonished.

While yet I looked, I saw in his right hand a large cup, and in his left the rose. He stepped forward a few feet, laid the rose down on the ground, and placed the cup over it.

Here, it will be observed, there was no machinery to assist him—no table, with its false top, concealed apartments, and confederate perhaps to effect the change, as we see similar tricks performed in a place fitted up by the magician for the purpose—but only my own quarters, in the full, bright light of day, with myself sharply watching him within five feet, and my attendants grouped around about as near.

Having covered the rose with the cup, as I would be willing to make oath—for I saw the rose distinctly, as the hollow vessel, held by the top, went slowly down over it—the conjurer resumed his former place, and said:

"Will your excellency be kind enough to lift the cup and see what is under it?"

Of course I would have wagered a heavy sum that the rose was still there for one thing—because, expecting some trick, I had kept my eye on it to the last moment, and was certain there was no possibility of its being removed after the hand had let go of the cup at the top.

I complied with his request, stepped forward, and raised the cup, but instantly dropped it and bounded back with a cry of terror, for there instead of the red rose was one of the little, green, deadly serpents of India, coiled up and ready for a spring, with its small, glittering eyes fixed intently on mine. Snakes of any kind are my horror, and this one not only horrified me, but all of my attendants, who, with cries of alarm, enlarged the circle very rapidly, for they knew its bite to be fatal.

"No more such tricks as these, conjurer!" said I, sternly.

"It is perfectly harmless, your excellency," grinned the old man, walking up to it, lifting it by the neck, putting to head into his mouth, and allowing it is run down his throat.

I shuddered, and half believed the juggler possessed of the devil, if not a devil himself.

He next produced a tube that looked like brass, about two feet long and half an inch in diameter, and next the ball of twine again.

Where these things came from, or went to, I could not tell. They seemed to be in his hands when he wanted them; but I never observed his hands passing near his dress, neither when they appeared or disappeared. When I looked for the cup that I had lifted from the snake, it was gone, and yet neither myself nor any of my attendants had seen this wonderful man pick it up! It was indeed jugglery, if not magic, of the most unquestionable kind!

Through the brass tube the conjurer now passed one end of the twine, which he put between his teeth. He then placed the tube between his lips, threw back his head, and held it perpendicularly with the ball of twine on the upper end. Then suddenly this ball began to turn, and turn rapidly, and gradually grow smaller till it entirely disappeared, as if the twine had been run off on a reel. What turned it or where it went to no one could see.

The juggler then set the tube the other end up, and a new ball began to form on the top but apparently of ribbon half an inch in width and of different colors. These rolled up as if on a bobin till they formed a wheel of two or three inches in diameter, when the performer seemed to toss ribbon and tube over his shoulder, and that was the last I saw of either.

He next reproduced what appeared to be the same cup that I had lifted from the snake, showed something that looked like an egg, advanced the same as before, and placed the latter on the ground and the former over it, and again requested me to raise it, which I declined to do, fearing I should see another serpent or something equally horrifying.

"Will any one lift the cup?" he said, turning to the others.

No one volunteered to do so, but all rather drew back.

At this he took up the cup himself and appeared to throw it into the air, and there sat in its place a beautiful dove, which flew up and alighted on his shoulder. He took it in his hand, muttered over some unintelligible words, seemed to cram it into his mouth and that was the last I ever saw of that also.

He performed some other tricks similar to these and concluded with the mysterious bag.

This bag—which somehow came into his hands, as did all the other things he used, in a manner unknown to myself—was from two to three feet long and about a foot wide. It looked as if it had been used to hold some kind of flour, and I certainly saw something like the dust of flour fly from it when he turned it inside out and beat it across his hands. He turned it back again and tied up the mouth of it with a string, muttering a low incantation all the time. This done, he threw it on the ground and stamped on it, treading it all out flat with his feet. He then stepped back a few paces, and requested us all to fix our eyes on it. We did so; and after a lapse of perhaps thirty seconds, we saw it begin to swell up, like a bladder when being expanded with wind. It continued to swell, till every part became distended, and it appeared as round and solid as if filled with sand.

Its solidity, however, was only apparent—for when the juggler went up and placed his foot on it it yielded to the pressure, but immediately sprung back, or rounded out, as soon as that was removed. He then jumped on it with both feet and flattened it all out as at first. He then went away again, and the bag, being left to itself as before, again began to rise or inflate, but this time as if some animal like a cat were inside of it. In fact I could see where there appeared to be legs; and then, to my utter amazement, I may almost say horror, it began to move toward me, as if impelled by the unknown something in it!

I do not think I am a coward—my worst enemy has never accused me of being one, at least—but I confess that on this occasion my nerves would not let me remain passive, and I retreated from the advancing mystery, and informed the magician that I had seen enough to satisfy me of his wonderful occult powers.

At this he smiled grimly, and walked up to the bag and trod it down again, picked it up and beat it with his right hand across his left, caused it to unaccountably disappear from my sight, and then made his concluding salam.

How these wonders were performed—by what art, power or magic—I do not and never expect to know. I have conversed with many persons who have seen quite as strange and unnatural things, but never heard anyone give any explanation that I considered at all satisfactory. I simply relate what I saw, but scarcely expect any one to credit my statement, well knowing that I myself would not have received such marvels as facts on the testimony of the most reliable friend in the world.

"If your excellency wills, I shall now have the honor of showing you how I charm wild serpents," said the necromancer.

I had heard something of this singular power and was desirous of seeing it displayed. Accordingly myself and attendants all repaired to an open field, at no great distance, where after some search, Paunjar discovered a hole in which he said he doubted not there was a snake.

"But before I call him forth," he proceeded, "I must be assured that some one of sufficient courage will stand ready to cut him down when I give the signal, otherwise, should he prove to be a cobra de capello, my life would be sacrificed."

"I will myself undertake the business," said I, drawing my sword.

The man hesitated, evidently fearing to insult me by a doubt, and yet too eager to risk his life on the strength of my nerves, after the display of timidity I had already made. I thought I read all this in the man's face, and I said, very positively:

"Never fear, good sir! I will cut down whatever you bring up this time, be it snake or devil!"

"My life is at your excellency's mercy," bowed the man, with a show of humility. "Remember the signal! When I raise my hand above my head, may the blow be swift, sure and deadly!"

He then gave his whole attention to the business before him. Putting an instrument, not unlike a small flageolet, to his lips, he began to play a shrill, monotonous, disagreeable sort of tune, keeping his eyes riveted upon the hole in the ground; and soon after, to my utter astonishment, though I should have been prepared for anything, I saw the ugly head of the hooded snake, the dread cobra de capello, the most poisonous of all deadly reptiles, come slowly forth, with its spectacled eyes* fixed steadily upon the strange musician, who began to retreat backward slowly, a step at a time, the snake following him.

When at length in this manner he had drawn the hideous creature some ten or fifteen feet from its hole, he suddenly squatted down and began to play more loudly and shrilly. At this the serpent raised itself on its tail, as when about to make its deadly spring, and actually commenced a dancing motion, in time with the music, which was continued for about a minute, when the charmer gave me the signal to strike. Guardedly and stealthily I advanced near enough for the blow, and then struck cutting the reptile in two, and sending its head flying to some distance. I never took life with better satisfaction.

Whatever deception there might have been about the juggler's tricks, there was certainly none about the snake, for I have its skin still in my possession.

I gave the man a couple of gold mohurs, and he went away perfectly satisfied, wishing my excellency any quantity of good luck. I was perfectly satisfied, too, and would not have missed seeing what I did that day for ten times the amount I paid.

*A large ring around each eye gives this fearful serpent the appearance of looking through a pair of spectacles; and it also has a hood for its misshapen head, not unlike a monk's cowl, from which it takes its name.

How She Kept the Secret.

"We're bound to be equal to you men," said the Mason's wife; "we formed a secret society of our own last night."

"Indeed!" said the worshipful master, composedly; "then I hope, my dear, your project will be successful. Is it a benevolent society or what?"

"That's none of your business. It's a secret society, and we're sworn by solemn oath not to divulge anything relating to it."

"Very good, my dear," observed the worshipful master, returning to his paper; "I'm sure I do not wish you to violate your oath."

"It wouldn't matter if you did, I wouldn't. You keep your secrets close enough—and to think of that stupid Mrs. Furbelow! she could recollect neither the grip nor the sign. It took us an hour to teach her. When I gave her the sign (suits the action to the word she would make it this way, ha! ha! Her stupidity would have been exasperating if it hadn't been ridiculous, and as for learning the grip, why, she would have it that it was this way—give me your hand a minute—there, she would have it that way, while it was this way; and the password! she couldn't keep it in her memory for two minutes. Over and over again I told her it was 'Be just and fear not,' and she would have it, 'Swear not at all,' or 'Do unto others as you would be done by,' ha! ha! We almost despaired of getting it through her head. But we managed to make her understand at last. Oh, yes, we are going to have a flourishing society, and we can be as secret about it as you men can be about yours."

Then the lady went off to attend to her household duties, and the worshipful master hid his face behind his paper and smiled.—New York Journal.

Some Close Figuring.

Early one afternoon recently a colored man halted a pedestrian on Monroe avenue and asked for a cash contribution, explaining:

"Up at de house de water has froze up, de fiah has gone out, dar's nuffin' to eat, an' de ole woman am cryin' wid de cold as if her heart would break."

He got a quarter, and half an hour afterward he was in the corridor of the post office and saying, in the presence of his first benefactor:

"Up at de house de water has frose up, de fiah has gone out, dar's nuffin' to eat, an' de ole woman has gone to bed to keep warm."

The story was next told at the corner of Jefferson avenue and Griswold street, and it ended up with:

"An' de ole woman has gone ober to a naybor's to keep from freezin'."

About ten o'clock the man entered an insurance office in which the gentleman is employed, and asked for ten cents, saying:

"I wants it to help pay my fare to Chatham."

"See here, sir! You are the man who said the water had frozen up, the fire was out, there was nothing to eat, and your old woman was crying in the cold. Why do you tell a different story now?"

"Well, sah, I reckon I kin explain all about it. In de fust place, de ole woman cried. I reckoned on her keepin' dat up about half an hour, an' den it was safe to say she'd gone to bed. I gine her twenty minutes to lie dar, an' den I reckoned on her gwine to de nabor's. In de co'se of half an hour de naybors probably sot her up to leave me an' skip fur Chatham, an' now I'm exin' fur money to follow on an' try an' prewail upon her to return as soon as dis blizzard has passed ober."—Detroit Free Press.

Exported Grain.

The London Grocers' Journal says: "There is a very common idea that the Americans inundate us with their grain. It is not so. Mr. Mongredien, in his pamphlet on 'Free Trade and English Commerce (1880),' declares that this is a great mistake, and he even goes so far as to say that the Americans do not send us as much as one shipload of grain in the course of the whole year. The whole of the large importations into the United Kingdom of American wheat, maize, etc., are, according to him, the purchases made in New York and Baltimore by English millers, and shipped thence for English accounts at English risks—paid for by the buyer, in fact, before he gets possession of the goods."

IT WAS BEWITCHED.

A TRICK THAT WAS PLAYED BY A PRACTICAL JOKER.

An Old Negro About a Pig and a Puppy—A Confused Servant.

"When I lived down in Kentucky," said the story-teller, "I had a neighbor by the name of Martin, who was an uncommon clever physician and an importer of fine stock. One day the doctor stopped to get his horse shod at neighbor Bird's, the blacksmith's. The doctor commenced talking about his beautiful Berkshire pigs, and told the blacksmith, in a fit of liberality, that he would give him a pig out of the next litter 'Su' had.

"In the course of two months the doctor called at the shop and told neighbor Bird to send and get his pig. So Bird posts his man Bob off with his wife's large willow basket to get the pig. Between Bird's and Martin's Sam Smith, who was a great quiz, kept a little grocery, and seeing Bob coming post haste on his master's horse old Tom, with the basket on his arm, he sang out, 'Halloo Bob, where are you going in such a hurry this morning?' 'I is gwine to Massa Doctor Martin's to get Massa Tom's Buckahur pig, what massa doctor promise Massa Tom the las' time he shod his hoss,' said the negro as he reined in his animal. 'Well, Bob, you must stop as you come back and let me see the pig.' 'Dat I will, Massa Sam, dat I will,' and away he went at the top of 'old Tom's' speed.

"In less than an hour Bob returned with a genuine swine, and, alighting at the grocery, he lifted the cover off the basket, and to the astonished gaze of the grocery man, who imagined a Berkshire to be something more than a mere hog, exhibited a very beautiful specimen of a jet black pig. An idea struck Sam Smith to play a joke on Bob, and knowing his propensity to imbibe, told him to go in the grocery and get a dram. While Bob was gone, Sam Smith ran round the back of the house and got a little black pup about the same heft, and took the pig out of the basket and put the pup in. When Bob came out and mounted his nag, Sam Smith handed him the basket and off he went. On arriving at home the blacksmith asked him if he had got the pig. 'Yes, massa, and a werry fine pig he be, too,' said Bob, lifting up the cover, 'black as a coal,' when, to the utter astonishment of Bob and Bird, there lay a little black curly puppy. 'Is that a Berkshire pig?' asked the blacksmith, in amazement; 'why, it is a pup, not a pig!' 'Bless de Lord,' said Bob, 'he be pig when I put him in de basket, but he change to pup!' 'Take him back, sir,' said Bird, highly indignant, 'and tell Doctor Martin that I don't want to be fooled with his puppies, and if he don't want to give me a Berkshire pig, to say so.'

"Bob started back, and, naturally enough, stopped at the grocer's to relate his mishape to Sam Smith, who heard him out with a countenance expressive of wonder, at the same time doing his best to control his increasing desire to burst into fits. 'Well, get down, Bob,' said the grocer, 'and take another dram.' Bob didn't require a second invite, and while he was getting his 'bold face,' the grocer took the pup from the basket, and put back the pig. 'Massa Sam,' said Bob, coming out to mount his horse, 'I am mighty obfusticated 'bout dis pig. First I think him pig, I know he is pig first, and den I know he is pup, too. Ain't you sartin, Massa Sam, he was pig first?' asked Bob, as he mounted his crittur. 'I'll swear to it,' replied Smith, and away Bob rode to the doctor's.

"On arriving at the house, Bob delivered his message, but the doctor seeming somewhat incredulous as to the truth of the story, Bob, with a flourish of insulted veracity, opened the lid of the basket, when lo, there was the identical pig that he had started with. Bob stood transfixed, and with eyes protruding and mouth open, remarked: 'For God, 'taint no use, massa, he be pup or pig, just as he pleases.'"

An Interview with Mrs. Nutt.

The Pittsburg Commercial gives this interview with Mrs. Nutt:

"Mrs. Nutt, was Lizzie engaged to marry Dukes?"

"Yes, she was."

"Did Dukes ever wish to break the engagement?"

"No. He never intimated such a thing. He gave Lizzie an engagement ring, and one evening he came and was exceptionally pleasant. He asked her to take it off her hand that he might procure another that he liked better. He had never and did never intimate that he wished her relationship to him to change. Why, Lizzie said to me once: 'Mother, if he did not want to marry me, why, oh! why did he not come to me and say so? Why did he not tell me that all his protestations were not real?' (It may be parenthetically remarked here that from all conversations Miss Lizzie Nutt loved this man Dukes, and his terrible fate still hangs dark upon her. It is made still darker from the utter incomprehensibility of the insane charges made by the man. Not a member of either the Dukes or Nutt family can unravel them.)

"Did he love Lizzie?"

"He asked her to become his wife. Would he have done that if he did not love her?"

"Why did he act as he did?"

"We cannot tell. We cannot even guess. There has been a woman in the case," said Mrs. Nutt, decisively. "There was a woman's influence that controlled him and made him act as he did."

"Who was that woman?"

"Miss ——, but I do not care to specify," said Mrs. Nutt, correcting herself. "Do not ask me. What letters have been written or threats made may all come from one source."

PORK FOR THE TROOPS.—Dr. Loring says that a curious statement regarding the action of the French Government on the pork question, has just come to his knowledge. I have a very intelligent and careful correspondent in London, Dr. Murray. He has been in this country for a short time, and is now about returning to England. He tells me that he has learned from pork houses in New York that when the interdict of France was suspended for a short time, agents of the French Government bought largely of the hog-produce here for the use of their army in Tonquin. Almost immediately after the purchases were made, the interdict was again put in force.

A FAMILY SEZ.—The spy, "Belle Boyd," who at the outbreak of the rebellion was 18 years of age, is the matronly wife of Col. John Hammond, of Texas, who dwells on a ranch near San Antonio. He was one of Stonewall Jackson's scouts in Virginia. She was, as may be remembered, banished to Europe. She has been oblivious.

OUR ANCESTORS' ELIXIR.

The discovery of Plantation Bitters transcended that of Ponce de Leon, for it gave to the afflicted not only the fabled elixir of life, but the more substantial and priceless boon of health and the vigor of former generations. There was something about the bitters that commended it to the stomach of every man, woman and child. They were conscience—those ancient tatters. They lived simply, and so carefully met and overcame difficulties that would have discouraged this age and generation. The rigors of the frontier were supplemented by the ravages; wild beasts threatened their enterprise and poverty was a common companion. Yet they bravely encountered and resisted all those things and laid the foundations of a land whose blessings we now enjoy. Their constitutions were strong: their health unsurpassed and yet they were forced to expose themselves continually. There certainly must have been some good and adequate cause for all this and for the physical superiority of that age over the present.

It is well known to everyone conversant with the history of that time that certain home compounds of strengthening qualities were used almost universally by those pioneers. The malarial evils and exposures to which they were subjected necessitated this. When their bodies become chilled by cold or debilitated by the damp mists of a new country they were forced to counteract it by the use of antidotes. Medicines were few in those days, and doctors almost unknown. Hence the preparations above referred to. From among the number, all of which were compounded upon the same general principle, one was found to be more efficient and hence far more popular than all the rest. It was well known through the Middle and Western States, and was acknowledged as the best preparation for malarial disorders and general debility then known. The recipe for compounding this valuable article was handed down from one family and generation to another, was known to the Harrison family, and is used as the basis and general formula for the present "Tippecanoe," the name being suggested by the battle in which General Harrison was engaged. The manufacturers have thoroughly investigated this subject in its minutest details, and are certain that for mal-assimilation of food, dyspepsia, tired feelings, general debility, prostrations, malarial disorders and humors in the blood, nothing can exceed in value "Tippecanoe," which was the medicine of our forefathers and seems destined to be the most popular preparation of the day.

"Tippecanoe" is prepared and given to the public by Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., proprietors of the famous Warner's Safe Cure, which is now the most extensively used of any American medicine. The well known standing of this house is a sufficient guarantee of the purity and power of this preparation which seeks to banish one of the greatest banes of the nineteenth century—mal-assimilation of food. Any one who experiences trouble of digestion; who feels less vigor than formerly; whose system has unquestionably "run down," and who realizes the necessity of some strengthening tonic, cannot afford to permit such symptoms to continue. If the farmer finds that his threshing machine does not separate the grain from the straw he realizes that something is wrong and tries to repair the machine. When the food does not sustain the life; when it fails to make blood; when it causes the energy to depart and ambition to die, it is a certain sign that something is wrong and that the human machine needs repairing. It is not a question of choice; it is a matter of duty. You must attend to your health or your sickness, and nothing will sooner overcome these evils than "Tippecanoe," the medicine of the past, a safeguard for the present and a guarantee of health for the future

DETERIORATION OF SIGHT.

Some of the Causes to Which It Is Due.

The causes to which this deterioration of eyesight has been attributed are alleged to be cross lights from opposite windows, light shining directly on the face, insufficient light, small types, and to the position of the desk, forcing the scholar to bend over and bring the eyes too close to the book or writing paper, etc., etc.

But were all these defects remedied, the integrity of the eye would not be restored nor its deterioration prevented. These are the colors of the paper and ink. White paper and black ink are ruining the eyesight of all reading nations. The "rays of the sun," says Lord Bacon, "are reflected by a white body, and are absorbed by a black one." No one dissents from this opinion; but, despite these indications of nature and of philosophy, we print our books and write our letters in direct opposition to the suggestions of optical science.

When we read a book printed in the existing mode we do not see the letters, which, being black, are non-reflective. The shapes reach the retina, but they are not received by a spontaneous, direct action of that organ. The white surface of the paper is reflected, but the letters are detected only by a discriminative effort of the optic nerves. This effect annoys the nerves, and, when long continued, exhausts their susceptibility, the human eye cannot long sustain the broad glare of a white surface without injury. The author of "Spanish Vistas," in "Harper's Magazine," says of Cartegena that "blind people seem to be numerous there, a fact which may be owing to the excessive dazzle of the sunlight and the absence of verdure." Mr. Seward, in his tour around the world, observed that "in Egypt ophthalmia is universal," attributing it to the same "excessive dazzle" of the wide areas of white sand; and the British soldiers in the late campaign in that country exhibited symptoms of the same disease. In the Smithsonian report of 1877, it is stated in a paper on "Color Blindness," that "M. Chevreul has produced 14,420 distinguishable tints of the elementary colors, from which the paper manufacturers could select colors more agreeable to the eye than the dazzling white so weakening and lacerating to the nerves of that delicate organ."—Science Monthly.

His Horse.

An aged colored man whom the Staunton Spectator has discovered in the solitudes of East Tennessee, tells an original anecdote about General Jackson. According to this authority, the General, having ridden up to a little tavern in Marysville, and found a score or more of loungers who were not disposed to make a place for him in front of the fire, called to a servant: "Boy, have you got any oysters in the shell?" "Yes, massa, plenty of 'em." "Well, put my horse in the stable, and measure out a half bushel of oysters and carry them to him." The loungers speedily thinned out to see the horse eat oysters. The General, after enjoying the fire and seeing the boy, said: "Well, boy, how is my horse getting on with his oysters?" "Oh, massa, he ain't eating 'em." "Very well, bring 'em to me and give him some oats."

Criticising It.

The New York Globe (negro organ) says of the marriage of Fred. Douglass: "The criticisms upon Mr. Douglass's course by our own people are just what we expect in cases of that kind, and yet such criticisms should not come from us. We are always ranting about the unreasonable prejudices of other people, and yet show, when occasion presents itself, prejudices just as narrow and unreasonable. We should not be surprised at things of this nature. They are not only natural, but are likely to be of more frequent occurrence in the future. They cannot be avoided. Where people live as close together as all the people of this country do, human likes and dislikes will assert themselves."

A LOCAL JOKE.—A little chap who fell on the pavement in front of a Woodward avenue grocery the other day and broke a jug, jumped up and called out to a boy on the corner:

"Jim't that bum?"

"Why, didn't you break the jug?"

"Of course I did, but it was empty. If I'd only waited five minutes I'd have lost a full gallon of 'lasses by the breaking. Bet your boots I'm alive lucky!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE HORSE DOCTOR.

We have heard of a "cure all," but when a father is taking a bottle of medicine for the summer complaint to his family in the country his horse has a sudden attack of cholera from over-feeding, is given the contents of the bottle and is soon restored, as was a case we have just heard of. Dr. Bigger's Southern Remedy should certainly relieve men of diarrhœa, dysentery and children teething. This, with a bottle of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, combining the stimulating expectorant principle of the sweet gum with the demulcent healing one of the mullein, for the cure of croup, whooping cough, colds and consumption, presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. Ask your druggist for them. Manufactured by Walter A. Taylor, proprietor Taylor's Premium Cologne, Atlanta, Ga.

Exploration of New Guinea.

* * * "In connection with the Waltham Watch Company, it may be stated that when the proprietors of the Age desired to present Mr. G. E. Morrison (the explorer of New Guinea) with a reliable chronometer, acting upon the advice of Mr. R. L. J. Ellery, the Government Astronomer, two Waltham watches were, however, procured for Mr. Morrison instead. These were kept at the Melbourne Observatory for a fortnight, and thoroughly and carefully tested and were pronounced by Mr. Ellery, at the end of that time, to be better suited for Mr. Morrison's requirements than any chronometer."—Ext. from the Melbourne Age.

Mr. Gladstone attained his 72d birthday a short time ago.

No Rest Day or Night.

In the fall of 1875 my sufferings were terrible. I was swollen to such proportions that I feared my limbs would burst. I had the best medical talent obtainable, and at the worst stage of my illness, when my husband and many friends had given me up to die, the late Dr. John Woodbury made a thorough examination of my water, and pronounced my case acute kidney disease, bordering on Bright's disease, and accompanied by gravel, and recommended the immediate use of Hunt's Remedy. At this time I was suffering most terrible pain in my back, limbs, and head, and could find no rest day or night for weeks, and I was growing weaker daily until this kind physician ordered me to take Hunt's Remedy. Before taking half of one bottle I commenced to improve, and after taking six bottles was entirely cured. This was nearly eight years ago, and I have had no return of the disease. I have recommended Hunt's Remedy to others in similar cases, and it has never failed to cure. I have also used it for sick headache, and found in it a sure relief. I think it the best medicine made, and cheerfully recommend it to all.

MRS. W. H. STILSON,
No. 16 Tyler St., Boston, Mass.
April 18, 1883.

A Well Known Man.

Hunt's Remedy having been recommended to me for kidney and liver complaints, I purchased some at the "People's Drug Store" and used it in my family, and found it to be a very valuable medicine, and I gladly recommend it highly to my friends, knowing it to be beneficial to those troubled with kidney or liver disease.

Respectfully yours,
ELISHA NOYSE.

A Last Manufacturer.

I have used Hunt's Remedy for the kidney complaint, and, having been fully restored to health by its use, I can testify to its value.

Daily I recommend it to some one of my friends, all of whom I know have been benefited by its use. Gratefully,

A Cure of Pneumonia.

Mr. D. H. Barnaby, of Owego, N. Y., says that his daughter was taken with a violent cold which terminated with pneumonia, and all the best physicians gave the case up and said she could live but a few hours at most. She was in this condition when a friend recommended Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and advised her to try it. She accepted it as a last resort, and was surprised to find that it produced a marked change for the better, and by persevering a permanent cure was effected.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

CHARLES BARRETT, of Abbawakam, Mass., now 96 years old, had his life insured for $1,000 in 1846. Having reached the extreme limit of life, according to the table of mortality on which the insurance company does business, the president sent him the other day a check for the amount of his policy. It is believed to be the only case on record where a man has beaten an insurance company by outliving a death policy.

WE now make one-fifth of the iron and one-fourth of the steel in the world and we furnish one-half of the gold and one-half of the silver of the world's supply. Taking all the mining industries of the world, the United States represent 36; Great Brittian, 23, and all other nations 31 per cent of the total. Anglo-Saxondom, therefore, represents 59 per cent of the mining industry of the earth.

THE Chicago Live Stock Exchange has resolved that there is no such disease as contagious pleuro-pneumonia in the United States, no foot and mouth disease in Illinois, Iowa or Kansas, and that at no time within twenty years have the cattle, hogs and sheep of this country been so healthy as now. It has also sent a delegation to Washington to lobby against all cattle disease legislation.

THE discussion of the red sunsets continues. Probably the volcanic dust theory has the largest number of followers. As a recent scientific writer expresses it, a tremendous volcanic eruption hurls into space dust, steam and gas, and this mighty mass hangs like a cloud over the earth. How long this dust is to envelope the globe is a question, but it is suggested that if the clouds owe their elevation to electrical repulsion there is no reason why they should not stay in the upper air for years, but if they are slowly settling to lower levels the action of the rain drops will drag them down

IN New York, Philadelphia, and other commercial centers, the merchants have inaugurated a war on the druggists; and physic has dropped fully forty per cent below the regular rates. The cut rates apply mainly to the patent medicines. The grocers and other merchants who are competing with the druggis s say that the average merchant has to be satisfied with five or ten per cent profit, and there is no reason why the druggist should reap any more. Of course the druggists are mad, but what can they do about it? The war may be only a flurry after all, or it may result in a permanent reduction in the prices of patent medicines. The matter will shape itself according to the laws of trade.

THE entire winter packing of pork in the west is 5,402,064 hogs, against 6,132,212 last year; average weight 251.44 pounds, a decrease of 15.58 compared with last year. The decrease in the yield of lard per hog was 2.15 pounds. The pork production shows 278,888 pounds less than last year. Stocks of meat in the west, including barreled pork, were 113,000,000 pounds less than a year ago. Exports since November 1 are 47,000,000 pounds less than a year ago, and 145,000,000 pounds less than the average of the seven previous years reported. The outlook for hog supplies indicates about 15 per cent shortage for the summer. The total packing for the twelve months ending March 1 was 9,183,100 against 9,949,990 the previous year.

OUR preparations for a more efficient navy will cause the public to feel interested in the progress of Krupp's latest ventures in the gun line. Several trials have been made with Krupp's six inch guns, thirty-five caliber length. A target representing the sides of an iron man-of-war was constructed of ten-inch hard wood timbers, with iron plates seven inches thick on each side, making fourteen inches of iron and ten inches of wood. The range was 150 metres and the projectile passed entirely through the target and buried itself in the sand hill beyond. It is understood that Krupp is now at work on a gun that is expected to accomplish still greater results. It goes without saying that even the most heavily armed vessels cannot withstand guns of the Krupp stamp. In future ships of war will not be relied upon very largely in attacking a well fortified seaport strongholds.

CONSIDERING the quantity of tea used in this country, one would naturally suppose that our people would know something about tea, but the fact is, they know next to nothing. Most of our tea comes from China, but it is the inferior grades, the spurious stuff which has been artificially colored. The really good tea is either consumed in China or is sold abroad at fancy prices. The emperor of Russia imports tea at $40 per pound, and it is a common thing for wealthy people to pay $10 per pound for it. When good tea is secured you should use one full teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot; boil the water in a clean kettle, and when it boils put the required quantity in a teapot and pour on the boiling water, allowing it to stand about fifteen minutes. Then pour into a fine china teapot to serve at the table. Never make the tea in anything but a china or brown stone pot.

WITH reference to the early life of Usman Digna, the Soakim correspondent of the London Times writes that he was originally a broker and trader, and principally a slave trader, in Suakim and Jeddah, where he received a severe financial blow, when, some six years ago, a British cruiser captured two slave dhows full of victims on the way to Jeddah. Osman Digna's trade then fell from bad to worse, his house property in Suakim was all mortgaged, and he became hopelessly involved. Rising of no great importance by birth, his selection by the Mahdi as head a religious rebellion is attributed to the supposition that Osman Digna and the Mahdi, who formed a high estimate of his ability and influence, acquired through commercial trading. If this history be trustworthy, gambling for other objects than holiness are the key note of Osman Digna's character and motive, and it is against all probability that he will cast his goods and his position into the broken balance of fanaticism. The Soudan Quarterly Gazette, and its editor himself, believe the myths which he continually sets afloat to control his followers.

IN 1880 there were 6,239,958 persons over 10 years of age who could not write. There are [illegible] 000,000 persons [illegible] of the nation in this category without write: 10 per cent of colored persons in the United States cannot write. Of native born Southern whites, 180,000 [illegible] cannot write. Of the 5,000,000 [illegible] cannot write. Of the 5,000,000 [illegible] at least three-fourths of the voting population is capable of reading and writing, says Senator Blair, with such facility as to make them a source of intelligent suffrage. About three-fourths of the illiterate voters are found in states that have a large colored population. In Georgia out of 831,486 males over 21 years of age, there are 98,571 whites and 116,616 blacks who can not write. A little over 45 of every one hundred are illiterate, although the ratio of illiteracy in this state is not as high as it is in Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina or Mississippi. This state has 145,087 illiterate voters. There are in the state 446,683 persons over 10 years of age who can not read. These figures of course largely represent the illiteracy that exists among the negroes. There are, however, 126,984 white illiterates in the state of the age of 16 years and upwards.

PROMINENT PEOPLE.

HOLMES.—Judge Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., will deliver the Memorial Day address in Keene, N. H:

LANGTRY.—Mrs. Langtry is evidently prospering. She has mortgages on New York real estate amounting to $98,000, to say nothing of other investments.

TABOR.—Mr. Tabor, the millionaire ex-Senator, is in luck again. He has struck another rich vein in one of his mines. It is said that he wants to be governor of Colorado.

BONNER.—Robert Bonner, proprietor of the New York Ledger, is sixty-two years old. His wealth is estimated at over $7,000,000. His interest in the Ledger is worth $50,000 a year.

CULLOM.—United States Senator Cullom of Illinois, is no society man. He prefers to sit in his own cosy room, in dressing-gown and slippers, instead of going to stiff and starched receptions.

RUSKIN.—John Ruskin, the eminent English art critic, is described as being five feet five inches tall, with an iron-gray beard extending up to his eyes, a low and retreating forehead and long unkempt hair.

HALSTEAD.—Murat Halstead, editor of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, improves the occasion of the recent Mississippi flood to formulate his views as to what should be done to the river: "It must be lighted and have the snags pulled out, have its natural outlets restored, be humored occasionally with dredges, and then let alone.

VANDERBILT.—W. H. Vanderbilt owns 930,840 shares of railroad stock, worth $88,750,000, railroad bonds worth $36,357,420, government bonds worth $70,580,000, and other securities worth $5,000,000. His wealth equals the $300,000,000 of the duke of Westminster, and the income from it is six per cent., while that of the duke is but two, so that he is clearly the richest man in the world.

SITTING BULL.—Sitting Bull is paying his first visit to the realms of civilization, and recently got so far east as St. Paul. The other night the chief and his nephew visited the Pioneer Press office and were surprised, though they didn't show it, by the telegraph, telephone, fire-alarm gong, steam heaters, etc. The chief sent a telegram to his son in Chicago, saying that he had been sick, but was much better, and received an answer right away. The telephone broke him all up, and forced the first exclamation from him, and he laughed for the first time in many moons. The nephew was placed at an instrument in one room and Sitting Bull in another room, 100 feet distant. The chief listened, started, grinned, and then exclaimed: "Waukan" (evil spirit). In the composing room an accommodating proof-taker took proofs of various millinery cuts and other pictures, which elicited grunts of satisfaction from the old chief, and he carried off the pictures as great prizes.

THE country managers have called so persistently for a company playing M. H. Gillett's farce named "The Professor" that the Madison Square management have determined to put it upon the road again next season, with the author in the principal part, as before.

THERE are reports of wonderful excitement in California over the Mapleson opera. Four thousand people, it is said, were turned away from the doors when Gerster sang in "Faust," and the clamor for admission was so great that seats were arranged on the stage in the wings.

How Devil's Bridge Got Its Name.

An old sea captain of the Vineyard tells the following story to a Boston Globe reporter in relation to the name Devil's Bridge: "It was going when I was a youngster. Many years ago my father told me about the island being visited by the devil, and the people in those days believed what I am telling you. 'The old fellow,' said my father, 'landed on the east side. There, right over yonder—you see that point of land—well, that is where he first landed. He was seen several days by the few natives who reside on the southern side, when it is said he took his departure, and as a memento he left one of his footprints on the rock where the City of Columbus struck.' My father, I can remember, one beautiful summer day took me in his smack out to Devil's Foot Bridge and pointed out the place, which on a calm day can quite distinctly be seen, the footprint upon one of the most prominent rocks."

NEWS SUMMARY

Casualties and Kindred Items.

REV. HENRY MORGAN, a well known Boston preacher and lecturer, is dead.

A FIRE in New York destroyed the Electric Candle company's factory, causing a loss of about $300,000.

SIX children were poisoned near Meadville, Penn., by eating the fruit of a tree which they had tapped. Two of the little ones died.

JOHN JAY CISCO, a prominent New York banker, and for eleven years assistant United States treasurer at New York, died the other day aged seventy-eight years. His left an estate valued at $3,000,000.

THE Rhode Island Democratic State Central committee filled the vacancies left in the State Central by the resignation of Amasa Sprague and C. E. Gorman, by the nomination of Elisha Matthewson, for lieutenant-governor, and Francis L. O. Reilly for attorney general.

A BILL providing for the public whipping of wife beaters was defeated in the Massachusetts House.

JAMES PRATT, a seaman, arrived in New York a few days since on board a Pacific Mail steamer. He was the only survivor of a brig's crew of eight men who had been wrecked in the Gulf Stream. Pratt was second mate of the brig, and was rescued after almost incredible hardships, his companions dying in a small boat one by one.

JAMES NUTT, the slayer of Dukes, at Uniontown, Penn., has gone to Leavenworth, Kan., to take charge of his mother's farm.

A WILD scene of disorder occurred in the New York State assembly at Albany during consideration of the nine bills relating to New York city. For some time a terrific uproar prevailed, members yelling at the top of their voices, and the scene is said to have been unparalelled in the annals of legislation.

AUGUSTUS SCHELL, for many years a prominent figure in the social, business and political life of New York, ex-collector of that port, and during the Greeley campaign chairman of the national Democratic committee, died the other day in his seventy-second year.

BY the bursting of a dam about a mile and a half above Ansonia, Conn., an immense body of water was freed and swept down the valley with a deafening roar and a force which carried away everything in its path. Fortunately the people in the factories and houses in the course of the flood had received sufficient warning of the impending disaster to seek safety on high ground. The torrent that burst from the dam opening was five feet high, and about three hundred feet wide. A number of shops, dwellings and barns, and a stone arched bridge in Ansonia were carried away, and an estimated pecuniary damage of $300,000 was caused.

FIVE men at Clarion, Penn., started in a small rowboat with a large circular saw aboard. When passing over the big falls near the mouth of the Clarion river the boat capsised and Hamilton Walker, William Watson and David Fair were drowned.

AT a sale of Jersey cattle in New York eighty-two imported animals brought $49,300, or an average price of $601.97 for each animal. The sale was made noteworthy by the fact that $6,200, the highest price ever received for a Jersey animal at auction, was paid by the Hon. Henry L. Pierce, of Boston, for a cow four years old, by Stoke Pogis III., out of Bessy of St. Lambert. Mr. Pierce also paid $3,800 for a cow by Stoke Pogis III., out of Jessamine of St. Lambert.

DURING a fire near Boston a number of fancy pigeons, valued at $5,000, were roasted alive. One pair of a fancy breed had just been sold for $250.

DESIRE BOUDOIR, who returned to Dover, N. H., and pleaded guilty to killing a man, for which crime his father was awaiting sentence to death, was sent to State prison for three years.

BARNUM'S much talked about white elephant arrived in New York a few days since on an ocean steamer. He is described as a slate-colored animal, with pink spots.

THE pension appropriation bill, as reported by the committee on appropriations to the House, appropriates $20,884,400, and provides that any balance of the appropriation for the current fiscal year that may remain unexpended on June 30 shall be reappropriated. This balance is estimated at $60,000,000.

A PACKAGE of burnt money representing $3,600 was received by the United States treasury department, a few days ago, for redemption. It was the property of Thomas Dowling, a quarryman, living near Meacoma, Wis., and represented the savings of twenty-three years of hard work. His cabin was destroyed by fire on March 6, and with it all his money, which was in the form of greenbacks and national bank notes. The charred remains of the money was submitted to the examination of a committee of the treasury experts and all the legal-tender notes, to the amount of $1,950, were identified. They were redeemed at once. The remainder will be transmitted to the banks of issue for their action, and the result will be that the entire amount of the burnt money will be restored to its owner. This is only one of many cases of this kind acted upon by the treasurer.

FURTHER nominations by the President: David J. Brewer, of Kansas, to be United States circuit judge for the Eighth judicial circuit; Julius C. Burrows, of Michigan, to be solicitor of the treasury; Colonel David S. Stanley, Twenty-second infantry, to be brigadier-general; Major John M. Wilson, corps of engineers, to be lieutenant-colonel of engineers; Chauncey B. Sabin, of Texas, United States district judge, eastern district of Texas.

THE supervising inspector-general of steam vessels reports that 5,441 steamers were inspected during the calendar year ended December 31, 1883, being an increase of 276 over the number inspected the previous year. The number of officers licensed was 24,276, an increase of 1,907. The loss of property by accidents amounted to $9,998,818, an increase of $1,322,808. The number of lives lost was 177, which was 104 less than were lost the previous year.

A GREAT surprise was given to the Senate in the shape of a message from President Arthur nominating A. A. Sargent, United States envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Germany, to fill the same position in Russia as successor of the late Wheeler Hunt. The nomination was not even in with the message containing names of nominees for a large number of small positions, but was made the subject of a special communication; hence some of the Senators did not learn of the proposed transfer of Minister Sargent until the message was read before them. In the executive session, late in the afternoon, with many present, the nomination was confirmed, after [illegible] following it to a committee to consider and report. Mr. Sargent had been savagely attacked recently by the German government organs, and his relations with that government had become strained and unfriendly.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has sent to Congress a message recommending appropriations for the construction of naval vessels. He suggests that provision be made for the building of three new steel cruisers four gunboats, and the completion of the four double-turreted monitors. He suggests such action as will enable the government to construct its ordnance on its own territory.

PROMINENT veterinary surgeons, in consultation at Neosho Falls, Kansas, united in declaring that the trouble with the cattle in that State is not the dreaded foot and mouth disease.

A TORNADO near Columbia, S. C., demolished several residences and a large number of barns and outhouses, uprooted trees, and destroyed everything in its track. The storm extended into the adjacent county of Lexington, where great damage was also done.

GREAT damage to property has been done by the bursting of levees along the lower Mississippi, and many telegrams have been sent to Washington from the overflowed region appealing to the national government for help.

MORE than twenty levees along the lower Mississippi have given way, and the state of affairs was reported as the most disastrous known since the war. The breaks in the various levees let in large volumes of water, which overspread the country, inundated plantations, and ruined the cotton and sugar crops. The national government was appealed to for aid, as many people were left entirely destitute.

A NUMBER of persons were killed, many more were injured and great damage was done to property by tornados in portions of Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. In Kentucky alone the damage was estimated at $500,000.

SAN FRANCISCO has just experienced the severest shock of earthquake since 1868. The people were very much alarmed and rushed out of their houses. The shock lasted fifteen seconds, and several buildings were badly damaged.

A HEAVY fall in wheat at Chicago caused an excitement almost amounting to a panic. Nearly 100,000,000 bushels of wheat changed hands during the day.

DURING the recent heavy tornados Mrs. Braughton and two children were killed in a cabin at London, Ky., and a brakeman's neck was broken; at Budd, Ky., several persons were killed and many more injured, and at other points in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, the Carolinas and Georgia, more or less lives were lost and great damage was caused to property. Several small villages in the vicinity of Dayton, Ohio, were literally torn to pieces.

OPPOSITION to the sale of liquor in Kansas is well illustrated by an incident which occurred recently in Canton. A man named Harold opened a liquor store in that place on a Friday, and on Monday got into a quarrel with one of his drunken customers and was shot by the constable. A band of women entered his place on Tuesday and poured all the liquor into the street.

FIVE children of James Wilson (colored), living near Brunswick, Ga., ate pork for dinner, subsequently became ill and after lingering in great agony several hours died. Their parents claimed that they were the victims of trichina in the pork, and the planters in the county were much exercised in consequence. Many, however, were inclined to the belief that the children were poisoned by their parents, and this theory was strengthened by the fact that the parents persistently refused to divulge where the pork was obtained.

A GREAT crowd of 10,000 persons attacked the jail at Cincinnati in an attempt to lynch William Berner, whose trial for the self-confessed murder of William Kirk had ended in a verdict of mere manslaughter. An immense indignation meeting ended by the crowd's marching to the jail and attempting to force an entrance. The militia was called out, and in the firing which followed one man was killed and others injured. Such excitement which prevailed in Cincinnati has not been known there in a long time.

Sir Arthur Wellesley Peel, who succeeds Mr. Brand in the honors and emoluments of the Speakership of the English House of Commons, is the youngest son of the late Sir Robert Peel, who was twice Premier, and was born in 1829. The present baronet, Sir Robert Peel, elder brother of the new Speaker, is without a seat in the House of Commons at present, having been defeated in the conservative candidate for Carnarvonshire in July, 1880. He is a political free lance, liberal and conservative by turns, and is always changing his politics. He was such a spendthrift in early life that Premier Bennett, who had paid tens of thousands of his debts, tied up his estate as tightly as possible, and left his last remittance in a state of chronic impecuniosity.

SUMMARY OF CONGRESS.

Senate.

Mr. Harris moved to make the bill to admit Dakota into the Union as a State made a special order for the following Thursday. Mr. Vest, of Missouri, said the friends of the bill spoke of Dakota as an elysium, but he would be able to show that it was nothing of the sort, and that the conditions did not exist which would warrant its admission into the Union. Several Senators said they understood that the question of admitting Dakota was regarded as a political one. Mr. Harrison's motion was lost.... The rest of the day was given to debate on the bill to increase the salaries of district judges to $5,000 a year and on the education bill. Mr. Coke opposed the education bill, regarding it as centralization in its most concentrated form. Messrs. Vance, Biddleberger and others spoke in favor of it.

A bill was reported favorably for the readjustment of compensation for the transportation of mails on railroads.... A bill was introduced for the adjudication of pension claims.... The bill fixing at $5,000 a year the salaries of United States district judges was passed.... A joint resolution was passed providing for the payment of laborers in government employ the same wages for holidays as for other days.

The Senate passed the bill reported from the committee on Indian affairs for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the reservations to extend the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians.... Bills were introduced to establish a bureau of fine arts in the Smithsonian institution; to regulate the forms of bills of lading, and the duties and liabilities of ship-owners and others, and to provide for the sanitary inspection in Egypt of rags to be shipped to the United States.

The Senate passed Mr. Hawley's bill offering $25,000 reward for the recovery of the Greely party, with an amendment exempting the United States from any responsibility for the party undertaking the task.... Mr. Brown introduced a bill to require the payment of $35,555.42 in cash to reimburse the State of Georgia for expenditures made for the common defense in 1777.... Mr. Palmer, from the committee on woman suffrage, reported favorably a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution giving women the right to vote.

House.

Mr. Ellis asked and was refused consent to introduce a joint resolution appropriating $300,000 to be immediately available, to be expended to prevent the overflow of the city of New Orleans. Several members opposed the resolution on constitutional grounds. The resolution was lost by 95 to 115, but by unanimous consent it was reintroduced by Mr. Ellis and referred to the committee on appropriations.... Bills were introduced to promote the efficiency of the revenue marine service; providing a uniform rating for invalid pensions; to secure cheaper correspondence by telegraph; to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea; for the revision of the patent laws.

A bill reported back and passed; making it a felony for a person falsely and fraudulently to assume to be an officer or employed of the United States.... The House passed a Senate bill authorizing the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, found to be mineral lands, and to secure to that State the benefit of the act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture.

MR. DOWD spoke in favor of his bill providing for the retirement and recoinage of the trade dollars. The bill provides that until June 1, 1886, trade dollars shall be received at their face value in payment of all dues to the United States, and shall not be again paid out. Holders of trade dollars on the presentation of the coin to any treasurer or assistant treasurer will receive in exchange dollar for dollar, standard silver dollars of the United States. The trade dollars received in any national depository are to be recoined into standard dollars. The trade dollars are to be regarded and treated, when received at the mint, as silver bullion, and their bullion value shall be deducted from the amount of bullion required to be purchased and coined by the act of February 28, 1878. The bill was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. Miller, of California, reported favorably from the committee on naval affairs, with an amendment, the joint resolution authorizing the secretary of the navy to offer a reward of $25,000 for rescuing or ascertaining the fate of the Greely expedition..... A memorial was presented from the legislative assembly of Utah, protesting against legislation by Congress without full investigation, and making accusations against Governor Murray.... The Blair educational bill was debated, Mr. Hampton making an extended address in its support.

Mr. Anderson offered a resolution providing that Congress should adjourn on the 2d of June. It was referred to the ways and means committee.... At its evening session the House passed twenty-three pension bills. Among them was one giving a pension of $50 per month to the widow of Major-General James B. Steedman, and a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah E. E Seelye, who served as a soldier for three years under the assumed name of Franklin Thompson, and, when sick and about to be sent to the hospital, deserted to escape the detection of her sex.

BATTLE SCENES AT TEB.

How the False Prophet's Arabs Fought the British Soldiers.

A correspondent present at the battle of Teb, says: So hotly do the Arabs press forward that the troops pause in their steady advance. It becomes a hand-to-hand fight the soldiers meeting the Arab spear with cold steel, their favorite weapon, and beating them at it. There is not much shouting, and only a short, sharp exclamation, a brief shout, or an oath as the soldiers engage with their foes. At this critical moment, for the enemy are rushing up thickly, the Gardner guns open fire, and their leaden hail soon decides the matter. At this instant, Admiral Hewett who, with Mr. Levison, his private secretary, is present as a spectator, joins the Naval brigade and leads them on over the dead bodies of the Arabs, lying thickly strewn on their front, into the work, which proves to be but a bank of sand. Colonel Burnaby here has his horse shot under him, and a bullet passes through his arm. Still with the double-barreled fowling piece he carries he knocks over the Arabs who assail him. But they press on, and he is only saved from being speared by one of the Gordan Highlanders bayonetting an Arab who attacks him when both barrels of his gun are empty. Several fierce personal encounters take place as the troops rush into the entrenchments. The first feeling of nervousness has passed away, their blood is up now, and the enthusiasm of battle is upon them. More and more shrill the pipes skirl out, and the men are eager to close with the foe. As single Arabs rush down the brave soldiers step singly forward from the ranks and meet, bayonet to spear, in almost every instance vanquishing them by the bayonet alone, without firing. A soldier who had single-handed engaged two of the enemy would have got the worst of it had not Captain Wilson, of the Hecla, come to his aid and run one of his assailants through the body, breaking his own sword and receiving a wound across the face as he did so. Sharp as the fight is, it lasts but a minute or two after the troops have passed over the sand bank. The work contains one Krupp gun, which, of course, falls into our hands. The bush grows thickly all about where we are now formed up, and numbers of the enemy are lying concealed in it. These constantly leap to their feet and rush at us, singly or by twos and threes, with fanatical valor, often coming on till they fall dead almost at the muzzles of the rifles. During the halt the cavalry have moved round behind us, and we can now see them advancing toward a large mass of the enemy, who are making off in the distance. They are manifestly quickening their pace. Faster and faster they go; their sabres are flashing in the sunlight, and they dash into the mass of the enemy. Right through them they cut their way, and then turn sharp back again. The Arabs do not fly, but stand and fight stubbornly and gallantly, displaying as much courage as against the infantry. Again and again they are dispersed, but each time they gather together as the horsemen come on; and the cavalry, although cutting down many, go by no means scathless through them.

Old soldiers to whom I have spoken on the spot said they never met a more resolute foe in the course of all their service. The scene of the battlefield, which I again rode over on Saturday, justified this description of savage valor. The walls of El Teb are protected by two earth-works and a semi-circular line of entrenchments, including the rifle pits, which had been dug wide and deep behind every bush, and which each contained a number of spearmen. The entrenchments and pits were literally crammed with dead bodies, many already half buried in the sand. The object of the defenders was to spring up suddenly on the advancing line, and in the confusion caused by their sudden appearance and rush, to break inside the square. Had we advanced upon their front they might have had some chance of more or less partial success; but the Arabs attacked in their rear, were themselves surprised. Judging from what I saw, should think the estimate of 2,000 killed on the side of the enemy rather under than over the mark. The space inside the intrenchments was thickly strewn with bodies, especially about the few ruined brick buildings. Near the building which Colonel Burnaby helped clear with his double-barreled rifle charged with buckshot, I counted among a great heap of bodies those of seven boys, not one of whom was more than twelve. They fought as desperately even as the adults. Some time after the battle, and when the troops were searching about the inclosure, a youth lying unobserved among a crowd of dead and dying started up, and rushed with a drawn knife on two of our men, who, taken aback, ran for some distance, and then, turning around, shot him. The adventure caused a brief commotion in the camp, for more might be lurking unseen. At some distance outside an Arab sprang like a cat upon the back of one of our soldiers, and tried to cut his throat. An officer rushing up pistoled the Arab through the heart, barely in time to save the soldier's life.

A BRIGHT WOMAN DETECTIVE.

A day or so ago one of the most prominent and elegant ladies of the city went aboard an Illinois street car. By the time she was seated and had selected a nickel to pay her fare a well-dressed, good-looking man entered the car, and, seeing that she wished the change deposited in the box, received it from her for that purpose. The lady noticed that the well-dressed, good-looking gentleman dropped her nickel in the box, but dropped none for himself. She was, of course, surprised and disgusted at the meanness and dishonesty of the transaction. She saw the driver look several times at the box and then into the car, and she imagined he was looking at her. She was uncomfortable, and formed a resolution. When the car arrived opposite her residence she stopped it, and calling the attention of the driver, pointed out the well-dressed, good-looking gentleman, and said in his hearing: "I handed my fare to this gentleman and he put it in the box, but put in nothing for himself." The driver answered: "It's all right, Mrs.——; that's Colonel Johnson, the president of the street-car company."—Indianapolis Times.

A Robbers' Nest.

A very snug and strong robbers' roost was recently discovered by a couple of Denver citizens in a gulch near Webster, Col. They had been visiting in the neighborhood, and on returning home had lost their way, and in traveling about came across a cabin. In it was a rude table, some chairs, a large stove, a good supply of fuel, six loaded revolvers, cartridge-belts, and several spurs. They took possession of it for the night, and fastened the heavy door with a huge bolt that fitted into slots in the logs. About midnight they were awakened by sounds outside. The owners had returned. One of the men wanted to know of his companions who was in the cabin, and asked if he shouldn't leave the door open. The answer was that it was no use, as the door would stand as long as the cabin itself. About noon the next day the occupants ventured out, and going to the stable discovered several mail-bags that had been opened, and other evidences of highway robbery. HOW WE DO THINGS.

"I see it stated that the author of 'Kathleen Mavourneen' is starving in Baltimore.

"Don't believe it; the same report was published once before, and it turned out that he was not in great want, but only in very poor circumstances."

"But this time there seems to be some foundation for the rumor."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, it is given as a fact. Don't you think something ought to be done?"

"Indeed I do. I will this very day take steps toward starting a movement to get up a fund to erect a monument to his memory."—Philadelphia Call.

FULLY PREPARED FOR THE SITUATION.

"It is my duty to inform you," said the superintendent of a New England railroad, as one of the train conductors entered his presence, "that the salaries of all train men are to be cut ten per cent. with the beginning of the month."

"Yes, sir," was the calm reply.

"I am glad you take such a cheerful view of the situation."

"Oh, I've been expecting it for six months past," said the conductor. "I have put all my real estate in my wife's name, clapped a chattel mortgage on all my personal effects, and raised $200 on a bank-note which the indorser will have to pay. Make the old cut thirty per cent. if you want to, for this is the only time in my life I've been in a position to beat my creditors."—Wall St. News.

FAITH IN HER WORD.

A lady with a daughter of uncertain age, gave it out that she was only twenty. At a party one evening she was speaking of her daughter and a lady remarked:

"How old did you say Mary was?"

"Mary is just past twenty."

"Ah! I should think she was older than that."

"Yes, everybody takes her to be older than she is, because you see Mary has such quiet ways. Good evening, Dr. Jones," she said, as an old gentleman came up, "we were just talking of Mary, and the lady was quite surprised to hear me say she was so young; you know she is only twenty."

"Of course, madam, of course; for I have heard you tell it for the last ten years, at least, and I have every confidence in anything you would say."—Merchant Traveller.

CURRENT COMMENT.

CHARLES BARNEY, of Ashburnham, Mass., now 86 years old, had his life insured for $1,000 in 1846. Having reached the extreme limit of life, according to the table of mortality on which the insurance company does business, the president sent him the other day a check for the amount of his policy. It is believed to be the only case on record where a man has beaten an insurance company by outliving a death policy.

WE now make one-fifth of the iron and one-fourth of the steel in the world and we furnish one-half of the gold and one-half of the silver of the world's supply. Taking all the mining industries of the [illegible] the United States represent 36; Great Brittian, 33, and all other nations 31 per cent of the total. Anglo-Saxondom, therefore, represents 69 per cent of the mining industry of the earth.

THE Chicago Live Stock Exchange has resolved that there is no such disease as contagious pleuro-pneumonia in the United States, no foot and mouth disease in Illinois, Iowa or Kansas, and that at no time within twenty years have the cattle, hogs and sheep of this country been so healthy as now. It has also sent a delegation to Washington to lobby against all cattle disease legislation.

THE discussion of the red sunsets continues. Probably the volcanic dust theory has the largest number of followers. As a recent scientific writer expresses it, a tremendous volcanic eruption hurls into space dust, steam and gas, and this mighty mass hangs like a cloud over the earth. How long this dust is to envelope the globe is a question, but it is suggested that if the clouds owe their elevation to electrical repulsion there is no reason why they should not stay in the upper air for years, but if they are slowly settling to lower levels the action of the rain drops will drag them down

IN New York, Philadelphia, and other commercial centers, the merchants have inaugurated a war on the druggists; and physic has dropped fully forty per cent below the regular rates. The cut rates apply mainly to the patent medicines. The grocers and other merchants who are competing with the druggis s say that the average merchant has to be satisfied with five or ten per cent profit, and there is no reason why the druggist should reap any more. Of course the druggists are mad, but what can they do about it? The war may be only a flurry after all, or it may result in a permanent reduction in the prices of patent medicines. The matter will shape itself according to the laws of trade.

THE entire winter packing of pork in the west is 6,402,064 hogs, against 6,132,212 last year, a gain of [illegible] pounds, a decrease of 15.68 compared with last year. The decrease in the yield of lard per hog was 2.18 pounds. The pork production shows 278,858 pounds less than last year. Stocks of meat in the west, including barreled pork, were 113,000,000 pounds less than a year ago. Exports since November 1 are 47,000,000 pounds less than a year ago, and 145,000,000 pounds less than the average of the seven previous years reported. The outlook for hog supplies indicates about 15 per cent shortage for the summer. The total packing for the twelve months ending March 1 was 9,183,190 against 9,342,999 the previous year.

OUR preparations for a more efficient navy will cause the public to feel interested in the progress of Krupp's latest ventures in the gun line. Several trials have been made with Krupp's six inch guns, thirty-five caliber length. A target representing the sides of an iron man-of-war was constructed of ten-inch hard wood timbers, with iron plates seven inches thick on each side, making fourteen inches of iron and ten inches of wood. The range was 150 metres and the projectile passed entirely through the target and buried itself in the sand hill beyond. It is understood that Krupp is now at work on a gun that is expected to accomplish still greater results. It goes without saying that even the most heavily armed vessels cannot withstand guns of the Krupp stamp. In future ships of war will not be relied upon very largely in attacking a well fortified seaport strongholds.

CONSIDERING the quantity of tea used in this country, one would naturally suppose that our people would know something about tea, but the fact is, they know next to nothing. Most of our tea comes from China, but it is the inferior grades, the spurious stuff which has been artificially colored. The really good tea is either consumed in China or is sold abroad at fancy prices. The treasurer of Russia imports tea at $40 per pound, and it is a common thing for wealthy people to pay $10 per pound for it. When good tea is secured you should use one full teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot; boil the water in a clean kettle, and when it boils put the required quantity in a teapot and pour on the boiling water, allowing it to stand about fifteen minutes. Then pour into a dish which is kept to serve at the table. Never make the tea in anything but a china or brown stone pot.

WITH reference to the early life of Osman Digna, the Suakim correspondent of the London Times writes that he was originally a broker and trader, and principally a slave trader, in Suakim and Jeddah, where he received a severe financial blow, when, some six years ago, a British cruiser captured two slave dhows full of slaves on the way to Jeddah. Osman Digna's trade then fell from bad to worse, his house property in Suakim was all mortgaged, and he became hopelessly involved. Being of no great importance by birth, his selection by the Mahdi to lead a religious rebellion is attributed to the circumstance that Osman Digna met the Mahdi when forming a high estimate of his ability and character, acquired through successful trading. If this history be trustworthy, partizans for other objects than holiness are the key note of Osman Digna's character and motives, and it is quite at all probability that he will cast his goods and his position into the broader balance of battle. He must squander dollars, and in second himself believe the myths which he mendaciously spins to control his followers.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., APR. 17, 1884.

The carpet-bag, scalawag and ring-tailed nigger crew have been holding a convention and pow wow in Montgomery this week.

Speaker Carlisle receives the largest mail of any member of Congress. Mr. Morrison, Mr. Randall, and Perry Belmont follow in the order named.

The Lower House of Congress has passed the Senate bill which appropriates 46,000 acres of government land in Alabama to the University of the State.

Matherbe says there are only two beautiful things in this world —women and roses; and only two sweet things—women and melons. Whether right or wrong, Emerson thinks that Matherbe was afflicted with the "cramps" when that idea struck him.

An exchange pithily says: The citizen who rises in his seat when his name is called as juror and pleads a fireman's excuse, or any other exemption, invites the torch and unsheaths the knife which may deprive him of life or all life holds dear. Can anyone deny it?

The New Orleans Picayune says, "A great many clerkships and public offices now being filled with hoodlums, might with much more decency be held by women. A woman employed in an office would not be smoking a cigar with her feet upon a desk when a citizen visits the office for business or information."

It is just one mile between Sault St. Marie, Mich., and the Canadian village opposite, yet mail communication between the two points occupies ten days. A letter posted on the American side goes first to Detroit, crosses to Windsor, where it enters the Canadian mails, and is then sent over Canadian routes back to the Sault, reaching the Canadian office there in ten days from the time it started.

The New York Tribune last week referred to its "esteemed" contemporary, the Times, as "a common sewer from the nasty crimes of a Continent." This will give the "best people" a clever idea of the amenities of country journalism.—Phila. Evening Call.

The word "esteemed," as often used by the press, reminds us of a notorious liar who rushed up and said to another liar. "My esteemed liar you are a scoundrel."

Some new words have been lately introduced in England. "To peacock" is applied by the London Times to a parade of troops for show only, while Punch has given us the expression "to slum," Slumming is now a fashionable amusement. The Prince of Wales, who is good at many things, slummed lately in St. Pancras and Holborn, and was naturally much struck with the extraordinary difference that exists between the dens inhabited by the St. Pancrasians and his own Sandringham and Marlborough houses.

Chancery Court for this county convened on the 11th inst., Chancellor N. S. Graham, presiding. A question of unusual interest to the legal profession and the public generally was argued in the case of Moses Simons vs. James A. Dudley, et al., and which, we understand, has never been settled by the Supreme Court of this State. The tax collector of our county in 1875, owned a homestead in this county, which he afterwards sold to Mrs. Callens. By the law of the State the collectors bond is made a lien on all of his property from the date of the bond, and this lien has been construed to be a contract lien in the nature of a mortgage. By the constitution no mortgage of the homestead is valid, unless signed by the husband and wife, and acknowledged by them as provided by law. The question argued was whether a plea of homestead could prevail against a claim in favor of the State or county growing out of the default of the collector. This is a question of importance to all State officials whose bonds are made by statute or lien on their property, and it is well that the question is now to be settled. The case was argued by Wm. S. Thorington, Esq., of Montgomery, and W. A. Collier, Esq., for the complainant, and J. M. Falkner, Esq., of Montgomery, for the defendants. The Chancellor took the matter under consideration, saying that it was so interesting and important a question.

Our Insane Hospital.

An interesting letter is found in the New York Sun, of recent date, descriptive of our State insane hospital. We make the following extract from the letter, which shows what a model institution the hospital is, and how well the patients are cared for:

No mechanical restraint is used with the patients. Dr. Bryce burned the strait jackets twenty years ago. No punishment is permitted, and if the nurses are not liked by the patients, and there is good cause for the prejudice, they are sent away.

Patients are sometimes brought to the asylum tied or manacled, and are enticed into the building by being told it is a hotel or something of the kind. But they are promptly released by the doctor, who tells them the truth. He informs them that they are in the insane asylum, and have come to be cured, and that if they will submit to medical treatment and comply with the rules of the institution they will get well. They are then taken to a room, placed in charge of a nurse, and, after a quiet rest, are allowed to mingle with the other patients. Notwithstanding the great liberty allowed, there has been but one homicide or suicide in the establishment in twenty years.

After prayer the work bell rings. The utmost importance is attached as a remedial agent to systematic occupation. The patients are compelled to do nothing that is not congenial. All kinds of work are provided. There are work shops for the mechanically inclined, and there is a farm and garden for those who prefer that kind of labor. The women assist the attendants to keep the house in order. Every article of clothing is made by the attendants and patients. Sewing machines worked by water power, so as not to fatigue, are used. Some of the women affect only fancy work, others knitting or quilt patching. They soon find out that it is not the thing to be idle, and, unless ill, are ashamed to be unemployed. They have sewing bees, knitting bees, and many other devices to make the time pass pleasantly.

On every pleasant afternoon the nurses take the patients out to walk in the grounds of the asylum, and often beyond. For those who are feeble large airing courts are provided. For their amusement every possible arrangement is made. They have base ball and croquet grounds. Indoors they have a bowling alley, skating rink, and billiard tables. In the amusement hall they have a stage and scenery, for plays, charades and tableaux, in which the attendants and officers assist. Twice a week they have dancing. The editor of the newspaper which is edited and printed by the patients says of dancing: "This is an amusement particularly adapted to the insane." Stereopticon exhibitions, concerts, debates, recitations, all in turn help to make the evenings delightful.

Alabama Weather Service.

The Alabama weather service is something new for our State. P. H. Mell, Jr., at Auburn, is the Director. Mr. Mell says, in his review of the work for March, that he has succeeded in obtaining twenty-two observers in different counties of the State, his object being to obtain one in every county. Dr. W. E. Stewart, at this place, is the observer for Chilton. We find the following in a review of the weather for March, which has been sent this office:

March in some respects has been a remarkable month. Very heavy rain falls are reported from all sections of the State. Creeks and rivers have been unusually full; there have been washouts and overflows in consequence, damaging railroads, &c. Farmers are very backward with their crops, many having their seed, fertilizers, &c., washed away; the first planting in many places almost a failure.

The maximum rainfall was reported at Clanton, 12.75 inches, and the records from all the observers indicate an unusual fall of rain. The average precipitation for the whole State is 9.35. There was only an average of six clear days, and an average of twelve thoroughly cloudy days. Rain fell on an average of eleven days. The days on which rains were general, were the 4th, 7th, 8th, 12th, 13th, 18th, 19th, 22d, 23d, and 25th. The heaviest rains occurred on the 8th and 18th.

Severe Storm in Mississippi.

MEMPHIS, TENN., April 15.—A special to the Avalanche from Grenada, Mississippi, says: One of the severest wind and rain storms ever known occurred yesterday afternoon one mile south of here. Houses were demolished, trees torn up, fences blown away, and stock killed. The storm must have done considerable damage in other places. Only a few persons injured.

Verbena Views.

And now the happy season has arrived when the poor quill driver, in need of something fresh to fill out space, can turn to nature and write that "vegetation is booming."

What is the matter with our candidates? In the language of the sable voters they have not yet "announced" themselves. Chilton politics have got down to the point where it is considered safe for the candidate to plant plenty of corn before sacrificing himself on the political altar.

Several of our sports betook themselves to the banks of the Coosa last week. They reported a good time without exulting over their success.

Tax Assessor Smith was on his round last week. He reports politics dull throughout the county.

On every side we turn, the fragrance of flowers perfumes the mild Spring air. Verbena, as her name implies, presents a floricultural appearance.

We are pained to hear of the very serious illness of Mr. John Gardner. Last week he had a sudden attack of pneumonia which has developed into symptoms of typhoid fever.

Last Saturday evening the South bound accommodation train ran into the through freight, also South bound. The freight train was behind time, having been delayed at the Pratt mill, and was flagged down for orders when the accommodation came round the curve at full speed. The engineer of the freight tried to pull away, and the other engineer reversed his engine and whistled for brakes, but as his train was running very fast a collision was inevitable. The engine of the accommodation struck the caboose of the freight train, throwing it from the track, and was itself disabled by the shock, having the headlight and all the front completely demolished. As the accommodation engine was disabled, the freight engine pulled both trains down the road as soon as the wreck was cleared. None were injured; the engineer and fireman of the colliding locomotive jumped off just before the trains struck.

In addition to the above we learn of another accident above Cooper's, a few hours after the one at this place, in which two South bound freights were badly smashed. Trains were delayed several hours before the track could be cleared.

The first good rain in two weeks has just fallen and will make plowing somewhat easier. Early cotton is being planted, corn coming up and will soon require attention. Many farmers are not yet up with their work, but are still hopeful of good crops.

There was a murder out in the Little Mulbery neighborhood last week. I could not get any particulars. Sheriff may be able to give you some account. The murderer, I learned, is John Dickerson and the murdered a Mr. Presley.

BIJOU.

Calliervile Dots.

Old Winter has been lingering with her successor—consequently our farmers are later than usual with their crops; however, oats look well, and vegetables are coming on promisingly. Grazing is fine, milk and butter are more plentiful. By the way, this is a fine location for truck farming and dairying—so many mill and lumber hands near by.

Colds and coughs continue to annoy some of our citizens. Mrs. Crum and her son Pettus, have both been dangerously ill; but are again able to walk about.

Dr. Callier, with his little family (his good wife and her good mother) have moved into their little cottage. We all know that our Dr. is not only a kind, skillful physician, and excellent neighbor; but just such a hightoned, honorable and patriotic gentleman, as our county needs in the Legislature.

An excellent artist now gives pleasure to our society, and we have also a shoe-maker—who may lighten our shoe-bills somewhat.

Last week the accommodation train was boarded by a small, frisky, shabbily dressed man, who held out two dimes to the conductor, shaking his pockets, touched his ears and mouth, couldn't inform him where he wished to go, but by striking his breast and head, marking with a pencil, and pointing forward. 'twas guessed that he wished to go to Talladega Deaf and Dumb Asylum to learn.

Our venerable pastor, Rev. Mr. Mills is greatly afflicted with neuralgia.

Rev. Mr. Rudic filled his last appointment at Ebenezer church. After the sermon, our dormant Sunday school was aroused; then a collection of $75 made for the improvement of our house of worship.

DALLAS, TEX., April 15.—A dispatch from Brenham says a negro named Gibbs brutally murdered the wife of L. P. Moore, a prominent farmer of Burleson county, Saturday evening, because she would not allow him to sit, at the supper table with the family. Mr. Moore was not at home at the time of the murder, but returned shortly after. The whole community turned out in pursuit and on Sunday overtook Gibbs ten miles away and captured him after a fight, in which the negro was wounded. He was taken back to Moore's place where he was identified by Moore's children. Exasperated citizens chained him to a post and burned him. Gibbs was an ex-convict and considered a very bad man.

Call for a County Convention.

The voters of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county are requested to meet at the places of voting in their respective beats on Saturday, the 17th day of May next, to select by ballot delegates to a county convention to be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884.

The business of said convention will be to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before it.

The representation in said county convention, fixed upon the basis of the Gubernatorial vote of 1878, will entitle each beat to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

Beat 1—Mims X Roads	2
Beat 2—Providence and Jemison	6
Beat 3—Benson and Macedonia	4
Beat 4—Clanton	12
Beat 5—Verbena and Coopers	10
Beat 6—Kincheon	1
Beat 7—Maplesville	5
Beat 8—Dixie	5

The following named persons have been appointed as beat committees in their respective beats, to-wit:

Beat 1—H. C. Young, W. H. Marcus, D. H. Mullins.

Beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer, Chas. H. Smith, R. A. Miears.

Beat 3—J. L. Williams, David White, Seaborn Jones.

Beat 4—W. E. Stewart, J. M. Bivings, J. R. Jones.

Beat 5—G. L. Zimmerman, W. R. Scott, L. Moore.

Beat 6—J. A. Hathcock, J. R. Kemp, W. H. Mills.

Beat 7—Noah W. Foshee, W. S. Lawrence, W. J. Atchinson.

Beat 8—J. W. Broadhead, Thomas Parnell, Samuel Keyser.

The beat committees are charged with conducting the elections for delegates to the county convention.

It is suggested that in beats having two places of voting elections be held at each box for one-half the delegates allowed that beat.

It is earnestly requested that the beat committees exert themselves to get the entire vote of the party to attend the beat elections and express their wishes regarding the question of nominating candidates for the House of Representatives and for county offices.

By order of the committee.

S. T. BRITTLE, Chairman.

W. H. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

—:o:—

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

—:o:—

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilised man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and re-color all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Last Sunday was Easter Sunday—the close of Lent.

Mrs. Virginia Palmer has an interesting school near Pleasant Grove church near Mr. Anderson's saw mill.

A second hand iron safe and a pair of "Fairbank's Standard" scales are being offered for sale at a bargain by Mrs. A. M. Adams.

Mrs. Smotherman died in the Pleasant Grove neighborhood last week. She left a family and numerous friends to mourn her death.

All parties are hereby notified not to trade for a certain note given S. W. Freeman by me for $50 as I have a lawful off-set, and will not pay the note. J. F. MAULL.
Lomax, Ala., April 10, 1884.

Sheriff Garner went to Dadeville last week and brought back one Gentry, who is charged with carrying concealed weapons in this county some time ago, also with shooting across the public road.

Don't read a borrowed paper, it is an imposition upon the man who pays for it. If you think enough of a newspaper to read it when an opportunity offers, you should subscribe for it, and not deadbeat your neighbor. Don't be called a sponge.

Col. W. S. Thorington and ex-Gov. Thos. H. Watts, of Montgomery, were in attendance upon Chancery Court on Friday. The former gentleman is a prominent candidate for State Attorney General, and the people could not find a more suitable man for the position.

Prof. A. E. Burns and Ira Campbell having been appointed a committee by the Jemison Sunday school to inaugurate the organization of a county Sunday school convention. These gentlemen have a communication in this week's paper to which the attention of Sunschool workers throughout the county is invited.

Mrs. Benson and her son Joseph, two lunatics, were carried to the insane hospital, at Tuskaloosa, on Tuesday. They have both been confined in the asylum before. Mrs. Benson was discharged as recovering, but has since become violent. Joseph Benson is a young man twenty-seven years of age. During the freezing cold weather of last January, he escaped from the asylum and returned to his home in this county. His recovery is probable.

Dr. I. D. Lanier says that there will be frost on the 22d of April. He predicts this from observations made in the past, and says that if there is thundering on any night in March, there will be frost on the corresponding night of the succeeding month, the frost being heavy or light according as the thunder is heavy or light. There was heavy thunder on the night of March 22d. We advise our farming readers to mark this prediction.

Wiley Crook escaped from Morris Bivings & Duke's saw mill on Tuesday, where he was at work for the county serving a sentence passed at the last term of the circuit court. We understand that a reward is offered for his capture.

Mr. W. E. Tate, of Birmingham, visited this place Saturday to look out a location for a truck farm. He thinks this section the most desirable on the S. & N. road for raising and shipping early fruits and vegetables, and if he can get a place to suit, he will move to Clanton and engage in that business. We would advise parties having land to sell, not to hold it for big prices, but to sell it at reasonable rates. The improvements likely to follow sales will greatly enhance the value of what may remain unsold.

A Shower of Bugs.

A shower of beetles or potato bugs is the latest excitement at Jemison. It occured Monday night. A large number of the "critters" were collected by Dr. J. J. Dawson, and have been sent to this office as a contribution to our cabinet. The shower lasted an hour, and sounded as if hail was falling and beating upon roofs. An Irish potato plant was placed in the bottle containing the bugs, and was devoured with apparent relish. This has placed Jemison on another "boom" of course.

Attention Sunday School Workers.

The undersigned, having been appointed by the Jemison Sunday school, a committee to correspond with Sunday school officers and friends of the cause, with a view to affecting an organization, in Chilton Co., earnestly request all pastors and Sunday school officers throughout the county to report all Sunday schools in their respective communities, together with the name and address of the Superintendents of the same to Rev. R. A. Miears, Jemison Ala.

Please report at your earliest convenience; and the object of the call and method of proceeding will be more fully explained hereafter, either by letter to the officers reported, or through the columns of our county paper.

Very respectfully,
IRA CAMPBELL,
A. ERASMUS BURNS,
Committee.

Another Tragedy.

A terrible killing occured fifteen miles southwest of Clanton, on Monday last, John Dickerson shooting and instantly killing John Presley. Presley has been married about six weeks only, and it is said that it was his marriage which brought about a rupture between Dickerson and himself. Deputy Sheriff McKinney went out after the Dickersons. He arrested George Dickerson, who is now in jail. He was not able to find John Dickerson. George Dickerson, it is thought, was accessory to the killing.

LATER.—George Dickerson had a preliminary examination before Judge Callen, on Tuesday, and was admitted to bail in the sum of $300. Col. R. H. Knox, attorney for the defense, objected to his making bond, and preferred to sue out a writ of habeas corpus for the defendant's release. The defendant was accordingly returned to jail to await action upon the writ. We understand that he could have given bail without difficulty.

Jemison Jottings.

Spring with all its beauty and grandure is upon us at last. Flowers are blooming, the birds are singing, the plowman is driving and all nature inspires new life and energy into the hearts of the people.

Last Sunday being Easter the church at Jemison, at the time of service, was found beautifully decorated with vines and flowers of every hue and color all neatly and artistically arranged, and was at once recognized as the work of female fingers. Behind the throne was conspicuously displayed the ensign, "Christ is risen." All of which reflects much credit upon the Jemison ladies.

Mrs. Mary Smotherman, consort of Mr. Sutton Smotherman, died on the 11th inst., of pneumonia. She leaves a devoted husband and three sweet little children. Farewell dear Mary, thou hast left the sinful earth and goes to be a guest with the angels in the celestial mansion above.

Mr. Pendleton Bean is moving the brick business and with his vim and energy will doubtless make a success of it. ONE.

A Kentucky Lynching.

MT. STERLING, KY., April 15.—Fifty masked men went to Jackson, Breathitt county, Wednesday night, and took Henry Kilburn, (white) Ben Strong (colored) who were confined in jail there and hanged them. Kilburn was charged with the murder of Wm. Sharp last January, and Strong was suspected of being concerned in the same murder. Notice was printed on one of the victims stating that all perpetrators of such crimes would receive like punishment. Kilburn had killed 8 men.

PROHIBITION NOTICE.

Probate Court of Chilton County—Special Term, April 14th, 1884.

Present and presiding, H. J. Callen, Judge of Probate. Whereas, at a special election held in Beat No. 3, of said county, on the 8th day of April, 1884, under an act entitled "An Act to authorize the Probate Judge of Chilton county, to order elections in certain cases to determine whether spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, shall be sold, given away, or otherwise disposed of in said county or in any beat or incorporated city or town therein." Approved February 28th, 1881. Under an order made and entered in the premises on the 29th day of February, 1884, it appearing to the Judge of Probate that said election was in all respects duly advertised for the time prescribed by law, that the same was in all respects fairly conducted, and it further appearing to the Judge of Probate that at said election, so held, from the returns made thereof in accordance with the statute in such cases, made and provided, that prohibition received one hundred and four votes, no prohibition received fifty votes, there being a majority of the votes cast in favor of prohibition, the sale, giving away or otherwise disposing of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors was prohibited anywhere within the limits of Beat No. 3 in said county.
H. J. CALLEN,
Judge of Probate.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.
The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:
1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Averse to exertion of body or mind, Dizziness of head, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three avenues of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.
IN PERILS LIKE A NEW MAN.
"I have had Dyspepsia, with constipation, for years, and have tried many of the kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the first that have done me any good. They have cleared me out wholly. JOURNALISTIC COLLAPSE.

s only a newspaper—so men said—
enture ended, a newspaper dead.
s they chatted on in a careless way,
ng that papers were failing each day.
they little thought of the hope and pride cked and crushed when the newspaper died.

d they did not think of the aims so high,
of the aspirations bright as the sky.
d they never dreamed of the pain and woe at surged through his heart when the paper must go.
'tis never known in the world of men
at agony haunts a poor editor's den.

s paper he viewed with a father's pride,
d loved it as men do their chosen bride.
r its life and weal he had toiled when still y the sleeping world like a frozen rill.
had studied and delved for a sentence new,
at would shine with the luster of sun-touched dew.

nd his thoughts soared off on the wings of bliss,
nd his smile grew as soft as an angel's kiss
Then the printed sheet of his own command
e first had held in his eager hand.
nd his bosom thrilled with a touch of pride
Then he saw perfection on every side.

nd his heart grew light, for his faith was strong
s the waves of the sea when they dash along
But clouds came over his summer sky,
And the chilling winds of doubt swept by,
And the editor's cheek grew wan and pale,
For he felt that his newspaper venture might fail.

Yet he toiled away, and the world—for him—
Meant four low walls and an office dim.
With windows small—and a dusty floor—
And a broken hinge on the creaking door,
And he thought of the old-time martyrs, when
He climbed the stairs of his dreary den.

He had struggled bravely—without avail
For now the paper was going to fail.
The printers struck, and the harsh blow broke
The editor's heart by the force of its stroke.
He yield at last—every resource ended—
And wrote this sad epitaph: "Paper Suspended."

Only a newspaper? aye, there was more
Of heart-ache and grief than ever before
Found place in a life, and the editor wept
Sad, silent tears while the careless world slept,
Only a newspaper! yet with its life
Went hope and ambition and strength for all strife;
And there, like the blood on a battle-field red
An editor's great aspirations lay dead!

MRS. GEORGE E. DUGAN.

In an Open Boat.

A STORY OF THE SEA BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

"My name is William Pearce. I have used the sea for above eight-and-twenty years, have sailed in all kinds of ships in all sorts of capacities—boy, ordinary seaman, sail-maker, bo'sun's mate; crossed the Atlantic seventeen times, and been round the world eight; been ship-wrecked thrice; likewise overboard during seven hours of darkness, and picked up at daybreak with my head in a life-buoy; know pretty nigh the best and the worst of the weather that's to be found at sea; and am therefore capable of taking my oath to this, that of all the bad jobs that ever I was in, or that ever I heard of any other sailor being in, there's nothing to beat the sufferings us men of the schooner Richard Warbrick had to endure when the foundering of that vessel obliged us to take to the boat.

"The schooner sailed from Runcorn with a cargo of coal for Plymouth. She was twenty years old, and a trifle over a hundred tons burden. There were five of a crew, and nothing particular happened until we were abreast of the Bristol Channel, when there blew up a heavy gale of wind from the east'ard. There's no call to describe it; it was of the regular kind, full of wet, and raising a sea a night too big for a vessel of one hundred tons pretty nigh chock-a-block with coal and with twenty years of hard use in her hull. However, we scraped through the gale, and two or three more that followed fast, until one morning we were somewhere betwixt the Scilly Isles and the Cornish coast. It was dark, thick weather, blowing and raining hard. the sea rough, bitter cold—as you may calculate it was, the month being January—and everything invisible that was more than half a mile off. The wind was east and north, and we were ratching along under very small canvas, when, being turned in, as it was my watch below, and the Land o' Nod close aboard, I was roused up by a loud cry on deck and a tremendous crash. I tumbled up as fast as ever I could pelt, and found the schooner going down and the men getting the only boat we carried overboard. It was no time for questions. You could feel the vessel settling under your feet, just like standing on soft mud and sinking in it. The seas were washing over the deck, and growing heavier as her bulwarks sank lower. There was nothing but white water to be seen on the starboard bow—no rocks, nothing showing above the froth; but I didn't want any one to tell me that we had run foul of the Seven Stones. There was no time to do more than launch the boat and roll into her. Daly was the last man in, and scarce had he jumped when the schooner plunged clean out of sight, going down like a deep-sea lead, so suddenly that it took my breath away.

"There's no sensation worse than that a man feels when he looks for the ship he's been forced to abandon and finds her vanished under the sea. The ocean never seems so wide as then. The whole world appears to be made of water. Sailors are a class of men little given to talking; and when they come clear of such jobs as this they say next to nothing about it, and so people think that either they're men without the capacity of feeling, or else their sufferings were not equal to what might be supposed. Had people who take these views been in that boat along with us, they'd look sharp in altering their opinions. The suddenness of the disaster—our being one moment safe, and the next tossing on the sea in a life boat, with the schooner gone, nothing saved but what we stood in, not a morsel of food nor a drop of drink of any kind, the wind blowing fit to freeze the eyes out of our heads, every mother's son of us soaked to the skin, and drifting fast away toward the Atlantic—took our senses away for a spell. We sat holding on, and staring like daft men. The captain was the first to rally.

"He called out, 'A bad job; it's a bad job, lads!' several times, and then said, 'No use letting her drive too fast. We mustn't let her blow away into the Ocean;' and with that we lashed the two oars to the painter and flung them overboard.

"This brought her head to wind and slowed her drift; but, for all that, every blow was carrying us farther and farther toward the open sea, and away from the Scilly Isles and the Cornish coast, which were our best chance, so that all the hope that was left us was being picked up by a passing vessel. Yet there could be no worse month in the year than January for that likelihood. How long were the gales and the frost going to let us last? We were far to the nor'ard of the fairway, in a part of the sea that every vessel was bound to give a wide berth to. The weather, as I have said, was so thick that you couldn't see half a mile off; and though of course it was sure to clear in time and open out the horizon, so that vessels could have a view around them, the question was, Where would we be when it came on fine?

"Unlike a good many others who have gone through such dreadful messes as this, our sufferings began the moment we tumbled into the boat. In the lowest latitudes that ever I was in I never felt such cold. Had the water been fresh our clothes would have froze into coverings of ice. The air was full of spray, and squalls of sleet came rolling up. We sat in the bottom of the boat in a lump, to keep her steady, and for the shelter of one another's bodies, and those who were to windward—that is, in the fore-port—would shift from time to time, and others take their place. We had no mast nor sail, nothing but the two oars we rode to. It was a Monday, and all through the daylight we sat lifting our eyes above the gunwales, and trying to pierce the haze for a vessel. It was blowing about half a gale of wind, and it kept steady. Now and then we'd ship a dose of water, and bale it out with our caps; but it kept our feet soaking, and I reckon it was worse than being without boots at all. The boat did well, and the oars were a kind of breakwater, and helped her. After four in the afternoon the night drew on. We never could get used to the darkness. The daytime was bad enough, but the night made our sufferings maddening. The wind, when the sea was black, would take the feel of solid ice. We couldn't see one another, and that made talking a kind of foolishness; and so we never spoke—which caused every one to feel himself a lonely man upon the sea. Likewise the noise of the water would sound stronger. In the daytime I took no notice, but at night I'd find myself listening to the crying of the wind up in the dark, and the hissing that rose all over the ocean from the breaking of the waves.

"I don't know what my mates did; but that first night I never closed my eyes, never tried to shut them, never thought of sleep. I saw the dawn come, but the haze was too thick to let the light show on the horizon; it was overhead as well as around when the morning broke; there was no darkness that you'll find hanging in the west at daybreak. Indeed, I believe the sun was up above the sea before any light came, so thick it was. All the men were awake, and dreadful they looked, as of course I did. One of them was named Burke, I noticed him at once, and thought he was dying. He lay athwartships, with his back against the starboard side of the boat, and there was a strange working in his fingers, like the movement of a woman's hands opening a skein of thread.

"The captain said, 'For God's sake look around, lads, and see if there's anything in sight.'

"The sea ran high, and made it dangerous for any of us to stand up, for fear of capsizing the boat; so we hung over the gunwale, with our chins on a level with it, and stared into the driving smother with all our might; but there was nothing to be seen but the breaking seas when we were hove up, and the water standing like walls on either hand when we dropped into the troughs. All at once Burke sat up, and began to sing out for a drink of water. He talked as if he believed we had it and wouldn't give it, which was the first sign of his insanity. The captain tried to pacify him, speaking very kindly, and seeking to cheer him.

"'We have outlived a day and a night,' said he. 'Keep up your heart, mate; we may have a thousand-ton ship under us before it comes dark again.'

"But Burke kept on crying for water, saying that he was dying for it, and pointing to his throat; and then, falling on all fours, he puts his face to the salt-water washing about in the bottom of the boat and sucked up several mouthfuls. Well, it seemed to do him no hurt, and he lay quiet. Soon after this I spied something knocking about in the sea a few fathoms astern, and called the skipper's attention to it. He said it was one of some kegs of butter that had been aboard the schooner, so we pulled the oars in and dropped down to it and picked it up. We broke it open and ate the butter in fistfuls, being mad with hunger; but it was as salt as brine, and the effect of it was to make our thirst raging. The knife we had used to open the keg lay in the bottom of the boat, and Burke, on a sudden turning over seized hold of it, jumped up, and fell upon the captain. He hit him once, but the knife didn't pierce through the thick jacket the skipper had on, and before he could raise his hand again we dragged him down and kneeled upon him.

"There was no worse part in all that dreadful time than this. The madman's face was a terrible sight; almost black it was. He snapped about him with his teeth, and his cries and curses were things it brings the sweat upon my face to talk about. Think of our situation; mad with thirst ourselves and struggling with a madman, a killing north-easter blowing like knives through our frozen bodies, the sea leaping and roaring around us, and nothing between us and the bottom but the little old boat we were in. We were too weak, and in too much suffering ourselves, to remain holding the madman down, and finding him quiet we let go, and squatted one close to another for warmth; but scarcely had we hauled off from the poor wretch when he jumps up and throws himself overboard. 'Mind!' shouted the skipper—'one's enough!' fearing that if we all got to the side Burke had leaped from we should upset the boat. I was the nearest, and as he came up close I leaned over and got him by the hair, and dragged him into the boat. He was pretty nigh dead, and gave us no more trouble.

"Well, sir, the night came down a second time, finding us living but without the looks of live men. I made sure I should never see another daybreak. My thirst was not so sharp as it had been; but I don't know whether the dull throbbing in my throat, the kind of lockjaw feeling in my mouth, the burning in my tongue as though it were a lump of hot iron, was not more torturing than when the craving was fiercer. All night long it blew a strong wind, with now and then a squall of sleet and rain, and hour after hour two of the men, Parsons and Daly, were groaning in the bottom of the boat. When the light came I looked to see who was alive, my eyes falling on Burke, I called out: 'Dead!' The captain leaned down and felt him, and said: 'Yes, he's gone. He's the first. God have mercy upon us!' and catching hold of my shoulder he stood up to search the sea, but the haze was as thick as it had been all the time, and he threw himself down with his hands over his face. Presently, looking at the body he said: 'We must bury him; but first, my lads, let us say a prayer for him, and for ourselves.' We all knelt while the captain prayed, and when he had done we lifted the body and let it go overboard.

"The madness that thirst creates broke out strong in Daly and Parsons when the body was gone, and down they dropped as Burke had, and lapped up the salt-water in the bottom of the boat as dogs would. The captain implored them not to drink, but they never heeded him or me, who likewise entreated them. However, no harm seemed to come of it. Well, sir, there's no need for me to describe that Wednesday nor our third night in that open boat. Thursday morning came, making the fourth day, and to our joy the weather cleared, the wind shifted and moderated, and the sea went down. We got the oars in, rigged up one as a mast, and two of us having oil-skin coats on, we joined them so as to form a sail, made a yard of the other oar, and putting the boat before the wind, which was blowing a light breeze from the south'ard, headed, as the captain judged, for the Irish coast. All the day long we kept a wild lookout, as you may reckon, for a passing ship, but never once, not in the farthest distance, did such an object heave in sight. We might have been sailing in the middle of the Pacific. Nature in us was almost numbed. We had come to such a pass that we were too faint and exhausted to feel the craving of hunger and thirst. At least I can speak for myself, and it's in that way I account for my suffering less at the end than I did at the beginning of the dreadful time we went through. It was still cold, but nothing like the bitter cold of the gale and the heavy seas and squalls. We reckoned by the sun that the wind hung steady, and we let the boat slip before it; that was all that could be done. If we were to sail at all we were bound to keep the breeze over our stern, seeing there was nothing to draw but a couple of oilskins secured to the oars.

"But the coming on of Thursday night was like the bitterness of death itself, sir—cold it was. All day long we had looked upon sighting something before the sun went. Every hour we had hoped, and prayed, and believed would heave up some sort of vessel to come to our rescue; and, therefore, when it drew up black, only a few stars among the slow clouds, and we were brought face to face with another long winter's night, my heart failed me altogether; I felt that there was a curse upon us, and that we were doomed men, singled out to die of famine, the most cruel of deaths, because the longest. Think of ninety-six hours in an open boat, in January, in the Chopsa, north-east gale blowing most of the time, with never a morsel of food except the salt butter, and no drink but the salt water washing in the boat! And yet when the Friday morning came we were still alive, the captain steering, doubled up with faintness and the cold, his knees against his mouth, and his head lolling for want of strength in his neck; Daly and Parsons lying still as dead men under the thwarts; and me in the bows, too weak and broken-hearted even to cast my eyes around the sea to notice if there was a vessel in sight.

"The morning passed; the afternoon passed. Were we to go through another night? The sun was within half an hour of his setting when Parsons, who was leaning his breast on the gunwale, stood upright and pointed. His mouth was full of froth, and as he tried to speak the foam flew out of his lips, but no words he spoke; it was naught but a kind of death-rattle in his throat. We all looked in the direction he pointed to, and saw a large sailing vessel heading right down for us. How we watched her! all of us standing up, never speaking, and only moving with the roll and toss of the boat. It took her an hour to approach us, and then she hove us a line; but her people had to sling us aboard. None of us could move. Nothing but the excitement of seeing her had allowed us to stand. The moment the line was in the boat and we were alongside, we all became as helpless as babies.

"The vessel's name, sir? She was an Austrian bark Grad Karlovak, commanded by so humane a man that I feel fit to cry when I think of him and his kindness to us poor, miserable, shipwrecked English sailors. That's the story, sir, or as much of it as there is any call to relate. Five days and four nights in the month of January in an open boat, most of the time blowing heavily! The tale's known at Plymouth—it's known at Runcorn—it is known to Mr. Hopkins, the agent of the Shipwrecked Mariner's Society at Plymouth. And I'll tell you somebody else it's known to sir—some one as 'll swear to every word of it, and that's me."

PREMATURELY BURIED.

The Sad Fate of a Young Girl Who Was Supposed to be Dead.

A sensation has been created in Dayton, Ohio, by the discovery of the fact that Miss Hockwalt, a young lady of high social connections, who was supposed to have died suddenly on Jan. 10, was buried alive. A local paper says:—The terrible truth was discovered a few days ago, and since then it has been the talk of the city. The circumstance of Miss Hockwalt's death was peculiar. It occurred on the morning of the marriage of her brother to Miss Emma Schwind at Emanuel's Church. Shortly before 6 o'clock the young lady was dressing for the nuptials and had gone into the kitchen. A few moments afterward she was found sitting on a chair with her head leaning against a wall and apparently lifeless. Medical aid was summoned in, Dr. Jewett who, after examination, pronounced her dead. Mass was being read at the time in Emanuel's Church, and it was proposed to postpone the wedding, but Father Habne thought best to continue, and the marriage was performed in gloom.

The examination showed that Anna was of excitable temperament, nervous, and affected with sympathetic palpitation of the heart. Dr. Jewett thought this was the cause of her supposed death. On the following day the lady was interred in the Woodland. The friends of Miss Hockwalt were unable to forget the terrible impression and several ladies observed that her eyes bore a remarkably natural color and could not dispel an idea that she was not dead. They conveyed their opinion to Annie's parents and the thought preyed upon them so that the body was taken from the grave. It was stated that when the coffin was opened it was discovered that the supposed inanimate body had turned upon its right side. The hair had been torn out in handfuls and the flesh had been bitten from the fingers. The body was reinterred and efforts made to suppress the facts, but there are those who state that they saw the body, and know the facts to be as narrated.

ADVICE TO A YOUNG MAN.

LET GAMBLING IN STOCKS AND WHEAT AND PORK ALONE.

The Chances Are It Will Cause You to Wake up With a Headache if You Do not.

[From the Milwaukee Sun.]

A young man writes as follows: "I am a book-keeper in a wholesale house, on a salary of twelve hundred dollars a year, and I have five hundred dollars laid up. I want to make some money, and I have thought some of speculating a little in wheat or pork. I know several young men in my position who have made quite a little money speculating, and I have been tempted to invest, several times, but have not yet been able to get up courage to take my five hundred dollars out of the bank and put it in the hands of a commission house. What would you advise me to do? I have guessed on the market several times, and have guessed right, and if I had put my money on my guesses, I would have made considerable. Now, tell me, honestly, because I know you have speculated, and know all about it."

Young man, go and look at your five hundred dollars, and see if it is there yet. Ah, it is all safe, is it? Looked sort of good, didn't it? Made you feel proud when you saw it, proud that you had earned it by hard work? Well, if you had twice the amount, won at gambling, or in wheat speculations, you would not think half as much of it as you do of this first five hundred dollars. You don't ever think of spending this money foolishly. It represents to you hard work coined into dollars. If you had accumulated it without work, in speculation, and it came easy, you would be looking for a horse that could beat the crowd on the avenue, in less than a week. You would be spoiled if you accumulated money easy, and ruined if you lost your five hundred. You keep right on keeping books, and keeping them well, and forget that five hundred except to draw the interest regular, or unless you see a piece of first-class solid property that is offered cheap. But don't you put a dollar on wheat or pork, expecting to win, for you will lay down your bundle sooner or later, and wake up with a headache. This is not the advice of one who ever speculated a dollar, or who ever will, but one who has been watching those who do speculate for fifteen years. Not one in a hundred of them but have lost. Those who have won are no better off, because they have worn themselves out watching the market and cursing their luck. It is a business that should only be done by rich men for amusement. The rich can lose and not feel it, though some of them kick pretty hard when they lose. But the poor, those who are depending on their labor, either of hands or brain, should never indulge in an amusement that makes even the rich wish they were dead. You can take a hundred dollars and go to a faro bank, and guess on the deal, in your mind, with your hand on your money in your pocket, and you will guess right very often, but if you put your money down, the majority of guesses will be against you, and the commission the bank takes will soon eat up your hundred dollars. If you bet a dollar on each card, and won half your bets, and lost the other half, it would only be a matter of time when the bank would have all your money, and you would have the experience. Without arguing that speculation in options is anything like a faro bank, though many speculators will tell you it is, the result will be the same, only the commission has to be paid on every deal, whether you win or lose. If you make a deal and win, you pay the gentlemanly commission man his commission. If you lose on the deal, he is not going to work for nothing, is he? Of course not. The faro bank only takes a commission when you win, which shows that the faro banker is not as good a business man as he ought to be. If the Sun is mistaken about commission being charged on losing deals, it is willing to be corrected. Anyway, young man, what you want to do is to forget that there is any chance for you to engage in speculation, for if you go into it, you will curse the day that you did. Now, don't ask any more questions, but go on posting up those books.

White Goods for Summer.

The midwinter holidays are but just passed, says Harper's Bazar, yet the furnishing stores have already turned their attention to preparing the white dresses of cotton and linen goods that are to be worn in midsummer. Ladies who prepare their simplest dresses in advance of each season by the help of a seamstress are advised to buy plain sheer white muslins, with but little dressing, as they are ready for the needle, and these form the bulk of the white goods purchased by large stores that make a specialty of white suits. French nainsook and the sheerest mull, which is far lighter than nainsook, are used for the nicest dresses, while for less expensive dresses the so-called India linen is chosen; this India linen is really cotton of firm threads that are so irregular that they resemble linen, and are quite as durable; it has taken the place of the poorer Victoria lawns and the bishop's lawn formerly used. White satteens are largely imported, and are greatly improved by being made of lighter weight than the thick jean-like satteens of last year. For those whose complexion will permit the use of thick white goods, and who do not find them too warm, satteen will take the place of pique, and will be used for children's dresses and walking coats, as well as for ladies' suits. Some checked and dotted white satteens are seen, while others have blocks, stripes, or Greek squares, or lace-like designs, or damask patterns, or else corded to imitate ottoman reps. Among the novelties are corded mulls with fine or with thick cords in bars, making a strong fabric, and also mull with corded stripes, but experience teaches that thick and thin stripes together in wash goods do not wear well. Newest of all are the large plaids, like Scotch patterns, in mull, yet all of pure white; these with the corded goods will be used for afternoon dresses, trimmed with embroidery or with lace. Piques for children's dresses are repped, and some have embroidery upon them. Checked nainsooks and barred muslins made in this country are shown at low prices, and are excellent copies of English goods. Lace-like stripes and blocks are in favor on white English lawns. Tucked nainsook is largely imported for skirts of children's dresses; these have clusters of tucks done by machine, not woven in, and a hem of suitable width is along one selvedge.

There is a demand for two scales of prices for labor—one for temperance men, and one for drinkers. Oh, yes! You drinkers think you ought to be paid twice as much as we temperance men, because it costs you twice as much to live.—Phila. Call.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

There was a time, though far removed from ours,
But this as truth all histories declare,—
When infants decked the lion's mane with flowers,
And peace and love were regnant everywhere.
Beauty no bought or borrowed charms did wear,
Put hardily her rounding form displayed,
While the rich glowing cheek and rippling hair
No more might crave of artificial aid
Than does the wild-wood rose, or ferns in forest shade.

A strength gigantic nerved the limbs of men,
Labor was pastime, hardships moved a smile,
No hollow coughs disturbed night's stillness then,
No thoughts of gloom were bred by morbid bile.
And life was lengthened out a wondrous while;
The strong man stood for centuries in his pride,
Rugged as is the peaked Egyptian pile,
Till by descendants girt on every side,
His blessings calm he gave, ere painlessly he died.

This was the Age of Gold;—but how its end was wrought, they tell this strange and mythic tale:
A youth, resigned a lonely life to spend,
Saw to his door wing-footed Mercury sail,
Leading a girl whom lilies of the vale
Could not in fresh-bloom beauty emulate:
Nor did the fair Pandora feign to quail
When Mercury told the raptured youth that fate
To him this charmer gave, to be his wedded mate.

A bridal present in her hands she bore,—
A box, of quaint and exquisite design,
Which when her husband oped,—Oh, what a store
Of ills rors did that casket dire enshrine!
For from it forth flew each disease malign
That ever since on human frames has preyed,
And, spreading o'er the earth, did Man consign
To countless agonies that should invade
Each vital source, till all his stalwart strength decayed!

Then must the weakened frame and shortened life,
Sad legacies!—to all his after race descend,
Till now existence is but constant strife
Against a host of ailments without end,
As still each shattered bark we strive to mend.
The Iron Age, that with Pandora came,
Does yet o'er earth its grinding rule extend,
And sickness joins with poverty to tame
Souls that might else a place of pride and honor claim!

But when had flown forth all the killing woes
That in Pandora's fatal casket lay,
Lo!—from its depths released, sweet Hope arose,
As breaks through sable clouds a sun-lit ray,
And as she rose, she sang, "Mourn not for aye!
Some balm shall yet for all these pangs be found.
Not with vain show do Nature's stores display
These trees and herbs that beautify the ground,
Since in th m lurk the charms to make your sick ones sound!"

To find the balm pledged in this promise dear,
Were many hearts through many ages fired,
Until, to search our country's forests here
A young physician came, with soul inspired,
And found at last, 'midst secret shades retired,
The herbs and roots that had neglected grown,
And nurtured in their veins the boon desired,
While o'er them many a summer's moon had shone,
And many a wintry snow these treasures had bestrown.

Long used to ponder o'er the ills of Man,
What nature now in Pierce's bosom rose!
For he had marked the source from whence began
The worst and deadliest of our body's woes.
Anatomy's keen knife did well disclose
Wi at organ, from its duty warped away,
Becomes the spring from which envenomed flows
The principle of sickness and decay.
Though by a thousand names its work we may portray!

The Liver, formed to keep Life's ruby tide
Cleansed of each taint, and play a guardian's part
By drawing each corrupting germ aside,—
Was now compelled, by fell Disease's art,
To prove a traitor to, and upon the heart
And panting lungs, a poisoned stream to pour,
Op ng the way for dread Consumption's dart,
And fatal stings of many an ailment more,
Thus bidding countless homes their slaughtered hopes deplore!

Thence come the wasted form, the sallow cheek,
The embittered tongue, and often-aching head,
And hence the livid face, with hectic streak
Displayed as Nature's danger-signal red.
Hence, over many an else fair visage spread
Unsightly blotches and eruptions vile,
Or hideous Scrofula does horror shed,
Killing Love's glow, and freezing Friendship's smile.
Or the scorched heart consumes with black and burning bile!

At once Pierce in his blest Discovery saw
That which the very root of all should find,
And, by the workings of unerring law,
Drive out the foe that thus life undermined,
And with benignant force, and wisdom kind,
The shattered main-spring of our frames repair.
That bile no longer, like a giant blind,
Might mischief work, but his true part should bear
To make this mortal mould strong, vigorous and fair.

This remedy our trembling hearts shall arm
Against Malaria's fiend, though wide his reign,
For small would be his power to work us harm
Did not some drops of poison in each vein,
Traitors in our own citadel, remain.
Pure blood and healthful bile shall interpose
Celestial shields, while on our brows in vain
His foetid breath the marsh-bred demon blows,
For these have proved his most victorious foes!
Here rescue comes to those whose bodies thrill
Beneath the Ague's keen consuming touch,
While scorching fever and congealing chill
Alternate wring the victim in their clutch.
The healing aid, so often sought for such,
Is here at last, and, by our swamps and streams,
Rest comes for those who have endured so much,
And for their fitful sleep, with hideous dreams,
Shall slumbers sweet prevail, till break each morning's beams!

Thus do we foil Consumption's slow advance,
That o'er Columbia stalks, with stern control,
For oft the ills we've touched, with speedy glance,
Conclude in this, their dark and fatal goal.
And with most joy it shone on Pierce's soul
That here he smote his country's chiefest foe,
And quelled that malady that of the whole
Dark list did darkest its death record show,—
A Hydra, all whose heads he lopped at one brave blow!

Now, then, the new-found remedy to name;
Perhaps the choice, at first, perplexing seemed
To the discoverer's brain, till, like a flame,
"The Golden Medical Discovery" beamed
Before his vision, and was worthy deemed
To herald to mankind that precious meed
That should o'er other potions be esteemed
As gold o'er baser ores, and was decreed,
By bringing health and strength, to make men rich, indeed!

Mark, upon Shakspeare's page, how wild Macbeth
Tells us, in phrase not oft well understood,
That his crowned victim, Duncan, lay in death,
"His silver skin laced with his golden blood."
And richer far is life's all-precious blood,
When by von great Discovery purified,
Than the bright metal (fortune's folded bud),
That, sought so often, by mountain, vale or tide,
Doth in auriferous veins of California hide!

But, oh, delay not to ward off the shaft
Until a mortal wound has pierced you through!
Now let the healing antidote be quaffed,
E'en venom can its work completely do.
Yon flower whose withered petals now bestrew
The earth shall soon, from Spring's exhaustless store,
Be gifted with fresh leaves and blossoms new,
But Man's frail organs, when destroyed, no more
Can genial suns revive, or earthly skill restore!

Woman no longer plays Pandora's part,
Gazing with cold and curious smile, to see
The unshared evils that afflict Man's heart.
Alas! earth's greatest sufferer is she,
The guiltless prey of wasting agony,
Her path beset with countless springs of pain,
Thus speedily the charms of beauty flee,
And all the toil-t's arts are plied in vain
Health's clear and blooming hue and roundness to regain.

The playful, dimpled child, to girlhood grown,
Is seen bereft, at once, of strength and bloom,
And, pale and slender as some nymph of stone,
No more her sports and laughter may resume.
No more her parents' hearts roll clouds of gloom,
And, as new symptoms strike their fearing sight,
Prophetic fancy shows the untimely tomb
Of their lost darling, once so glad and bright,
But, in her budding sweet, struck with insidious blight!

Or gaze on her who was the radiant bride,
Now a sad prisoner, spiritless and weak;—
What nauseous draughts, what penance has she tried,
Some ease from grinding misery to seek!
Wonder not should her fretted spirit wreak
Itself in accents peevish or severe,
Followed by tears that burn the faded cheek
When she beholds that even those most dear
Avoid her weary couch of woe to linger near!

Now, should Earth's gilded days no more return,
Our blest Discovery does its power engage
That, with those wise its virtues to discern,
It shall restore, by skilled prescription sage,
The joy of youth, each life's own golden age,
Enarming manhood's strength, and woman's pride
Of grace and loveliness, with bright presage
That these shall with us through long years abide,
Till frithly Death lets earth to its last harbor glide!

RAISED THE ROOF.—The Mayville Dispatch gives this flood incident: "All the distilleries were forced to close down on account of the water, but they are not much damaged, unless the material and machinery inside are hurt. At one of these a quantity of whisky in barrels had been stored in the upper story of the distillery. The water rose above it and lifted the whisky, which lifted the roof. The roof floated down street. Whisky that is strong enough to lift the roof off the distillery, is supposed to be a pretty good article, and this is the truest big whisky story ever recorded."

A RICH LEGACY.

The General Attorney of the Pullman Sleeping Car Company; ex-Chief Justice O. A. Lochrane, of Georgia, says that old Dr. Biggers could leave no better legacy than his Southern Remedy for bowel affections, and in all his travels he has never found anything to equal Dr. Bigger's Southern Remedy for the relief of diarrhœa, dysentery and the restoration of the little ones whose system is suffering such a drainage from the effects of teething, etc. This, with a bottle of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, combining the stimulating expectorant principle of the sweet gum with the demulcent healing one of the mullein, for the cure of croup, whooping cough, colds and consumption, presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. Good News From Texas.

Mr. Thomas A. Howard, of Honey Grove, Fannin county, Texas, under date of April 5, 1883, writes as follows:

I have been suffering during several years from severe illness, and a general breaking down of my physical system, and have tried the treatment and prescription of many doctors far and near, and traveled to the Hot Springs and other mineral springs famous for their remedial qualities, drinking the waters and bathing systematically in their healing depths, but all to no avail, as I steadily failed in health; and although informed by my physicians that my ailments and weaknesses were the result of kidney disease of a dangerous character, they could give me nothing to cure me. During the past two years my sufferings at times were dreadful, and I had the most indescribable pains in the regions about the kidneys, the paroxysms of which were so severe as to render it impossible for me to sleep. While in this deplorable and discouraged condition I was persuaded to try Hunt's Remedy, and after using less than half a bottle my great sufferings and paroxysms of pain were entirely relieved, and I could sleep better and longer than I had in two years before, and although I am now on my third bottle only my improvement is very remarkable, and I regret that I did not know of the wonderful curative powers of Hunt's Remedy before, as it would have saved me years of suffering. I heartily recommend it to all afflicted with any kidney disease or disease of the urinary organs."

"Hit My Case Exactly."

Please allow me to speak in the highest terms of "Hunt's Remedy," for it hit my case exactly. I had kidney and urinary trouble pretty bad. I was recommended Hunt's Remedy. I took one teaspoonful as directed. I felt a decided change at the first dose. I took two bottles, and have felt like a new man ever since. Please receive the sincere thanks of myself for the benefits which I sought vainly for and found only in Hunt's Remedy.

I will cheerfully give this same opinion of Hunt's Remedy to any one who wishes it, by addressing ROBERT D. ARCHER,

The Doctor's Indorsement.

Dr. W. D. Wright, Cincinnati, Ohio, send the subjoined professional indorsement: I have prescribed Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs in a great number of cases, and always with success. One case in particular was given up by several physicians who had been called in for consultation with myself. The patient had all the symptoms of confirmed consumption—cold night sweats hectic fever, harrassing cough, etc. He commenced immediately to get better, and was soon restored to his usual health. I found Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs the most valuable expectorant for breaking up distressing coughs and colds.

"NOT LOST, BUT GONE BEFORE."

My little child, with clustering hair,
Strewn o'er thy dear, dead brow,
Though in the past divinely fair,
More lovely art thou now.
God bade thy gentle soul depart,
On bright'ning shimmering wings;
Yet near thy clay, thy mother's heart
All weakly, fondly clings.

My beauteous child, with lids of snow
Closed o'er thy dim blue eyes,
Should it not soothe my grief to know
They shine beyond the skies?
Above thy silent cot I kneel,
With heart all crushed and sore,
While through the gloom these sweet words steal:
"Not lost, but gone before."

My darling child, these flowers I lay
On locks too fair, too bright,
For the damp grave mist, cold and gray,
To dim their sunny light.
Soft baby tresses, bathed in tears,
Your gold was all mine own!
Ah, weary months! ah, weary years!
That I must dwell alone!

My only child I hold thee still,
Clasped in my fond embrace!
My love, my sweet! how fixed, how chill,
This smile upon thy face!
The grave is cold, my clasp is warm,
Yet give thee up I must;
And birds will sing when thy loved form
Lies moldering in the dust.

My angel child, thy tiny feet
Dance through my broken dreams;
Ah me, how joyous, quaint and sweet
Their baby pattering seems!
I hush my breath, to hear thee speak;
I see thy red lips part;
But wake to feel thy cold, cold cheek
Close to my breaking heart!

Soon, soon my burning tears shall fall
Upon thy coffin lid;
Nor may those tears my soul recall
To earth—nay, God forbid!
Be happy in His love, for I
Resigned, though wounded sore,
Can hear His angels whispering nigh:
"Not lost, but gone before."

FANNY FORRESTER.

Old Joe Pollard.

BY MRS. DENISON.

How slowly he walked! Poor old old man! Joe Pollard; ex-President o the Statesman's Bank of ——opolis.

His coat was faded, his boots were seamed and gray, his hat greasy and quaint-patterned.

Only three years ago, and no more stately, vigorous, hale gentleman walked the streets than Joseph Pollard, Esq.; now he was "old Joe," and sometimes "poor old Joe."

When he failed he was living in great splendor. People to this day point out the Pollard mansion and tell you of its former greatness. Happily there was no dishonor attached to his name. He had given up all; home, horses, carriages, everything that could be dispensed with.

His only daughter—her name was Josephine, but all her friends called her Jeddy—gave a birthnight party only a week before the trouble came, on her eighteenth birthnight.

Never a happier or lovelier girl than she. Universally admired and respected, bright as a sunbeam, witty, merry, generous.

In all that throng of beauty, amid the flowers and the feasting that man would have been bold indeed who could have presaged coming ill fortune.

Only one week later, and the dreadful news came. Joseph Pollard was bankrupt. The cashier had been dishonest, several large firms had gone down, and the run on the bank had completed the ruin.

The father found a place as an assistant bookkeeper, but he had formed the habit of drinking at his own table. Little by little he sank at last into what seemed an utterly hopeless state, lost his business, his pride and almost his wits.

"My dear," wrote Aunt Prue, when she heard of this misfortune, "put your father away. There are plenty of places: and come and live with me. Enough for one is enough for two."

"Aunt Prue," wrote Jeddy, indignantly, "I am ashamed of you. What! counsel me to put my own dear father in the poor-house, for what other place is open to him? No. I will share his misfortunes if I have to work my fingers to the bone."

"Jeddy, I'm useless. I'm broken down and good for nothing," whined poor Joe, day after day, as Jeddy sat and stitched her life into the work she had undertaken.

"Father, you are only fifty-eight years old," was the answer. "Many a man has begun life anew at your age."

"Ah! if I only could!" he would make reply, and drink again to drown his misery.

Jeddy had carried much of her fine wardrobe with her into the poverty of her surroundings. Of course she made over and toned down the material, but "the look of the lady," as one of the coarse neighbors said, was upon her "and couldn't be mistook."

Everybody pitied her when old Joe came rolling home, but few saw or knew how patiently she put up with his infirmity, how she soothed and coaxed him, with what tenderness she anticipated his wants, and even when it would seem that he was scarcely entitled to her respect, honored him.

To her, under all his wretched disguise, he was still father.

But her constant duties were heavily upon her. She grew pale and thin, then feverish and hectic; but still she worked on.

Three times a handsome carriage and pair were seen before the door of her plain little home.

The first time a rich aunt came to remonstrate with her and offer her a home. She found her preparing her poor meal over the tiny cook stove.

"Jeddy, you are the best girl in the world, but you must go back with me, if only for a while, and leave that man to take care of himself."

This was after a most affectionate greeting, for Jeddy was her favorite niece.

"I couldn't leave father," was the response.

"But I can't see you killing yourself by inches. What does he care? One person is as good as another to one who has lost all the finer sensibilities, as he has."

"Oh, no; at times father is his old self—even—even at the worst," she faltered. "He don't forget that he is a gentleman. He never was unkind to me."

"Fiddlesticks! Your ideas of duty are exaggerated. Come, now—don't disappoint me—take a little rest. I have come way from L——on purpose to carry you back, and the last words your Cousin Kitty said, as I left her, were:

"'Mother, don't fail to bring Jeddy back; I want to see her.'"

Tears came to Jeddy's brown eyes, but she reiterated:

"I cannot leave father."

"And here you are, losing all your beauty—all your advantages, and even your health—I can see it! For your father's sake, you ought to go. It would make a new creature of you to see old sights and old faces, and to live a while like a Christian. Why, child, the walls are damp; how do you live?"

"It isn't living, aunt, it's only staying," said Jeddy, trying bravely to smile, "but that I can't help while father lives. There's nobody in all this wide world to care for him but me. I know I might live in ease and comfort if I went with you, and oh, sometimes my heart does long so for a little of that old-time joy. It would be like looking into Paradise—but—I can't leave father."

There sounded a heavy sigh. Both women turned round to see the old, gaunt man in the doorway, the tears streaming down his cheeks as he held forth his trembling hands as if in benediction.

"Go, Jeddy, go angel—don't stay for me—I'm not worth your care," he said pitifully.

But Jeddy thought otherwise. Long after the splendid carriage had gone she sat there holding the gray head against her shoulder, soothing and petting him and lending a willing ear to his promises of amendment.

The second carriage brought a stylish young gentleman, with whom her friends had often coupled her name. He came with an offer of marriage, but Jeddy gave him the same soft but determined answer: "I couldn't leave father," and he, too, went away disconsolate.

The third carriage contained one who had always been a friend, also a young gentleman, who had lately returned from a foreign tour.

He asked no questions and expressed no surprise, though the change he saw affected him painfully. But like a true friend, he resolved to aid both father and daughter.

To this purpose he followed the former, and quietly tried to hinder him from the abuse of his appetite, and gradually gained his confidence.

Then he told him how sadly the change in his daughter had troubled him.

"Change!" exclaimed old Joe, "how is she changed?"

"Is it possible you do not see that she is at death's door?"

"What do you mean? At death's door—my child—my angel? You would kill me! What have I but her?"

"You have God, and He will help you to redeem yourself. If you do that, your daughter will live; if you do not, she will die."

That night old Joe went home full of doubts and fears. He watched his child, sick at heart from the news he heard.

"I can make her live—and I will!" he said, resolutely, to himself. "I am not an old man, yet"—lifting his bowed head—"with God's help, I will be a new one!"

He went to the curb, outside, and broke his pocket-flask in a hundred pieces. The next day he came home sober; the next, he found a place—a small one, it was true, but in the old bank where he had once reigned master. Everybody saw the change. Old Joe had new clothes, he was respectable to outward seeming. Once more he became a man among men. His knowledge of the business, his integrity, gained him a better position. Day by day he took steps upward—day by day the color and brightness came into his daughter's face, and her steps grew light and her tones joyful.

It seems like a miracle, but is not, that old Joe rides in his own carriage again. He is Mr. Pollard again, cashier of the bank, and a power among his fellows. It was just trusting in God and God helping him as he helped himself. But the best of all is his glorious daughter, by sacrificing herself, by her noble fortitude, by her patient care, has won a place in his heart, and in the hearts of all who know her, prouder and more enduring than the throne of a queen.—Companion.

The Growth of a Child's Ideas.

Prof. Straight, of Oswego, in an address before the school teachers of Connecticut says: "If we can think of the little child, just born into the world, its senses just opening to the world—the eye, the ear and the touch—of the impressions from the external world showering down upon those senses—there is the beginning. The waves of ether from the bright light beat upon the eye and the child at once distinguishes the bright light from darkness. Soon bright colors attract the attention; and so it begins at the outset to study optics, discovering light and shade. Form next comes into its consciousness. Thereby it learns to distinguish its mother or nurse from other people. I was told of an experiment tried lately by a teacher at the kindergarten. A very young child had been accustomed to see a bright dress upon its mother, and knew her only by color. A young lady friend put on the mother's dress and came into the room where the baby was and was immediately taken for the mother. The child had not progressed far enough to distinguish between them by form. Other children were similarly experimented upon, but they had been educated in form and color so as not to be mistaken. After discovering optics and forms the child begins to study sound, and soon distinguishes the mother's voice from any other voice. It also learns to distinguish striking sounds from sounds produced otherwise. Next follows the knowledge of number. As soon as a child has one pain and one pleasure it begins to learn number; when it realizes two pains and two pleasures it has learned number. It is just as easy for the child to learn number by using cubes and triangles as by illustrating with oranges and apples. And so soon as the little child can locate a pain within its body—in one of its limbs or its head—there is the locality, the beginning of geography. Its striking, kicking and wriggling enables it to discover the smoothness and roughness of bodies. The child next begins to study its own form—its hands and feet. I never shall forget the pleasure and surprise that my own little boy showed when he discovered that he had ears. When he put his hand on the side of his head and found something that he had not known of before there was a thrill of discovery. This joy of discovery is like that which thrills every true discoverer. We can see these powers of discovery in the first few weeks or months of the child's life."

The Hop Situation.

Country shippers are liable to be mislead by the regular hop quotations, unless they clearly understand the situation. Fancy New York are quoted as high as 28 cents per pound and fancy Eastern at 24 to 25 cents, but so far as our market is concerned, very few hops go over 20 cents, because most of the receipts are of a medium grade. The higher grades are now almost wholly in the hands of a few holders, who peddle them about to the brewers at the extreme prices. Some lots of Eastern hops were consigned to parties here a few weeks ago as prime quality, but when offered for sale they were in every case found to be quite inferior, and did not realize over 15 to 18 cents. The shipper felt aggrieved, but no blame could be attached to the consignee, who did all he could to get a higher price. There has been a good demand for export this season, but it has been confined mainly to the medium grades. From Boston the shipments foot up 1740 bales, against 174 bales for the same time last year, an increase of 1000 bales. From New York the shipments for the season aggregate 57,500 bales, against 35,600 bales for the corresponding time last year, an increase of 21,900 bales. Nobody expects any boom in hops this year, but the strong tone of the English market warrants the belief that the prices will be no lower. The Cooperstown (N. Y.) Journal says: "Some of the New York dealers who are heavy shippers on their own account, and who have several thousand bales in the London market, are holding up for the present, and probably wisely for all concerned. So the shipments for the next few weeks may be comparatively light. American brewers may depend upon one thing—and so may city dealers who have sold hops short—hops are not going any lower, with even a very moderate foreign demand to aid the market. Holders are not inclined to press their hops upon the market at the ruling prices, for they very generally entertain the confident belief that all will be needed before the close of the season.—Boston Journal.

Pensions.

The bill of Mr. Watson before the U. S. House for increasing by fifty per cent. the pensions now paid to the relatives of deceased soldiers, will, even according to the calculations of its author, affect nearly 125,000 pensions, existing or prospective. As they now carry eight dollars a month, and as they would receive twelve dollars under this bill, forty-eight dollars a year additional would be put upon each of them, or about six millions every year in the aggregate.

A London lady has just died, leaving the pope a fortune of nearly $2,500,000.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"GAZE UPON YONDER EVENING star and swear to be true while its light shall shine! Swear, my love! Swear by Venus!" exclaimed a youth in impassioned accents to one of the Vassar girls. "How stupid you are," she answered. "That is not Venus. The right ascension of Venus this month is 15h. 9m.; her declination is 17 degrees 25m. south, and her diameter is 10.2."

REV. DR. FULTON, OF BROOKLYN, does not like theatres. He says: "Place me upon a polar iceberg, where no verdure greets the eye, where naught but the white bear's growl can be heard; let me live where no friend shall cheer me with a smile; bar me in prison; but do not, oh, do not compel me to mingle with the ungodly crowd of a theatre."

"ELI PERKINS" SAYS HE DID not personally know Colonel Hunt, of Michigan, who bequeathed him, "Josh Billings" and the mother of "Artemus Ward" $5,000 each. "A year ago, however," he says, "I received a letter from him requesting me to send him two of my humorous works. I did so, and added a copy of 'Josh Billings' and a biography of 'Artemus Ward.'"

MRS. MYRA CLARK GAINES, a very old woman, after winning one-half or thereabouts of New Orleans after fifty years' litigation to get her property, is living in Washington in almost straitened circumstances. She lives in furnished rooms and supports herself, her daughter-in-law and two grandchildren on the $69 a month pension she receives as widow of Gen. Gaines.

DR. JULIUS REE, A JEWISH banker of Hamburg, who accumulated a large fortune in Rio Janeiro, but losing all of his children there by sickness, returned to Germany, has died, leaving a will which bequeathed four million marks for the erection of dwellings to be occupied free of rent by deserving poor families, and by aged persons without means.

SENATOR PLUMB SAID IN THE United States Senate that the United States army of 25,000 men, costs within a half a million of dollars of the sum spent upon the German army of 400,000 men, so that what the United States army lacks in numbers it makes up in pay. "Ours," he said, "is the best-paid army in the world."

THE RUBBER INDUSTRY IN THE United States has no rival in foreign countries. There is something like $75,000,000 invested in the business of manufacturing rubber goods, $30,000,000 of which is confined to the rubber boot and shoe industry. The total number of employees is placed at 15,000, and the total number of factories at 120.

AN IOWA CONGRESSMAN WHO is divorced from his wife, called on a St. Louis friend who invited him to dine with him. He consented to do so, when the man continued: "By the way, there is to be a marriage at our church tonight and we expect to attend." The Congressman inquired the name of the bride, and found that it was his wife about to marry again, so the invitation was declined.

ONE KLEIN INDUCED MCCUE to drink 3 pints of whisky on a wager, at San Antonio, Texas. The feat proved fatal. McCue's widow sued Klein for damages, and got a verdict for $3,000. On appeal, the Supreme Court confirms the jury's conclusion. The ruling was that, as the drinker was so intoxicated as to be incapable of consent at the time of swallowing the third and killing pint, the man who made him do it was responsible.

A MOST UNFORTUNATE MAN is William King. Upon being converted in a revival meeting in Caldwell, Ky., he arose and confessed that he had robbed a store in 1863 of $300 worth of goods. He went to the proprietor the next day and paid the amount, with 20 years' interest, but was immediately arrested for the theft, and now languishes in jail.

THE LUCKIEST MAN ON board the ill-fated City of Columbus was the one rescued by the tug Speedwell. He had a baggage check in his pocket, and when the tug picked up a floating trunk he coolly produced his check and claimed his baggage. As there was a corresponding check on the trunk his claim was indisputable.

HENRY WARD BEECHER, who has a habit of giving good advice incidentally in his sermons, made a remark Sunday which certain unhappy Christians might well lay to heart. He declared that it is better to burn down a church than to quarrel in it; and that calling a council will not settle the difficulty.

"THE SILENT VON MOLTKE," it is said, was once seated in a railroad carriage with his aid de-camp, when another officer, crowding past him to get out, said: "Pardon me," and a few moments later, coming in and passing his chief again, said: "Pardon me;" whereupon the field marshal, annoyed at such prodigal waste of verbiage, turned to his side and growled: "That chatterer!"

IT IS REPUTATED THAT the United States Senate is the wealthiest deliberative body in the world, the seventy-six members of that body representing $180,000,000.

IN THE UNITED STATES to-day, according to the last census, there are 106 sewing machine establishments, with an invested capital of $12,501,830, employing 9,293 persons, to whom are annually paid in wages $4,636,092.

BLUSHING AND LYING.

The Popular Error That the One is an Index of the Other.

"But didn't you see him blush?"

"Well, what of that?"

"Don't you think he was lying?"

"No, I don't. I know he was telling me the square truth."

"Do you know the circumstances?"

"Yes, and I know he told them just as they were."

"It sounded like a lie, anyway."

"That is why he blushed," said Mr. Denison, a well-known Chicago lawyer, for this talk was taking place in his office just after the departure of a young man who had been sued and was seeking advice from his attorney.

"I venture to say no man has had more trouble than I with blushes, and I think I know some of the causes behind them. You may have noticed that I blush on every conceivable occasion. If a question is put to me quickly, I blush. If I meet a friend slap on the street—unless I see him some time before I reach him—I blush. If anybody speaks my name from behind or from some unexpected quarter, I blush. As much as I have been before juries, I blush every time an opposing advocate refers to me as 'the learned counsel for the defense.' Hang it! I blush on all sorts of occasions, and yet I don't believe that anybody would say I am an especially modest or bashful man.

"No, sir," continued the old attorney, "I have blushed and blushed all my life, and the more I blush the more I try not to, and the more I try not to the more I blush. Above all, the meanest blush is just such a one as you saw on that young man's face just now. I know just how he felt. He knew he was telling a pretty hard story, and he could see in your face that you didn't believe him. That's why he blushed. If he had been talking to me alone he would not have blushed, because he knows I am familiar with the circumstances he related; but you looked doubtingly at him, and he felt your mistrust so keenly that it brought the blood to his face."

After a little pause Mr. Denison continued:

"I never pay the least attention to blushes when examining a witness. The blush is not, as is too often believed, the evidence of a lie. Nor is it a true signal of embarrassment. I know that, for I have been told that I was blushing purple when I was as calm and unembarrassed as I am at this moment. There are many causes for my blushes; some of them purely physical, I think; but often when I am telling something—some little personal recollection, perhaps, that amounts to nothing—I get it in my head that somebody doubts some part of it. Then I blush. Then I feel that I am blushing, and I say to myself, 'Now he will see me blush and will be sure to think I am lying,' and that makes me blush all the more, until finally I can feel my face burn and glow like a coal, and I say to myself, 'Now he is sure I am lying, and he thinks I know he is sure of it,' and so I stand and blush because I think he doubts me until, perhaps, I really make him doubt me because of my blushes."

About Cribbing News.

An influential Western member of the U. S. House, referring to the Watterson bill, spoke as follows concerning it. "The proposition on its face seems fair, but it is deceptive. The value of news is not in holding it, but in giving it; not in storing it away, but in disseminating it. How can one expect to retain a property right in that which has no value unless it is given away? What is news? The statement of facts; the story of occurrences. If one gets the first account of a thing, should he be permitted to patent it, and secure exclusive right of publishing it? The newspapers have ample protection in the first use of their own special news. The first use is about all the value there is in it to the first newspaper. The country press can get some benefit by reprinting the news, but this is no injury to the city press; in fact, it is often a benefit, for it is usually credited. The country press would be injured by the passage of the bill. It is a scheme of the Metropolitan and Associated Press to confine the printing of news to their journals."

The Deadly Hair-Dye.

A Washington correspondent writes as follows: Senator Farley, of California, has returned to Washington, but is the shadow of his former self. He is said to be the victim of hair-dye. Brought to the verge of the grave, he abandoned its use. His gray hair and beard are in curious contrast to what they were last session. But for the excessive loss of flesh and the painful effects of a long illness he would be improved in appearance by allowing nature to have her way. I hope that he will recover his health. Not long ago the most prominent pawnbroker in Baltimore died a horrible death from the effects of hair-dye. His dreadful fate has alarmed not a few elderly persons who had resorted to the same practice, which is one of imminent deadly peril.

KISSING.—It is recalled in Honeoye, N. Y., where the bride of Frederick Douglass lived in childhood, that she had to be whipped by her father, an active abolitionist, to make her kiss Douglass when he visited the family.

THE CZAR'S LIFE.

SAVED ALMOST BY A MIRACLE—A MYSTERIOUS VISITOR.

A Nihilist Attempts an Impersonation of the Russian Chief of Police.

Among the "forbidden literature" now circulating in Russia is the story of one of the most daring and dramatic plots ever recorded in the history of political assassination. The narrative is founded on events which are said to have taken place in St. Petersburg shortly after General Gourko had been called from Odessa to act as quasi-military governor of the Russian capital. One bright May morning, when the excitement was at its height, the watchful eye of a policeman posted at the top of the Nevsky Prospect caught sight of an equipage coming up the thoroughfare at a trot. It bore armorial devices well known in the Russian capital; the coachman was there, who persisted in being wigged in defiance of his master's orders, to the great merriment of St. Petersburg Jehus. On each side rode the regular escort of six mounted Cossacks, each holding his lance in rest and wearing his ball of forage slung over his shoulder more as if he was campaigning on the Don than upon civil service in the streets of the capital. General Gourko and his escort—the guardian of the peace had easily recognized and hastily saluted his chief, the new Prefect of Police—turned into the Cavalry parade, at the top of the Nevsky Prospect, and at once made their way into the Alexander square, on the Neva side of which rose the massive and somewhat fantastic outlines of the Winter Palace. The equipage having drawn up at the side entrance of the building the general alighted and rang. On the doorkeeper presenting himself—an officer of the Emperor's private guard—the Prefect briefly stated the object of his visit.

He desired an immediate conference with the Czar. The hour was early, true, day having only just dawned. At the same time his business brooked no delay—it concerned the safety of the Emperor himself. The janitor was at first inexorable, expostulating that his imperial master had been already in bed an hour. Yet at last he yielded. Up the broad staircase they went together. They trod on gorgeous carpets, brushed past the wealth of the winter palace in malachite and lapis lazuli, only pausing in their ascent when they had reached a landing giving access to one of the capacious saloons. At this point General Gourko was instructed to wait. At this point, too, the Czar's officer seems to have repented of his decision. The narrative represents him as closely scrutinizing the Prefect of Police in the growing light, and of subsequently proceeding in the direction of the Emperor's sleeping apartments, in no great haste to arouse royalty from its first slumber. The man did not arouse the Czar at all. What he did was to descend to the guardroom and dispatch a messenger. The man left the palace on the Neva side. He there took a droshky, and drove past the side entrance into the Nevsky. During his absence the Czar calmly slept on; General Gourko impatiently paced the saloon, and the military gaurdian of the imperial bedchamber went about giving some orders to the palace guards.

In a quarter of an hour the messenger returned. He had been sent to General Gourko's residence, in the Nevsky Prospect, and he brought back the information that the Prefect of Police was at that moment in bed. The early visitor was thus an imposter. He was something more; for from his pockets, after he had been seized and pinioned, they drew forth a six-barrelled revolver and a two-edged hunting knife. The Czar's life had been saved, yet it had hung for a few moments in the balance. The made-up Gourko—the Prefect of Police, imitated down to the minutest details of hair, complexion and wig—might have deceived even the Emperor himself. Not a whit less perfect was the art which had reproduced the Gourko coach and escort. Only the sham Prefect was secured, and not his confederates. Simultaneously with the arrest guards had rushed from the palace to seize the latter. But the equipage had gone, the Cossacks were gone, the coachman was gone. A policeman afterward told how he had seen the cavalcade pass over one of the Neva bridges and disappeared in a thoroughfare of Basil Island. The carriage was never found, and, for all that could be ascertained concerning them or their steeds, the six Cossacks may be mounted and riding, lance in rest, to this day. As for the chief actor in the plot, the conspirator who only failed in his impersonation of General Gourko because of his inability to be in two places at one and the same time his personality has never been disclosed. He is the one mystery which the nihilists themselves have never been able to penetrate. His secret remains with him, and he keeps it to the present moment, for he is still a prisoner in the inland fortress of Peter and Paul.

CURIOUS TALE.—Lieutenant Rhodes, the City Hall disaster hero, says he would rather do his work over again than make a speech about it.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

A NEW VERSION.

There is a little boy in this city whose mother has been reading to him lately Charles Follen Adams's poem entitled "Leedle Yawcob Strauss," the concluding lines of which are:

"I prays der Lord dake anydings,
But leave dot Yawcob Strauss."

The other night while saying his prayers the little boy rendered them as follows:

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake—
I pray der Lord dake anydings,
But leave dot Yawcob Strauss."

—Somerville Journal.

A LARGE LOT OF LIVELY AUNTS.

Fond Mamma—"Now, Willie, you must be a real good boy to-day; here's all your aunts come to see you."

Willie—"Has Aunt Sarah come?"

Fond Mamma—"Yes, Aunt Sarah, Aunt Dolly, Aunt Mary, Aunt Laura, Aunt Elizabeth, Aunt Cynthia, Aunt—"

Willie—"That's plenty, mamma, for me. It's the biggest nest of aunts I ever struck."—Chicago Sun.

AN INTERCHANGE OF COMPLIMENTS.

"You, Samuel! come right in here now, and stop playin' with that bad Smith boy," said Mrs. Jones; "the first thing you know he'll have you in jail."

"You, Alexander! come right along in the house!" yelled the other front-door neighbor. "The first thing you know you'll be in the penitentiary keepin' that Jones boy company."—Kentucky State Journal.

HE LEFT IT.

"Did you ever find anything of value, Uncle Sy?" I asked, after telling him about finding a pearl ring that morning.

"Yeh, sah; I foun' a pus once, wid ten dollars in it."

"Did you? Well, what did you do with it—you didn't keep it, of course?"

"Yeh, sah; I did dat berry ting. I's strictly honest; I wouldn't take no man's pus. I lef' it where he could git it; but I took de money out fust. You see, he done los' de money—'twarn't his'n no mo'. I done fin' it; it was my money den. But de pus was his'n, 'n' long as I live I ain't gwine to take no man's pus."—Harper's Drawer.

LANGUISHED FOR LOVE.

There is a clerk in an Austin dry-goods store who is very susceptible, and deeply in love with Miss Esmeralda Longcoffin, who, however, fails and refuses to reciprocate. She was buying some goods from him last Tuesday, and she complained of the high prices.

"We buy all our goods at your store, and yet you charge us more than you do others. I find you dearer than any one else," she observed.

The clerk sighed, shook his head, and said:

"I only wish it were so."

"That what were so?"

"That I was dearer to you than anybody else."—Texas Siftings.

GENUINE ARISTOCRACY.

Miss Shoddyite was introduced to a real live young Englishman at a dinner party the other night, and the next afternoon she was extolling his many fascinating wiles and graces to an anxious coterie of female friends.

"And then, girls, he not only waltzes divinely, but he's a great politician, too."

"Oh, my, ain't that sweet?" exclaimed a spirituelle girl. "Is he in the House of Commons?"

"Commons, indeed!" said Miss Shoddyite, scornfully. "I should say not. He would have nothing to do with any House of Commons. Why, he is a real aristocrat, he is."

And the other girls chorused out: "My, he must be grand."—Washington Hatchet.

HE DIDN'T TAKE ALL HIS LEMAN.

A government agent, who was sent to Wisconsin last fall to look up trespass cases on government lands, was out on his travels one day when he found a man whaling away at some choice timber on one of Uncle Sam's sections.

"Any land for sale around here?" queried the agent.

"Wall, thar' might be," was the reply.

"I'd like to buy a whole section."

"Have ye the cash to pay?"

"I have."

"I mought sell you this."

"Can you give me a clear deed?"

"Clear as a whistle, stranger. Gimme $800 cash, and I'll deed you the section afore sundown."

The agent coolly unrolled a map, spread it out on a log and said:

"You will see by this map that Uncle Sam owns this section. Now, then, can you give me a deed for it?"

"See hy'er, stranger," said the chopper, after a long pause, "maybe you is one of them chaps as regardless that Uncle Sam is a bigger man than a free-born citizen of old Wisconsin? I'll give ye just three minutes to skip!"

The agent didn't want just then.—Wall Street News.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., APR. 24, 1884.

Dr. Bryce announces that the new wing of the State insane asylum, for the accomodation of insane white women, is now ready for the reception of applicants.

The Lancet feels a sort of righteous indignation at the necessity of informing a cor respondent that "the notion of suicide of animals below man is absurd and unphysiological."

A Des Moines man published a card announcing that "as many citizens have failed to solicit me to become a candidate for office, I have concluded to offer my services to the voters for the office of," &c,

There is said to be a man now living in Wilcox county Ga., who had thirty-six nephews in the late war, all of whom, except three, were killed in battle. Fifteen of them belonged to the same company.

If the Washington Monument Commissioners are not too sanguine, there is hope that the monument, which has lingered in a painful condition of incompleteness these many years, draws near its apex and completion at last. The commissioners think it may be finished by next fall or the summer of 1885. Its completion will be made the theme of much eloquence, and perhaps will drive out of circulation the most famous of American proverbs: "First in war, first first in peace, last to get a monument."

An anecdote, told by a writer who has just sketched Berlin society, whether literally true or only a neat invention, has met with great success. It hits at what used to be called in Germany a French fashion. An English missionary, so the story goes, was invited to a large dinner party by a German professor and Deputy. Out of regard to his cloth, the host, after the ladies had withdrawn from the table, apologized to the missionary for their perhaps too decolletes style of dress. "Oh, pray don't mention it," replied the missionary; "I have lived for ten years among the savages of Africa, and am quite accustomed to such sights."

"Are you as happy now as you were before you married?" asked Mrs. Yeast of young Mrs. Crimsonbeak. "Yes indeed," replied the lady; "and a great deal happier." "That is strange," suggested the philanthropist's wife. "Not at all strange," came from the young married woman. "You see, before I was married, I used to spend half my time worrying about what dress I should wear when Daniel called." "But don't you try just as hard to look well when your husband returns home at night?" interrupted Mrs. Yeast. "Well, you see," went on the bride of two summers, "I don't worry any about it now, as I have only one dress to my name."

Congress has passed a bill to give some 40,000 acres of public lands in this State to the University of Alabama. The news will be received gratefully by the people of this State. As a promoter of popular education the University is a failure of gigantic proportions; but this endowment will probably save the taxpayers the annual appropriation of a large proportion of their hard-earned contributions for the support of the institution, and the public lands of the State may as well be given to the University as to the railroads and other corporations.—Fort Payne Journal.

Very true. And now that the appropriation has been made, or will be with the signature of the President to the bill, the University Trustees might properly make tuition free to all students, and cut down other expenses as much as the appropriation will allow. If this is done, and the useless military department of the institution abolished, the University will have made a stride worth making, if it seeks to be a "promoter" of popular education." Our Fort Payne contemporary should bear in mind that our University, like many similar institutions in the South, has had many and serious difficulties to overcome since the close of the struggle between the States. "Rome was not built in a day." Alabama has been a State only since 1819, and considering the trying times through which she has passed, we should congratulate ourselves that our State and her University have the prominence they now have.

A bill is now pending before the Lower House of Congress asking that a copyright be granted upon all news for twenty-four hours after publication. This bill is being engineered by Northern and Eastern newspaper millionaires in their own interests, and if it should become a law would entail embarrasments upon many of the weekly newspapers of the country, and would furthermore sweep many of them out of existence—which is probably the prime object of the measure. From a speech upon this subject recently delivered in the House of Representatives by Congressman Anderson, of Kansas, we extract two paragraphs for the consideration of the Alabama Press Association at its meeting in Eufaula next month: Mr. Anderson said:

Suppose that a law was passed copyrighting press dispatches for forty-eight hours, what would be the effect on the weekly press, and how far would the possible power of the Western Union over the dailies be extended over the country press? Either the latter would have to do without the latest news or pay for them to the dailies—which would be profitable to the dailies. In the end the stronger weekly in a town would be forced into the combination. But when this occurred generally these weeklies would be as much within the possible power of the Western Union, of which Mr. Gould is said to be chief owner and controller, as are the dailies now. Is that a condition of things compatible with the public good or the public safety?

And yet precisely such a measure is pending in this House, and those who oppose it are denounced as "robbers". While there may be a possible ground for copyrighting an "editorial" as the products of an editor's brain, what ground is there for copyrighting, say, election returns, or the news of Garfield's murder? Do these editors create news in the sense that an author creates a book? To my mind that measure is a glaring wrong, glittering with impertinence. And the weekly press of the nation had better wake up. If it will look far enough it will discover a very fine Italian hand manipulating the measure.

A Convention of the Republicans of Alabama met in Montgomery last week. They met for the purpose of selecting delegates to the National Republican Convention, which is to meet at Chicago early in June for the purpose of nominating a Presidential ticket. Twenty delegates will go to Chicago from this State two from each of the eight Congressional districts and four from the State at large. Of the twenty delegates selected last week, nineteen are avowed administration delegates and favor the nomination of Chester A. Arthur for President. The second choice of these nineteen delegates is U. S. Senator John A. Logan. The one delegate who is opposed to Arthur and his horde of office-holders is Lewis E. Parsons, Jr., of our neighboring county of Coosa. It is thought he favors the nomination of ex-Senator James G. Blaine. Parsons, made a speech in the convention denouncing its work as that of a ring of Arthur's pets and office-holders. Parsons is one of the delegates from this district. The other delegate from this congressional district is a negro, W. J. Anthony, of Chambers county. The parties who went from this county as delegates to the State Convention were R. H. Knox, R. M. Goodgame and Peyton Finley, colored.

Correspondence Solicited.

Baltimore Manufacturers' Record.]

Correspondence relating to the manufacturing, mining, lumbering and all other material interests of the Southern States is solicited. We invite those interested in the development of the South to make free use of our columns. Reaching so many capitalists in all of the United States seeking profitable investment in the South. The Manufacturers' Record offers an excellent chance for the people in that section to place the advantage of each locality before those likely to be interested. We will take great pleasure at all times in telling what has already been accomplished in the South, and showing up the opportunities of doing still more; so if you desire to attract immigration or capital, or if you know of any one looking for profitable investment in manufacturing, mining or kindred pursuits, write us an account of it. It will be published free of cost.

Mr. Gladstone's speaking powers get better as the years older. Joseph Cowan, M. P., says: "He has delivered two speeches this session that will rank with anything he has ever done in parliament."

Simon Cameron's Opinions.

From the Philadelphia Times.

"What do you think of the general condition of the South, and what are its future prospects?"

"Undoubtedly the South is making rapid progress, and is not behind the times. There are places where change is unknown, but those are dead places. The increase of the general wealth of the South since the war greatly exceeds the loss sustained by the liberation of the slaves, and this increase is the result of the development of the white people's energies and talents, which before the war had lain dormant. The exercise of these has opened ore mines, great coal fields, established industries of all kinds and is enabling the South to use up in its own manufactories the cotton grown by it. The Northern capitalist and workman find ready fields of operation, the one for investment, which brings speedy returns, and the other for his skill, which is well paid. Sectional feeling is dying away and Northern people are well received, especially those who go there to stay and bring wealth. Why, yes, life and property, so far as I can see, are secure in the South. Disorder sometimes prevails elsewhere than in the South."

"You stated, General, that you have been in Charleston. Did you visit Calhoun's grave?"

"I did. It caused many thoughts of the past to rise before me. Calhoun's was a master mind. Webster, Clay, and Calhoun were a grand trio of statesmen, but Clay had not the brains of the others. I consider Roscoe Conkling a greater statesman than Clay, and so is Senator Edmunds."

"Do you think Conkling will again come from his retirement?"

"Certainly I do. Why not? A man like him will always come to the front. Yes, I should not be surprised to see him some day returned to the United States Senate. Conkling is making money now—lots of it. He never had time to fully attend to his own business before, but now he is getting rich very fast."

"What do you think of Senator Edmunds?"

"He is a smart man; one of the great men of this country."

"Blaine seems to be quite a favorite with the people General."

"Well, Blaine's another good man."

The correspondent suggested the reluctance of the people to nominate a man who so persistently sought after office.

"That's a fact. When they have anything to give they'll give it, and without any person's persistent seeking."

"Secretary Lincoln appears to be a universal favorite for the Republican nomination for the Vice-dency," was a remark which proved an effectual rouser for the veteran.

"Yes; and if I had anything to say about it, I would say to him refuse it. To be elected Vice-President means to arouse jealousies and envy against him, something that does not now exist. He is too young now for the Presidency, but if he would but wait a few years the people would quietly elevate him to the chair. Blaine's haste in his Presidential aspirations defeated his chances for that high gift of the people, and if Lincoln accepts the nomination for Vice President he will never be President. If he waits a while he will some day fill his father's high place in the Goverment."

"Where is your son now—Senator Don Cameron?"

"The last time we heard from him he and his party were in Barcelona, Spain. He is improved in health, and enjoys the European trip which he is now making. When will he return? Well, I can't say; but from the tone of his letters I think some time this summer."

"Is Tilden too old for the Democrats to nominate for the Presidency?"

"I don't think so. He is a strong man in New York. He is feeble, perhaps, but not too old. Mr. Tilden is an able and acute man. No, sir; he is not too old for the nomination if his party chooses to give it to him."

"Senator Bayard would be a strong candidate for the nomination for President if his State was only larger and could give him more votes, would he not?"

"Yes, he would. A fine man and a good statesman. Bayard would poll a strong vote at the Convention if he were only backed by a larger State."

Sunday School Convention.

The seventh annual State Sunday School convention will meet in Selma on the 20th of May, and continue three days. Each Sunday School will be entitled to two delegates.

We call attention to the fact that the executive committee of the State convention have issued an address to the pastors, superintendents, teachers and Sunday School workers, urging them to attend the convention and assist in the work, and select the best men as delegates.

The Advertiser, of Wednesday, says: "Maj. W. P. VanDerveer's framed dwelling house at Clear Creek, Chilton county, was destroyed by fire, it may be remembered, on the 31st of March. Fortunately, Maj. V. had it insured with the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, and the loss was adjusted and paid on the 19th." The View understands that a new dwelling will be erected by Maj. Vanderveer at Clear Creek.

Call for a County Convention.

The voters of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county are requested to meet at the places of voting in their respective beats on Saturday, the 17th day of May next, to select by ballot delegates to a county convention to be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884.

The business of said convention will be to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before it.

The representation in said county convention, fixed upon the basis of the Gubernatorial vote of 1878, will entitle each beat to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

Beat 1—Mims X Roads	2
Beat 2—Providence and Jemison	6
Beat 3—Benson and Macedonia	4
Beat 4—Clanton	12
Beat 5—Verbena and Coopers	10
Beat 6—Kincheon	1
Beat 7—Maplesville	5
Beat 8—Dixie	5

The following named persons have been appointed as beat committees in their respective beats, to-wit:

Beat 1—H. C. Young, W. H. Marcus, D. H. Mullins.

Beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer, Chas. H. Smith, R. A. Miears.

Beat 3—J. L. Williams, David White, Seaborn Jones.

Beat 4—W. E. Stewart, J. M. Blylings, J. R. Jones.

Beat 5—G. L. Zimmerman, W. R. Scott, L. Moore.

Beat 6—J. A. Hathcock, J. R. Kemp, W. H. Mills.

Beat 7—Noah W. Foshee, W. S. Lawrence, W. J. Atchinson.

Beat 8—J. W. Broadhead, Thomas Parnell, Samuel Keyser.

The beat committees are charged with conducting the elections for delegates to the county convention.

It is suggested that in beats having two places of voting elections be held at each box for one-half the delegates allowed that beat.

It is earnestly requested that the beat committees exert themselves to get the entire vote of the party to attend the beat elections and express their wishes regarding the question of nominating candidates for the House of Representatives and for county offices.

By order of the committee.

S. T. BRITTLE, Chairman.
W. H. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

—:o:—

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

—:o:—

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD
WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy.

Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

April showers are fashionable.

Mrs. Hurley, of Mobile, is visiting her cousin, Miss Teresa Ternan, at this place.

We regret to learn that Mr. Minor Wooley was stricken with paralysis recently.

Mrs. McDaniel, living one mile from Clanton, died on Wednesday. She was very aged.

Read our special thirty days offer, and if you have paid for your own paper, subscribe for your Texas friend or relative.

The frost predicted for Tuesday night did not reach us at Clanton Perhaps the prophet, who ever he may have been, meant to predict frost north of the Ohio.

Our authority for publishing the prediction on the weather was not from Dr. Lanier himself, but was given us by a third party. The genial Dr. requests us to say that he is not a weather prophet.

Wilson Bros. store was crowded with customers on Saturday. They are enterprising merchants and keep their names always before the people in a standing advertisement—hence they have a good trade all the year round.

Commissioner J. J. Honeycutt was in Clanton on Monday. He came, in company with others, to order a beat election on the prohibition question for beat one, an advertisement of which election appears elsewhere.

A son of Mr. T. H. Williams died in the Yellow leaf neighborhood, on the night of the 15th inst., also in the same neighborhood, on the 20th inst., a child of Mr. Madison Davis. Our informant says that flux is a prevailing complaint in the neighborhood.

An election has been called for Beat No. 1 in hopes of voting whiskey from the beat. The killing of Glascock by Benson has aroused the people to the horrors of the grog shop; and we have no doubt but that they will succeed in ridding themselves of such a deadly enemy.

Mr. S. A. Blassingame is going to have some fine fruit on his place this year; at least we expect as much, judging from a peach twig sent this office covered with fine young peaches. We can't say, positively, however, that they are to be good unless we be permitted to sample them after the roses are on.

Quite a number of our citizens visited the Birmingham Exposition on the 22d. We return thanks to the Iron Age for a complimentary ticket admitting "bearer and ladies." The Exposition was a grand success. The Iron Age bears the honor of taking the first step toward the inauguration of the Exposition, and that enterprising journal is to be congratulated upon such a successful and auspicious beginning of its project. Birmingham and Alabama, are likewise to be congratulated.

Light Again.

None of our senses supplies us with such extensive and exact knowledge of the external world as that of sight. The eye penetrates into the unfathomable abysses of space and receives intelligence from regions the most remote and inaccessible; it reveals to us the delicate cells of which living beings are composed, and perceives the animalcules that people the waters, whilst the manifold forms which it discloses to the mind are rivaled only by the exquisite beauty and charm of color with which the physical world appears to be decorated. To be restored to this sense after having once lost it is, indeed, a blessing, and gratefully must beat the hearts of those upon whom this blessing has been bestowed. Last week while in Montgomery we met Richard Jones, of Mt. Carmel, a proud, happy old man, who, after languishing in the gloom of blindness for two years, had been operated on by Dr. B. J. Baldwin, and relieved. A few years ago the restoration of sight would have been looked upon as a miracle, but in these days of advanced skill and science it seems to be regarded as belonging simply to the "onward march" of the world.

Great is the "march" which brings such blessings.

Verbena Views.

We never saw vegetables grow more rapidly than during the past week.

Garden truck is beginning to ornament the festive board of the vegetarian.

Unless the predictions of frost should be verified the fruit crop will be heavy.

The way in which we saw a good, old motherly hen advance on a darkey, and the terror depicted on said darkey's face, left serious doubts in our mind concerning the courage of the average darkey visiting a chicken-house at night.

A liberal application of whitewash is adding to Verbena's neat appearance. The fence around the Academy received a good coating.

Mr. S. K. Williamson has refitted the billiard room and ten pin alley, and has opened it for the Spring and Summer seasons.

Mr A. P. DeBardeleben has returned from Blount Springs. He will attend to the Clifton House, as announced some time since.

Our base ball boys propose to be role to give the Clanton club some first class playing on May 2d, the day appointed for the match game at this place.

Among the visitors this week we notice Mrs. Turrant, of Mountain Creek, and Mrs. F. H. Cobb, of Wadsworth's.

Rev. J. M. McCord, of Benson, will preach at the Baptist church on Thursday night, May 1st. All are invited to attend.

Mr. Sam Strock is on the sick list.

The Baptist Sunday school will have their annual re-organization on the first Sunday in May.

Mr. R. W. DeBardeleben has sold his interest in his former business to Mr. Charley Reid.

Rev. J. L. Thompson preached an impressive sermon last Sunday. Subject: "Personal Influence."

At the last term of the Chancery court a divorce was granted to Mr. J. W. Dennis and his wife Mrs. C J. Dennis. BIJOU

Pine Hill Points.

Good health. Plenty of work, plenty of money, and we are all happy.

On last Sunday we had a very interesting sermon by the Rev. McDonald, who has served fifty odd years in the ministry.

We have a flourishing school of little folks under the instruction of Mrs. W. D. McMeans. Success to it.

On last Monday morning Mr. L. J. Hand, James D. Hand, Thomas Hand, and Mr. Irby Morgan, of Nashville, Tenn., shouldered their guns and started for Stump's Hills, on a camp hunt, and it seems they reached their camp grounds about twilight. As they were preparing supper, a dark and angry cloud gathered thick over them, threatening heavy wind and rain. Monroe Reed, colored, was told by Mr. Hand, to contrive in some way to save their fire, as matches were very scarce, and as the darkey showed no disposition to comply, he was asked what he was waiting on, and in reply he said he was "waitin' on de Lord." The party returned Tuesday night ladened with the game. Master Thomas Hand was the most successful shot, killing a very large buck at a distance of 125 yards, and while his deership was in full flight. Mr. L. J. Hand killed a small buck at 15 yards standing. His son Tom can beat him shooting, but he says he can beat Tom eating quails. The rest of the party returned home with heavy hearts and very much fatigued. H. J. M.

Maplesville Dots.

Married by Rev. Isaac Hix on the 18th. at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. J. D. McGee. Mr. Sylvester Lolly, of Brierfield, to Miss Pauline McGee.

A seasonable shower last Saturday, was accompanied by considerable hail, far surpassing a partridge egg in size.

Another mad dog was killed here last Saturday.

Three weeks of pretty weather occasional showers, early rising accompanied with diligence has placed the farmers up with their work.

Mr. W. R. Bowline has accepted the re-election as superintendent of our Sabbath school, and now puts on the whole armor and goes at it with a vim. NOVICE.

Jemison Jottings.

Mr. William Mills and family of the Kincheon neighborhood, are visiting friends and relatives at Jemison.

We notice the prediction for frost on the 22d inst. Now we would very much regret to witness the fulfillment of this prophecy; but, in the meantime, the very popular gentleman should remember that the command went forth a long time ago that all false prophets must be stoned to death, and how painful it would be for the good people of Chilton to see the penalty inflicted in this instance.

Rev. J. C. Armstrong, of Birmingham, filled his regular appointment on Sunday, and in his quiet, calm, and unassuming manner, preached a truly wonderful sermon. All who listened to him and yet have a decision to make in reference to their future religious life, will not surely soon forget this notable discourse.

If Jemison really has a "bug boom," the inhabitants thereof had better strike their tents, and make ready to move their camp. When the plagues of Egypt come in, we think it time to decamp and begone. O, bugs, where did you come from? OSO.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.
EDMOND H. LOWE, JR.

We are authorized to announce Dr. T. E. CALLIER as a candidate for Representative from Chilton county in the lower house of the Legislature, subject to the action of the Democratic nominating convention, should one be held.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them on until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Exhalations of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Flutterings at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, and digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

MARY'S LITTLE LAMB.

HOW HER OVERCOAT WAS TAKEN OFF AND WHAT WAS DONE WITH IT.

Shearing the Sheep in the Olden Time in the Green Mountain State.

[From the Century Magazine.]

Wool-growing became the leading industry of the Green Mountain State. Almost every Vermont farmer was a shepherd, and had his half hundred or hundreds or thousands of grade sheep or full bloods dotting the ferny pastures of the hill country or the broad levels of the Champlain valley, rank with English grasses. From old Fort Dummer to the Canada line one could hardly get beyond the sound of the sheep's bleat unless he took to the great woods, and even there he was likely enough to hear the intermittent jingle of a sheep bell chiming with the songs of the hermit and wood thrushes, or to meet a flock driven clattering over the pebbles of a mountain road; for a mid-wood settler had his little herd of sheep, to which he gave in summer the freedom of the woods, and which took—alas for the owner's crops—the freedom of the meadow and grain patches, and were sheltered from the chill of winter nights in a frame barn bigger than their master's log-house.

In June, when the May-yeaned lambs were skipping in the sunshine that had warmed the pools and streams till the bull-frogs had their voices in tune, the sheep were gathered from the pastures and driven over the dusty roads to the pens beside the pools on the tapped mill-flumes and washed amid a pother of of rushing waters, shouts of laughter of of men and boys, and discordant, plaintiff bleats of parted ewes and lambs.

A fortnight or so later came the great event of the shepherd's year, the shearing, for which great preparation was made within house and barn. The best the farm afforded must be provided for the furnishing of the table; for the shearers were not ordinary farm laborers, but mostly farmers and farmers' sons, and as well to do as their employer, who was likely enough to shear, in his turn, for them. Whoever possessed the skill of shearing a sheep thought it not beneath him to ply his well-paid handicraft in all the country round. For these the fatted calf was killed and the green peas and strawberries were picked. The barn floor and its overhanging scaffolds were carefully swept, the stables were littered with clean straw, the wool-bench was set up, and the reel full of twine was made ready in its place. Those were merry days in the old gray barns that were not too fine to have swallows' holes in their gables, moss on their shingles, and a fringe of hemp, mayweed, and smartweed about their jagged underpinning. There was jesting and the telling of merry tales from morning till night, and bursts of laughter that scared the swallows out of the cobwebbed roof-peak and the sitting hen from her nest in the left-over hay-mow. Neighbors called to get a taste of the fun and the cider, to see how the flock "evridged" and to engage hands for their own shearing. At nooning, after the grand dinner, while the older men napped on the floor, wool-bench or scaffold, with their heads pillowed on soft places, the young fellows had trials of strength at "pulling stick" or lifting "stiff legs." The skillful wool-tyer was rarer than the skillful shearer, and in much demand in his own and neighboring townships. He tied the fleeces quickly and compactly, showing the best on the outside, but with no clod of dirty locks in the middle; for in those days wool had its place and dirt its place, but the fleece was not their common place. The catcher was an humble but not unimportant member of the force. He must be alert and with a sheep ready for each shearer as wanted, and was never to take up a sheep by the wool, but with his left arm underneath, just behind the fore legs, and his right hand grasping a hind leg. And there was the boy to pick up locks, discarding the dirty ones, which were swept outdoors. One's back aches as he remembers this unpleasant duty of his boyhood, when he was scoffed by shearers and scolded by the wool tyer, and often had the added labor of carrying the wool to its storage. Fourteen fleeces tied up in a blanket was the load, which, if they had been of nowadays weight, would have burdened a strong man; but a five-pound fleece was a heavy one then. I have never been present at one of the modern public shearings, which comes before the swallows do, while winter is still skirmishing with spring, and are celebrated in the local papers; but I doubt if they are such hearty and enjoyable seasons as the old-fashioned shearings were.

The wool-buyers scoured the country at or after shearing time, and drove their bargains with the farmers. The small lots of wool were hauled in bulk to some central point of shipment, while the larger clips were sacked on the grower's premises. The sack was suspended through a hole of its own diameter in an upper floor and a few fleeces were thrown in, when the packer lowered himself into it and placed and trod the wool as it was passed to him till he had trod his way to the top. Then the sacks were lowered, sewed, weighed, marked, and went their way to market.

The "tag-locks" and pulled wool were mostly worked up in the neighboring small factories into stocking-yarn, flannel, and blankets for the farmer's use, and into the then somewhat famous "Vermont gray," which was the common cold-weather outer clothing of New England male farm folk. Readers of Thoreau will remember that he mentions it more than once, and thought it good enough wear for him. The Yankee farmer wore it "to mill an' to meetin'," and the young men of forty years ago were not ashamed to appear in such sheep's clothing at the paring-bee or the ball.

A VERY SAD STORY.

Showing What Rum will do to Degrade and Destroy Men.

John B. Gough tells the following: "A minister of the gospel told me one of the most thrilling incidents I have heard in my life. A member of his congregation came home for the first time in his life intoxicated, and his boy met him upon the doorstep, clapping his hands and exclaiming, 'Papa has come home!' He seized the boy by the shoulder, swung him around, staggered and fell in the hall. That minister said to me, 'I spent the night in that house. I went out, bared my brow that the night air might fall upon it and cool it. I walked up and down the hill. There was the child, dead! there was his wife in strong convulsions, and he asleep.' A man about thirty years of age asleep, with a dead child in the house, having a mark upon his temple where the corner of the marble steps had come in contact with the head as he swung him around, and a wife upon the bring of the grave! 'Mr. Gough,' said my friend, 'I cursed the drink. He had told me that I must remain until he awoke, and I did.' When he awoke he passed his hand over his face and exclaimed, 'What is the matter? wheream I? where is my boy?' 'You cannot see him.' 'Stand out of my way, I will see my boy.' To prevent confusion I took him to the child's bed, and as I turned down the the sheet and showed him the corpse he uttered a wild shriek, 'Ah, my child!' That minister said further to me, 'One year after that he was brought from the lunatic asylum to lie beside his wife in the grave, and I attended his funeral.' The minister of the gospel who told me that fact is to-day a drunken hostler in a stable in Boston. Now, tell me what rum will not do. It will debase, degrade, imbrute and damn everything that is noble, bright, glorious and God-like in a human being. There is nothing drink will not do that is vile, dastardly, cowardly, sneaking or hellish. Why are we not to fight till the day of our death?"

"THE ONLY MISGIVING I HAD when I left the cutter," says Lieut. Rhodes, the Gay Head hero, "was about my baby. You didn't know that I had one, did you? He is a bright little boy about two years old. His mother died some time ago, and as I left in the boat I called out to the captain to look out for him if anything happened to me."

TWO BOWERY PRIZE-FIGHTERS MADE a match for $200 and let "Funny" Cooke, an English buffer, hold the stakes. They neglected to hold Cooke. The consequence was that he sailed for England with the money, and the loser of the fight feels a fiendish satisfaction in the discomfiture of the man who whipped him.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

IT DISCUSSES THE GREAT QUESTION OF THE DAY IN AN EARNEST MANNER.

A Little Bit of Sarcasm Indulged In—What Would Make Each Man Happy.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

"Gem'len," said Brother Gardner as the triangle sounded, "ebery day o' my life I h'ar complaints about our pollytics, our religun, our skules, our society, our amusements an' our system of gov'ment. Suntin' mus' be wrong wid our hull system of existence. What am it? Dat am the queshun I propose to have discussed heah to-night in all its bearin's, an' I ax Sir Isaac Walpole to take de floah and lead off."

SIR ISAAC WALPOLE TOES THE MARK.

"I has reflected a heap on dis subjick," began the well-known orator as he slid off his splint-bottomed chair. "Eber since I war' ten y'ars ole I has felt dat sunthin' was wrong wid de way dis kentry was diskivered, settled up an' run. Jist what pertickler thing it was has puzzled me for ober sixty y'ars, but I has at las' got my mind made up. As a nashun we am too aspirin' an' ambishus. We want to git ahead too fast; we want to acquire wealth and power too quickly. I see an' feel it in myself an' all aroun' me. I orter be satisfied wid a six hundred dollar house an' lot, good rag carpet on de floors, cellar full of 'taters an' cabbage, an' fifty dollars hid in an oyster can whar' I kin find it in case of sickness, but I ain't. I want to go to de State Legislachur; I want a two-story house wid bay-windows; I want an electric doah-bell; I want a heap o' things dat I'm not likely to git. In my avarice an' ambishun I am liable to cheat Samuel Shin, swindle Waydown Bebee an' borry money from Judge Cadaver an never pay it back. I sigh, an' hanker, an' plan, an' scheme, an' de fust thing any of you knows I'll have chattel mortgages on your mules an' be climbin' ober your heads into offis."

JUDGE CADAVER'S THEORY.

"What's de matter wid dis kentry?" asked Judge Cadaver as he stood up and waved his arms around. "I contend dat de hull trubble rises from a gineral want ob confidence in each odder. You may begin at de head an' cum down to de foot. I help 'lect a President, an' yet I have no confidence in him. When I go to bed at night I can't feel ashured dat he won't sell de kentry out afore mawnin'. I wote for a Congressman, an' yet I can't trust him ten feet. If I wanted to borry ten dollars I wouldn't have confidence to believe dat de Guv'nor would lend it to me. On de one hand I know dat all de groceries am adulterated, an' on he odder hand all grocers exhibit a lack of confidence in me. If I want to borry an ax from Nelson Slabs he marks de handle fur fear I will steal it, an if Giveadam Jones wants to borry my coffee-mill I slyly remove de grindin' part to prevent him from stealin' de ideah to use in his comin' cider mill. Dis want of confidence am driftin' de kentry back inter barberism. Until de day arroves when I kin walk down to de Fust National Bank and borry two hundred dollars for thirty days widout gibin a note indorsed by a man worf twenty thousand dollars, you need not look fur dis kentry to prosper or progress."

IT IS LACK OF HARMONY.

"A house divided agin itself cannot stand," said Giveadam Jones, as his opinion was called for. "What ails dis kentry am de want of harmony. We am not eben agreed on de form of guv'ment. We am split up into three or four polytical parties, a dozen religuns, half a dozen forms of society, an' goodness knows into how many different bands on nashunal queshuns. We am pullin' at boat eands of a wagon stuck in de mud. It seems harmonious to me to drap into a butcher shop an' pick out a ham an' tell de butcher I will call an' settle nex' week, but de butcher hangs de ham back on its peg an' remarks dat he can't possibly agree on de queshun. I am in harmony wid one church; Prof. Slyback am not in harmony wid anudder. I had made up my mind dat de Dimocratic party am called upon to save dis kentry; Pickles Smith would see de kentry sunk befo' he would wote anything but de Republican ticket. I contend dat an aristocracy will sooner or later bring about de downfall of de United States; Whalebone Howker argues dat an aristocracy will presarve it, kase if it wasn't presarved dar' wouldn't be any second-hand men to buy deir wo'n-out carpets. I tell you, gem'len, to presarve dis kentry we must wote de Dimocratic ticket, accept one brand of religun, patronize de circus an' fine ebery pusson $10 who won't hurrah on holidays.

LIVING TOO FAST.

"We are runnin' away wid de kentry," said the solemn voice of Waydown Bebee, as his name was called. "We am libin' too fast. Twenty y'ars ago I was satisfied with a two-roomed cabin an' a dollar a day. Now I has to have a two-story house an' twelve shillins a day. Wives who used to go ba'rfut six days a week to save deir shoes for the seventh now wear $8 buties to mop in. De pusson who airns $10 per week mus' lib jist as good as de one who airns $20. Twenty y'ars ago de woman wid a dismond ring could boss a hull nayburhood. Now, when she tries to eben boss de sarvant gal de gal packs up her peck of diamonds an' quits de job widout waitin' to collect any leetle matter like $40 back salary. When I was a boy de man who bought a can of oysters was supposed to have bin left a legacy of fo'teen millyun dollars. Nowadays de poo' man's back-yard am kivered wid de empty cans.

"I kin see sign arter sign dat dis generashun am speedin' along without thought or car' of whar' it will bring up. Men who am hosin' 'taters to-day am babots to-morrer. Men who used to believe in savin' up fur a rainy day now scatter deir cash aroun' as if de sunshine nuts' allus last. Whar' I used to be satisfied wid bean soup I now want ox-tail, an' dat's what ails de hull kentry, ye has got to slow up an' simmer down or de top-rail am gwine to give way an' gives us all a drap."

BROTHER GARDNER FINISHES.

"Gem'len," said the President after various other members had proclaimed their opinions, "it am patent to all dat de kentry has an ailment, but we am not agreed as to de natur' of de disease nor de remedy to be used as a cure. In dis embarrassin' situashun I suggest dat we have patience an' continer to hope. While it seems sartin to a man holdin' down a cracker-box in a co'ner grocery dat de kentry won't hold together mo' dan two days longer enless he am 'lected constable or draws a prize in a lottery, we has managed somehow to dodge de dangers an' pull frew de narrer channels. It am my opinyun dat we kin go home an' go to bed widout fear dat we won't find at least half de kentry hangin' 'round heah to-morrer. We will now dismember."

An Iceberg Panorama.

The officers of the steamship Abyssinia, from Europe, report a fine display of icebergs. Early on the morning of March 2d, while it was yet dark, the drop in the temperature showed that icebergs were in the neighborhood. Extra men were placed on watch and the speed of the steamer reduced. Before daylight the ice came in sight, and during the entire day the passengers were treated to a magnificent ice panorama. The sun was bright and clear from an unclouded sky, and shone on the sides of the massive bergs with fine effect. The course of the ship lay to the south of the ice mountains, and the reflection of the sun's rays from the trickling walls of ice made a spectacle matchless in many respects. About the ship were many broken fragments of ice, small in comparison with the main bergs from which they had broken, but big enough in themselves to form floating islands, over which the steamship was carefully guided.

At one time on the forenoon on the 2d a careful count showed as many as seventy icebergs within sight. They were of every conceivable shape, and on some were great peaks rising far above the mastheads of the steamer. A great crowd of gulls and sea birds of various sorts were flying from crag to crag of the icy islands, and their cries and calls could be distinctly heard. Great swashes could be heard now and then, as some of the bergs, growing top heavy from the melting of the subaqueous portions, suddenly turned over and rearranged its centre of gravity. In doing this it would perhaps strike another berg, and fragments of ice hundreds of tons in weight were broken off and floated away among the mass of frozen debris surrounding the main cluster of bergs. These sounds were kept up during the night of the 2d, but on the 3d the vessel came out again into clear water.

What he Found Out.

We found out lots of interesting things during the storms of last week. One was that an occurrence, of low barometrical pressure and the consequent prevalence of rain and east winds produces a singular effect upon the relations of the traveling public to the horse cars. An observant and philosophical conductor pointed out the fact, illustrating it with his own somewhat wide experience. "If I didn't know in any other way that it was a wet, chilly, disagreeable day, I should know it by noticing the way the women act. On wet days ten of them come out and signal me to stop the car on the wrong side of the crossings where one would do it on a fair day, and on this trip I have had four chase the the car and get on it between Cornhill and Boylston street, and then find out that it wasn't the one way they wanted. And everybody hasn't nothing but big bills in a wet day; in the last hour I've had to make change for a quarter's worth of tickets out of six five-dollar bills, and how I'm going to change the the next one I don't know." At this juncture a young woman came to the car door. "Does this car go to Cornhill?" she asked. "No, it don't," said the conductor; "we're going away from it as fast as we can." "Why didn't you say so before?" demanded the young woman snappishly as she descended the platform. "Well, I'm blowed," said the conductor as he rang the bell; "how should I know she wanted to go to Cornhill when she didn't say anything about it? But I s'pose it's the weather," he charitably added as he went in to take up fares.—Boston Journal.

He Went Into Politics.

"Good gracious," said the grocery-man to the bad boy, "I am sorry for your pa, if he has got his head set on going into politics. I was in politics one year myself, and it has taken me five to get out and pay my debts, and now every ward politician owes me for groceries. You see, they come to me and wanted me to run for supervisor. They said I was just the man they wanted, a man with a large head, one who was a business man, and who would not kick at the expenditure of a few dollars when he could make a barrel of money. They said if I was on the board of supervisors I could be placed on a committee that handled the funds, and I could make the purchase of groceries and provisions for all the county institutions, the poor house, house of correction, insane asylum, hospitals, and everything, and I could buy them at my own store at my own price, and in two years I could be rien as any man in town. Well, I never had a proposition strike me so favorably, and I went in head over appetite. For a month I went around our ward night and day, spending money, and the politicians came to the store and traded when I was out, and had it charged, and when the caucus was held I only got one vote for supervisor, and I voted that myself. Well, the politicians tried to explain to me, but I bought a revolver, and they kept away. Do you know, the next day after the caucus I didn't have twenty dollars worth of groceries in the store, and the clerk was dying of consumption?"—Peck's Sun.

A LONDON SENSATION.

ANOTHER HIGH LIFE SCANDAL IN ENGLAND.

The Earl of Grafton Attempts to Put Away His Wife—A Former Husband Appears.

Mayfair, a London society magazine, publishes the following: "Another celebrated case will be that of the gallant Earl of Euston, who will be the next Duke of Grafton. The Earl seeks to get rid of his wife. His contention is that the lady's first husband was alive when she became Countess of Euston, is now alive and can be produced. His appearance in the witness box will be highly dramatic, for the lady has seen him and declares she knows nothing about him. The approaching trial will rival the Tichborne case and be the sensation of the season."
